Last Will and Testament of 1925
To 1926 I do bequeathe my Quality 52 contract. 1926 will positively be another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Year.
1926

STARTING THE NEW YEAR RIGHT

Happy New Year is correct.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is going to ring out some old records and ring in some new ones.

And we've got pictures to do that with.

Soon you'll hear the title of Lon Chaney's greatest picture—he unquestionably surpasses "The Unholy Three."

You'll agree that it's more than a phrase when we say:

1926 is another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer year.

Here's just an idea of what's coming at the beginning.

To help you start the New Year right:

With showman-productions like "Dance Madness." (For the crowds.)

And the tremendous new picturization of Rex Beach's "The Barrier." (What action.)

Lucky 1926.

You get Cosmopolitan's gigantic production of "Ibanez Torrent."

It's the crowning fiction achievement of the man who wrote "The Four Horsemen," "Blood and Sand" and others.

Prosperous 1926.

The Quality Fifty-Two hands you "The Auction Block," by Rex Beach (a wonder-story that brought him fame and fortune.)

And "Money Talks" by Rupert Hughes. And Norma Shearer in "The Light Eternal."

We said The Quality Fifty-Two had some treasures coming.

And though we're too busy making pictures to make New Year resolutions—

We'll make this one:

1926 IS ANOTHER METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER YEAR

Signing America's greatest actor, the acknowledged leader of the dramatic art, whose name is always box office magic, is some accomplishment-

-it has been done!

Finding for a great star a novel that is a recognized classic and at the same time has every element necessary for box office bigness, is another accomplishment –

–it has been done!

Creating a gigan-
-tic sea epic of unpre-
-cedented magnitude
by power of theme,
realism of produc-tion and perfection of acting, is a work that will live forever-

-it has been done!

Warner has done

IN "The Sea Beast" Barrymore is at his matchless best. He has the greatest box office story of his career. It is an Epic Romance—its love story is so sincere, real, overwhelming. It is an Epic Adventure story—a rousing tale of the whale-hunt, of the thrilling chase of the sixty-ton sea monster, dragging his puny pursuers through the waves, and matching their wits with his terrific brawn. It has all the color, the glamour, the fascination of the brave old days of New Bedford whaling.

Classics of the Screen

The supreme screen achievement of

John Barrymore

A JOHN BARRYMORE production is more than a picture—it is an event in the theatrical world. He who has, by the force of his genius, made his name a world-wide tradition and lived in the public mind as the most fascinating, brilliant and magnetic personality in the dramatic world, cannot and will not, fail to give a perfect performance.

But now, in "The Sea Beast," he has gone beyond his goal. Not only his most powerful screen role, not only bigness of production, but real greatness, power and force make "The Sea Beast" what it is—a monument to the magic personality that is Barrymore's.

We not only WISH you the Most Prosperous New Year in your history—We GUARANTEE it!

You can play these BIG ONES now!

"MANNEQUIN"
JAMES CRUZE'S smashing production of FANNIE HURST'S $50,000 prize Liberty story

"A KISS FOR CINDERELLA"

"GRAND DUCHESS AND THE WAITER"
Adolphe Menjou Florence Vidor
Already a sensation

"THE SONG AND DANCE MAN"
Big Brenon production of George M. Cohan's greatest comedy

"THE WANDERER"
The spectacular road show now at popular prices

"THE VANISHING AMERICAN"
Also a $2.00 Scale production

William J. Reilly

Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

Scratching the Mud Horses

WHAT is art? When Gabriel blows his trumpet, the birds who hear it LAST will be those who are debating among themselves as to what art is and what it is not. "All art is autobiography." "Art is soul." "Art is life." "Art takes up where life leaves off." "Art is realism."

AND SO ON.

We will never set ourselves up as an authority on art. Our personal belief is that it can never be catalogued or pigeonholed or PILL-IFIED. It is just about as CONFINABLE as a February sea on the Atlantic.

Nor do we believe that Will Hays wants his opinion to be the Last Word on Art. He gave expression, however, to a WORKING MOTTO during a luncheon last week at which he presented the Riesenfeld Gold Medal to Earl W. Hammons on behalf of Starevitch the Pole who made the Gold Medal winner, "The Voice of the Nightingale," distributed by Educational.

Speaking of "The Voice of the Nightingale," Mr. Hays said, "It is a bit of sunshine." That's what art should be—SUNSHINE.

We'll play that one across the board: "ART IS SUNSHINE."

Frame it and hang it in the STUDIO, write it in the SKY; paste it in your HAT; do anything you like with it. It is a real PRODUCTION creed.

In the old days some producers had the idea that the best MUD HORSE won. If the track wasn't muddy enough their professional RAIN MAKERS made it muddier.

But the report today is: "Weather clear. Track fast."

The mud horses are being SCRATCHED from the production field.

Play "Art is sunshine" across the board. It's a GOOD tip.

And we don't mean Pollyanna.

Let 'Er Go!—"A to Z"

H. A. DAVITTS, of the Dixie Theatre, Winona, Mississippi, may not have 5,000 seats in his house, but he has plenty of those gray cells in his brain that enable a man to appreciate what the 1926 trade paper means to the 1926 exhibitor.

Proof?

After talking of the CONSTRUCTIVE value of Moving Picture World's QUICK REFERENCE PICTURE CHART, Mr. Davitts says:

"I read the Moving Picture World from A to Z.

"I could not get along without it!"

"Studio Stuff!"—

IT'S mighty seldom that the STUDIO—that place of marvels of creation and of constructional executive cleverness—gets much attention.

It's even less often that the equipment which backs up creative genius and enables executive skill to bring out the fine productions seen on the screen today, gets the attention it deserves.

It's a CONSTRUCTIVE step that has been taken in YOUR EQUIPMENT department this week with the publication of a splendid, right-to-you chat by Louis B. Mayer.

Mr. Mayer talks freely about the studio equipment that aids in the making of CONSTRUCTIVE PRODUCTION for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. What's even a bigger thing, Mr. Mayer freely admits the value of the equipment that he as frankly declares must be, and in his case is, the best.

Exploitation?

ZINAIDA JURJEWSKAJA, Russian star of BERLIN OPERA, recently disappeared. The Berlin police grew more puzzled over the mystery every day. Maybe Zinaida's disappearance was Universal's OPERATIC opening gun on the Berlin exploitation of "The Phantom of the Opera."

Here's another one. Twenty-four MILES in from the COAST of the North Sea the skeleton of a prehistoric WHALE has been discovered six feet down in a Danish bog. Copenhagen geologists believe a great TIDAL WAVE swept the whale inshore several thousand years ago as the skeleton seems to be of a species long extinct. Then again it may be a whale of a stunt by Warner Bros. as a prelude to "THE SEA BEAST."

VOLUME 78 NUMBER 1

OF the Screen, BY the Screen, And FOR the Screen

HROLF WISBY

By William J. Reilly

HERE'S where Hrolf Wisby does his stuff. We have been talking about his new plan of production technique for two weeks. This week we decided to let Mr. Wisby do the talking himself. So we asked him a few direct questions, calling for direct answers.

When you say to this man, "Speak for yourself, Hrolf," you get an earful.

We cannot agree with everything Mr. Wisby says about current values and methods in production, particularly in what he says about the value of stars.

However, in the questions and answers that follow, we made no effort to cross-examine him.

The pulpit is his. He is preaching the sermon. If, after reading what he has to say, you cannot join in an "Amen" chorus, just step up to the rostrum and declare yourself.

Here are our questions and Mr. Wisby's answers:—

Question No. 1—"Is the Wisby plan designed to please the highbrows only or is it suitable for general production?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"I do not aim at class nor mass consciousness as an excuse for entertainment. I am not interested in highbrows nor in lowbrows. They belong in business. There are no such distinctions in the arts and the sciences out of which my production technique has been evolved to kindle and nourish the best and the finest instincts of the people of the United States taken as a whole."

Question No. 2—"It has been intimated that your plan might be more effective for costume spectacles than for pictures of everyday life—is that so?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"No, it is not so. It makes not the faintest difference what the subject or the vehicle may be—anything from spectacle drama on the grand scale to homespun melodrama and comedy. The Wisby Cinema-Regie is a methodized procedure—not a mechanized process or system—for creating ORIGINAL values on the screen. It is a highly organized medium of operation raising the acting as well as the atmosphere from the level of mere craft to the status of a true art of-for-and-by the screen. It is an esthetic enterprise, not a mechanical operation."

Question No. 3—"How long would the advance preparations require and how long actual production for a picture on the Wisby plan?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"On a grand-scale costume production the preparatory period would be longer than actual production time, but as I employ only four experts on my staff outside of myself the cost is conservative. It is absolutely necessary that the preparations are definitely and concretely charted scene for scene before the crank starts. The cost of it is saved many times over in the brisk rate of production following. "There is very little camera rehearsing. The director rehearses his cast, going through the script from start to finish, during the last two weeks of my work in completing the advance preparations."

Question No. 4—"Do you join the director in coaching his cast or does he work independent of you and your functions as regisseur?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"The ideal way is for the regisseur and the director to co-operate on main lines of action. Each man is supreme in his field. There is no interference, no butting in. Every one of the five cinematicians composing the staff must take the view that they are members on the same team and that they must work together as a unit. You might call it co-operation of directorship. Five highly trained director cinematicians pool their talent and experience under the same team pennant, and they receive credit on the screen as a unit. Once the proper authorities have been secured the staff becomes permanent for only in this way can we achieve our goal to create a new standard of technique for each picture."

Question No. 5—"How about actual costs outside of time charges as such?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"Sets, props and wardrobe would, in most instances, be much less than present studio costs. True, practically everything I use must be specially designed and made to fit into the general scheme of technique, but then I use the cheapest materials I can find and very little of them. The salary roll would shrink considerably. "I do not need stars. I can do much better with talented amateurs who are seriously ambitious to excel. The staff is paid full salaries on production time only, and living salaries during the advance and finishing periods. I take the same medicine myself. Once we get together a permanent staff its members will be given special inducements in the way of a bonus plan similar to the 'tantieme' arrangement of the royal theatres on the Continent."

Question No. 6—"Why are you against stars?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"Stars are all right as drawing cards for routine production, which is not in itself of sufficient interest without them to hold the crowds. Stars are not all right when it comes to putting new acting values on the screen. American stars, especially, because they are fundamentally 'personality exploiteers' rather than interpreters of characters. The star as such is much more occupied with himself than with the production as such. He is adept at 'actoring' all over the place but he gives us precious little acting. You will find that the great, creative regisseurs of the Continent—men like Reinhardt, Appia and Stanislavsky—started out with unknowns and not with stars. The particular kind of acting I have evolved to harmonize with the new technical values of my Regie is a new element in itself consisting of two phases of cinematic pantomime, the objective or external effect of instant visualization and the subjective or inner meaning which is revealed subconsciously. You can teach an intelligent and competent amateur things like that but a star cannot be taught because he knows it all and believes he knows it."

Question No. 7—"Suppose your first picture on the Wisby plan goes across in great style artistically and financially, would this fact in itself revolutionize production?"

Answer by Mr. Wisby—"Yes and no. I feel certain in advance of the artistic success and if this is also followed by a real commercial success there may be some kind of upheaval taking the form of imitation. None of the producers possess staffs for creating work of the new calibre, but they are adept at imitating anything they can get their eyeballs on and they will most certainly imitate a successful offering of the new school I represent."

"I am not worrying about it, however, as nothing we shall attempt will have to conform to a preconceived 'standard of production,' and as each and every picture must stand on its own feet as a valid expression of a specific technical standard exclusively adapted to it and instantly destroyed when the picture is finished, we shall always be far in advance of those who may desire a sleigh ride. Yes, the chances are that a certain proportion of current production may become obsolete if the Wisby plan breaks into the big money."

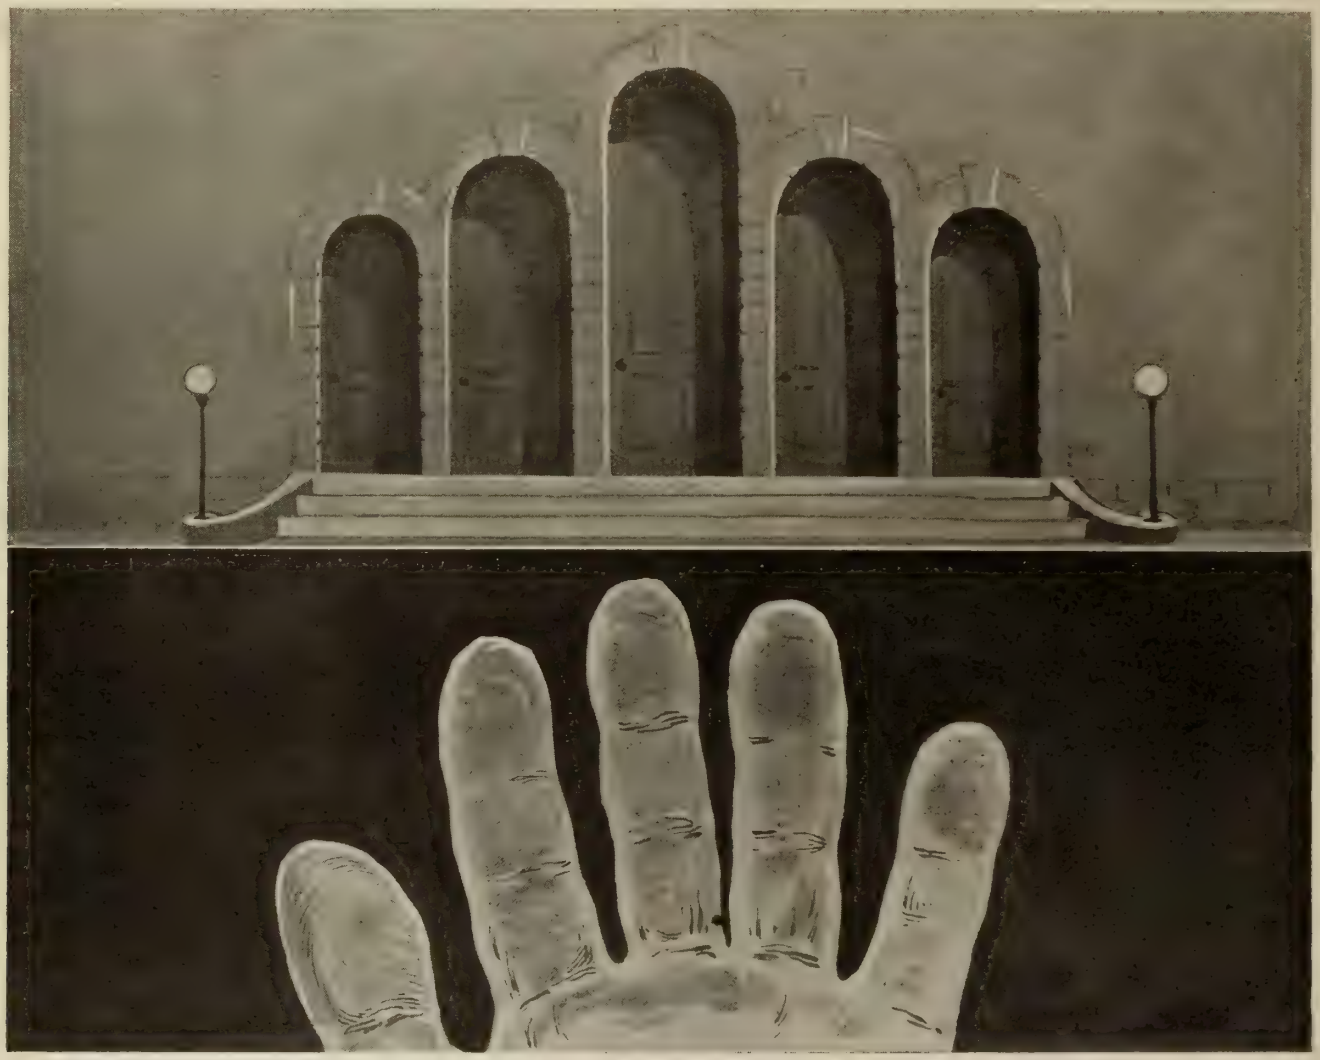
THE SCRIPT CALLS FOR THE "CAUGHT IN THE TOILS OF JUSTICE" SEQUENCE. HOW WOULD YOU TREAT IT?



How to eliminate common and tiresome routine in production? The two panels above show how Hrolf Wisby gets something ORIGINAL out of the old criminal court procedure. The top panel shows the entrance to the police court. The criminal, or supposed criminal, is admitted through the central door. The five doors than fade out and you see in their place the five fingers of the hand, as suggested in the lowr panel. On the tips of the fingers then appear the marks of the police thumb-print, light, black or crimson as the situation demands, showing the degree of innocence or guilt, actual or implied. In place of the timeworn criminal court procedure Mr. Wisby has devised a treatment economical as to production and generous in dramatic value. This is characteristic of his entire production plan.

GEORGE E. BRADLEY RESIGNS

George E. Bradley, motion picture editor of the New York Morning Telegraph, has resigned. He will join the scenario department of First National Pictures Corporation.

Missouri Exhibitor Buys Newspaper; Why Not You?

HENRY HALLWAY, who owns picture houses in St. John's Station and Florissant, Mo., purchased the Gem Overland-St. John's Record, issued weekly at St. John's Station, to see that his houses got proper publicity in the news column.

In the issue of December 3 a seven-column banner announced: "This edition is dedicated to Mary Carr, Priscilla Bonner and Kenneth Harlan, the stars in 'Drusilla With a Million,' and to Mr. Tom McKean, the St. Louis manager for F. B. O., who made it possible for us to get this Super-Special direct from the New St. Louis Theatre."

Moral: If the editor doesn't give you an even break get a newspaper of your own.

Auburn, N. Y., Theatre Is Sold for $100,000

Fitzer-Auburn, Inc., a corporation composed of Ben, Max and Mrs. Rae Fitzer of Syracuse and Charles D. Blessing and Nicholas Drake of Auburn, N. Y., have purchased the Strand Theatre Building in Water street, Auburn, for $100,000. The building was sold by Norman Loeb of New York City through Auburn realtors. The late Edwin Burtis built the Strand some twenty years ago and Raymond Hitchcock, the comedian, opened it. The house was known at that time and for many years afterward as the Auditorium.

G. E. DePauw, who has been managing the Grand and Universal Theatres in Auburn for the past year, has been appointed manager for the new Schine Capital Theatre in Newark, N. Y. The Capital has been built at a cost of $200,000.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

It's Still the Christmas Classic

LAST week in this column it was suggested that Dicken's "A Christmas Carol" would make the ideal Christmas picture,—a classic that could be shown each year in every village, every town and every city from Minnesota to Florida and from New York to California.

Since then the New York WORLD, one of the largest metropolitan dailies in the world has printed the following in its short story section of December 20, 1925:

"Charles Dickens wrote 'A Christmas Carol' so long ago as 1843 but it shows no sign of age. It evoked an immediate sensation of good cheer and good will, which has not waned, but rather has grown to be universal, during the 82 years that have elapsed since its first publication. The inimitable little masterpiece, translated into all languages and conditions of people is acted as play or pantomime in theatres throughout the world, and illustrated by artists of various nationalities. Yet the characters of Scrooge, Bob Cratchit and the rest, not forgetting wistful, pathetic Tiny Tim, remain changeless, perennial, perfect.

"Dickens himself launched 'A Christmas Carol' with the following modest wish (that has been overwhelmingly fulfilled):

"'I have endeavored in this Ghostly little book to raise the Ghost of an idea, which shall not put my readers out of humor with themselves, with each other, with the season, or with me. May it haunt their houses pleasantly, and no one wish to lay it.'

"Everybody in Christendom ought to read the 'Carol' each Yuletide season. Perhaps everybody does. If not, they are steadily coming to it . . . ."

And so I hope by the time the next Christmas comes around that we may all be able to see the "wistful, pathetic Tiny Tim" in a picture which will remain "changeless, perennial, perfect."

"Lions 'N' Tigers 'N' Everything"

WHEN I picked up Courtney Ryley Cooper's book (publishers, Little, and Co.) "Lions 'N' Tigers 'N' Everything," I thought it was a child's story, but I was happily disappointed.

This man Cooper certainly knows what he's talking about, namely, the circus and animals, and with Charlie Chaplin's circus picture in the offing, I want to quote a few pages from Mr. Cooper's book, a few pages —which if picturized in any circus screen production—would draw an uncountable audience from all over the country:

"Bon was the baby (hippopotamus), a bulbous thing of some five hundred pounds when he arrived from the old home place on the River Nile. The result was that Bon began to grieve to such an extent that he worked himself into a state of hysterio, if such a thing can be imagined in a member of the hog family. . . . Then one day the crisis arrived; Bon began to beat his head against the bars, a favorite method which grieving hippopotami seem to have for committing sucide. That night Bon was happy. He had a human companion, known by no other name than Mike—and the world was good again.

"The baby hippo ceased to whine. Gradually it was noticed that the "hippopotamus nurse" was taking more and more interest in his charge, pilfering bread for him or cutting fresh grass. . . . The hippo seemed cured.

"'Guess you can go back to your bunk now,' said the menagerie superintendent.

"But Mike continued to sleep in the hippopotamus den without pay.

"One night, the emergencies suddenly clamped hard. There had come a shrieking cry from the shrouded wagons atop the flat cars:

"Fire! F-i-r-e!

"Hurrying men spotted the cage where a red glow had shown for an instant, then faded—the hippopotamus den. Workmen and performers rushed forward.

"Then den was dripping with water, evidently carried from the circus water-cart just ahead. But Mike, the "hippo nurse," was not to be found.

"Then came a shout. They had discovered him by the right of way, his neck broken; in the fight for his grotesque comrade's life he evidently had slipped on the top of the den and fallen from the train.

"Mike gave his life to save that of a hippopotamus.

"The circus bought a lot for Mike in one of the best cemeteries of the Western town near which his death occurred. The usual "round robin" went about the circus lot for flowers. There was only one time in which the show people could pay their last respects to the faithful Mike, and that came between parade and show time. That morning the few people in the big cemetery saw a strange cavalcade turn through the gates of the burial place, winding among the silent tombstones and masoleums. The band men atop the carved wagons playing music strange to the circus; the lions shifting in their cages; the equestriennes, with their white, be-ribboned horses, riding beside the hearse; the snares and bases of the Zouave drum corps muffled and beating in slow time to the funeral music from the big-top and kid-show bands; the clowns slumped on the big tableaux—the whole circus, Mike's beloved circus, with its colors, its beautiful mottled parade horses, its cages, its clowns and couriers and Wild West Riders, with Bon whining in his big tank in dumb wonderment as to what had become of his companion—Mike's circus had come to say good-by. And some way, to those who watched, there was nothing strange about it, nothing incongruous. They were of his life—a grim, rushing, tumultous life behind its covering gaudiness, and neither the paint, nor the spangles, nor glittering colors seemed to matter."

If this scene is picturized, it will draw the entire country. It will add the most dramatic of all contrasts to any circus comedy.

PURCHASED FOR THE SCREEN

Carl Laemmle has bought his first German story, "The Opera Glass," by Gabrielle Reuter, the well known German authoress. The story has been adapted by Don Cobb of the Universal scenario department and will be called "Three Women and a Man." Reginald Denny will be starred.

Universal has also purchased Frank H. Spearman's collection of ten short stories called "The Nerve of Foley," a group of railroad fiction, including the well known "Whispering Smith." Five of the Foley stories have been grouped and adapted by Cobb into a big railroad melodrama for Universal. The story will be directed by Eddie Laemmle under the title "The Still Alarm."

Clear Lobbies, Exits, Remove Draperies, Orders Mayor

PICTURE theatre lobbies must be kept clear at all times, emergency exits must be open and in working order, all draperies in theatres must come down. Mayor Dever gave that three-ply ultimatum to a group of Chicago theatre owners over their protests and pleas for a compromise. The fire ordinances must be obeyed to the letter, the mayor said. He told the theatre owners that Fire Commissioner Connery had complained of conditions in the larger movie houses.

The theatre owners suggested adoption of a rule allowing half of the lobby space to be used for persons waiting for seats. The mayor turned down the proposal. People standing in the lobby block the exits, he said. In case of a disaster the thousands inside the theatre wouldn't be able to get out he argued.

Owners of theatres elaborately decorated with velvet draperies and other expensive ornaments were told that the law permits nothing on theatre walls but paint and plaster.

After the conference it was said that a committee probably will be appointed to work out a set of rules with Fire Commissioner Connery.

NEW WASHINGTON THEATRE

Construction is about to start on the new $150,000 theatre and commercial building in Mount Vernon, Wash. The property covers a triangular site 200x212x100 feet at First and Kincaid streets. The theatre will occupy a portion of the building 50x100 feet. It will be constructed on a main floor plan and will seat 700. It will be of concrete and brick construction with terra cotta trim. William Aitkin of Seattle was the architect. Alexander & MacNeil are the contractors. A $17,000 pipe organ will be included in the equipment.

Menace of Censorship Looms In Washington Legislature

A LAST minute bill introduced by Senator Christensen in the Washington State Legislature provided for the appointment of a Film Supervision Commission by the governor. This commission would be given power to inspect all films made or sold in the state, basing their fee for this inspection on the length of the film, the rate to be set by them. They would have power to enforce a penalty of $500 fine or 60 days in jail or both, for violation of this section of the bill. Members would be appointed to serve from one to five years respectively, one to be a member of the faculty of the University of Washington, a faculty member from Washington State College, two women and one member appointed at large. No one having any interest or connection with the film industry would be permitted to become a member of this commission.

This commission would refuse the right to show any film condoning or glorifying crime, any display of the commission of murder in its actuality, any scenes of violence, obscenity or anything they deemed would incite minors to crime or moral delinquency. Any film depicting hatred of any country with which the United States is at peace, or anything that would provoke religious or race hatred, anything that would tend to induce disrespect of parents, parenthood or the home.

The Northwest Film Board of Trade got in touch with the Hays organization immediately and that body has taken steps to act. Exhibitors and exchanges alike are united to combat this drastic measure.

First National Pictures Get Many Bookings for January

FROM all sections of the country bookings are pouring in for January, First National Month, according to reports just received from the Distribution Department of First National. Two weeks before the first of the year, the bookings in first-run theatres of small cities as well as the key centers far exceeded the mark set by the Sales Department for that date. Many exhibitors have rearranged their programs in order to run a solid month of First National product.

An important feature of the month which has aroused keen interest among the managers of theatres is the exploitation contest open throughout January and carrying awards totolling $2,000 for the best exploitation, advertising and publicity in connection with First National Month. Soon after the announcement of the terms of the contest was published, letters began to arrive from exhibitors announcing that they would enter the competition which will be decided by the editors of the trade papers, acting in the capacity of judges.

Among the theatres that have booked First National pictures solid during January are the following: Strand, New York, Strand, Brooklyn; State, Minneapolis; Capital, St. Paul; Garrick, Duluth; Rialto and Strand, Omaha; Princess and Rialto, Sioux City; Liberty, Portland; Orpheum, Ogden; Liberty and Strand, Seattle; Liberty, Spokane; Imperial, St. John; Rialto, Tulsa; Grand Opera House, Pittsburgh; Strand, Erie; Chicago, Chicago; Madison, Peoria; Gaiety, Springfield, Ill.; Burns, Colorado Springs; Rialto, Des Moines; Strand, Grand Rapids; Criterion and State, Los Angeles; Strand, Milwaukee; Orpheum, Oshkosh; Strand and Walnut, Cincinnati; Southern and Keith's, Columbus.

Leland, Albany; Rialto, Poughkeepsie; Avon, Utica; Opera House, Newburgh; Avon, Watertown; Strand, Binghamton; Olympia, Boston; Majestic, Providence; Olympia, Worcester; Broadway, Springfield; Olympia, New Bedford; Merrimac Square, Lowell; Central Square, Cambridge, Mass.; Olympia, Lynn; Broadway, Lawrence; Toole Square, Somerville; Star, Manchester; Olympia, Brockton; Olympia, New Haven; Proctor's, Yonkers; Capitol, Reading; Savoy, Wilmington; Opera House, Easton; Colonial, Harrisburg; Washington, Chester; Metropolitan, Washington; Rivoli, Baltimore; State, Dayton; Pantheon, Toledo; Strand, Akron; Dome, Youngstown; Circle, Indianapolis; Main Street, Kansas City; Miller, Wichita; Rialto, Louisville; Majestic, Memphis; Crescent, Nashville; Rialto and Tivoli, Chattanooga; Riviera, Knoxville; Empire, Mobile; Stanley, Philadelphia; Poli, Bridgeport; Strand, Hartford and Crown, New London.

Another Censorship Bill Is Filed in Washington

The House of Representatives in Washington, D. C., is considering a second bill providing for federal control of the motion picture industry. Its author is Representative Upsham, Democrat, of Georgia. The author of the previous censorship bill is Representative Swope of Pennsylvania.

The Upsham bill stipulates a membership of six censors, with the federal commissioner of education as chairman, to be appointed under civil service rules. Two members would be women.

WALRATH INVITED

John Walrath, who will retire as mayor of Syracuse, N. Y., on January 1, may become a member of the New York State Motion Picture Commission. It is said that Mayor Walrath has been tendered the position by Governor Alfred E. Smith, but as yet is undecided whether or not he will accept.

Active in Conn.

A BIG theatre building program, backed by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, is reported under way in Connecticut. New London and Hartford are the scenes of the corporation's activities at this time.

It was definitely announced in New London that as the State Street Corporation the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is interested in the erection of a theatre to cost $1,500,000. Officials refused to admit they were behind the contemplated program in Hartford, where a theatre and a fifteen-story building will be erected on the site of the Allyn House, which is to be demolished.

The New London theatre will be beautiful in construction and will seat 1,550, with provision for the addition of a balcony if necessary. Plans have not been completed for the Hartford theatre, but it was announced that it will seat 3,000. Another theatre is also being erected in Hartford at a cost of $1,500,000. It will be controlled by New Jersey interests.

Montreal Men Invade Theatre Field in Rochester, N. Y.

BURPEE & WEST OF MONTREAL, a corporation operating a chain of theatres in Canada, announces that plans have been completed for the construction of four community theatres in the City of Rochester, N. Y., to cost in the neighborhood of $1,000,000. A 1,700-seat house to cost $225,000 will be built in Dewey avenue, north of Driving Park. Another will be in Monroe avenue, with a seating capacity of 1,400 and a cost of $200,000.

Work will begin at once on these two houses, and in the spring construction will start on the other two, according to Maurice West, who was in Buffalo this week booking some big attractions for the new Thurston Theatre which this firm recently opened in Rochester.

It is understood that the company may also enter Syracuse.

BOLD THEATRE ROBBERS

Thieves are bold when it comes to stealing theatre safes and robbing box offices. Last week Sergeant Roy Hesser and his squad from the detective headquarters captured the driver of an auto truck who was hauling the safe taken from the Knickerbocker Theatre of Lubiner & Trinz on the North Side with the Sunday receipts of the house. Two of his helpers got away, but the safe and $2,200 receipts were turned back to the owners. It took several shots from the policemen to bring the safe robbers to bay.

New Jersey "Open Sunday" Bill Due; Governor Praises Theatre Owners

New "Insurance"

THE Midwest Film Distributors, Inc. a Kansas City corporation, has established in the Kansas City territory among the small town houses what is to to be known as "dark house" insurance.

Many times during an extremely cold period when blizzards raged, small town theatres have been stranded without a picture for the night and patrons turned away. For $7.50 the Midwest concern will allow the exhibitor to retain a feature picture in his possession for a month, to be used in case of emergency.

Although in its infancy here, the plan is proving a popular one.

Panic Follows Fire in Montana Theatre; Many Hurt

AT Deer Lodge, Montana, the Rialto Theatre was the scene of a bad fire in the operating booth, built of cement and situated on the main floor. Panic followed. The people stampeded to the various exits but the great jam occurred in the main exit. Those injured in the crush were taken to the hospital. Only a few were singed as the flames shot out of the booth. The projectionist, Sigfried Miller, suffered minor injuries.

Mr. Miller was placing film in the tin box as he finished screening it. A spark from the electric wire quickly ignited the film, and though the lid was put on the box, gas generated so rapidly that the explosion broke open the box and the flames shot out of the booth. The fire was confined to the booth, as Miller closed the door as soon as he could get out. But smoke and confusion were the cause of most of the injuries sustained by the spectators, none of whom were seriously hurt. Every effort was made to quiet the crowd but it was in vain.

Damage to the booth was estimated at $1,500 by Jens Hansen, manager of the theatre. He had not then been able to determine the extent of the damage to the projecting machine.

F. G. BRADFORD DIES

F. G. Bradford, vice-president of the Lee-Bradford Corporation, died last week in Los Angeles after a long period of ill health. He had not been active in the affairs of the company for some time. He was about 50 years old.

Skeeter Exhibitors Plan Document Similar to That of New York—Urge Against Any Affiliation with M. P. P. D. A.

AN important meeting of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey closed after an eight-hour session in Trenton on December 16, with the Board of Directors instructing its legislative committee to introduce in the New Jersey Legislature a local option "Open Sunday" bill similar to the one which proved so successful in New York State.

A most important clause in this bill, which the organization believes will be of especial significance to opponents of Sunday movies, is a restriction which will provide that no theatres would function on the Sabbath in competition with the regular hours devoted to church services.

This resolution was adopted in Executive session immediately after the directors had listened to Governor Stokes' broad commendation of the motion picture industry.

"You men are entitled to recognition," the governor said. "You are an advocate for good. You are an educational and moral force. You have nothing to apologize for. You must let officialdom and the public know what public service you are rendering."

This statement by the governor, together with an open endorsement for local option on Sunday movies in New Jersey by the Hon. Walter H. Olden, a Princeton theatre owner, who was recently elected to the New Jersey Legislature and who was introduced by Joseph M. Seider, president of the New Jersey organization, as "the first governor of futurity emanating from exhibitor ranks," imbued the directors with additional confidence that their fight of years against the Blue Laws is rapidly nearing victory. Mr. Olden is also an elder in a Presbyterian church.

That the New Jersey governor is one of filmdom's greatest advocates and admirers, was reflected in his closing remarks when he said, "Motion Pictures are one of the good things of life, and I like good things." He made this statement after praising the program of public service being executed by the theatre owners in his own state and by members of the national organization with whose activities in public service he said he was well familiar.

In his report, President Seider declared that the time is rapidly nearing when theatre owners, not only in New Jersey but in the entire country, will be emancipated from political dominance of such things as Blue Laws. He spoke of the necessity for harmony in the entire industry, but stressed the point that before all things the exhibitor must recognize that his salvation reposes not only in his state organization but in the national organization.

Mr. Seider informed the twenty-eight directors and associate directors in attendance that he had submitted to members of the New Jersey Legislature copies of the current New Jersey organization's bulletin. In this bulletin Mr. Seider quotes the Law in New York State regarding the exhibition of Sunday pictures. He states:

"Any law that is not respected is a bad law. If I were opposed to Sunday movies I would first advocate the repeal of the antiquated and obsolete 'Blue Law'—that the motion picture industry shall be freed from the 'Vice and Immorality Act.'

"With legal Sunday movies a fact, I would work for the closing of the movies in my town through a local referendum or option.

"A law thus passed will be respected by the movie-goers and particularly by the movie owner.

"The real opponents of legalized Sunday pictures are the New York competitors of the New Jersey showmen. With New Jersey theatres closed the New York theatres reap a harvest.

"New Jersey merchants also suffer through this situation. Trade follows the movies. When a New Jersey resident travels to New York for wholesome entertainment on Sunday he is subconsciously led to New York on other days of the week. He also does all his shopping in New York. This is an established fact. Ask New Jersey merchants.

"The public in large communities demand the much needed, harmless and healthful entertainment that the motion picture affords, on Sunday after church hours.

"New York State also had a law against Sunday pictures on its statute books. Its Legislature was foresighted enough to repeal it."

The business of the New Jersey organization has reached such a state, it became known, that monthly meetings of the Board of Directors may not suffice. In the near future the directorate may be divided into several administrative committees, which may meet several times a week, so that all details of the organization may be given thorough consideration.

An outstanding event at the Trenton meet-

Many Theatres Change Hands In the St. Louis Territory

THE Ozark Theatre, Webster Groves, Mo., has been purchased by the St. Louis Amusement Company. The consideration has not been revealed. For some time the Ozark has been served films by the Koplar-Skouras circuit. It is anticipated that other local and suburban houses will be added to the St. Louis Amusement Company string in the next few months. The company's program for expansion contemplates a chain of some fifty or sixty houses. Several new houses will be constructed in neighborhoods where desirable houses cannot be purchased.

It is reported that Charley Goldman and J. Laventhal will take over the Majestic Theatre, 1022 Franklin avenue, owned by Sam Komm. The Majestic seats 1,100 persons. Goldman and Laventhal own the Astor and Rainbow on Broadway and are building a new house alongside the Astor.

Jim Drake has sold the Easton-Taylor and White Way Theatres to John Pappas. The Easton-Taylor is a 596-seat house and the White Way has 392 seats. The latter has a 689-seat airdome.

Information along Picture Row is that Billy Mueller of Jefferson City, Mo., has received a flattering offer for his two houses in Jefferson City and one in Sedalia, Mo., and from M. B. Shamber of Kansas City, Mo.

The Gem Theatre, Centralia, Ill., owned by H. M. Ferguson, has been added to the Reed-Yenn-Hayes Circuit. This company now has eighteen houses in Centralia, Zeigler, Christopher, Benton, Duquoin, Marion, Mount Vernon and West Frankfort, being the largest chain in Southern Illinois.

Frank Leitz has sold the Gem, Mascoutah, Ill., to Noah Bloomer, Belleville, Ill.

Contracts for the construction of the new Strand Theatre, East Monroe street, Jonesboro, Ark., have been awarded by the Jonesboro Amusement Company. The new house will cost $100,000.

Plans for a $25,000 theatre for East St. Louis, Ill., have been drawn by B. A. Mueller, architect, Arcade Building, East St. Louis. It will be one story, 60 by 80 feet. Its location has not been announced. H. Stephens is the owner.

The Theatre Realty Company with $2,000 capital has been organized by A. M. Frumberg, St. Louis attorney. As announced, Frumberg recently purchased the corner of Grand and Washington boulevards for an unnamed client. Gossip has it that he represents the Fox interests and that a $5,000,000 picture palace, office and apartment building will mount skyward at that point within the next several months.

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Acquire Strand Theatre, Muncie, Ind.

FITZPATRICK & McELROY have completed negotiations with Leonard Sowar whereby the Strand Theatre becomes a Fitzpatrick & McElroy enterprise in conjunction with the Columbia, Star and Lyric Theatres, Muncie, Ind. Mr. Sowar will be resident general manager of the interests of Fitzpatrick & McElroy in Munice and assumed charge of all matters of business on December 21.

The addition of the Strand Theatre to the Columbia, Star and Lyric Theatres reecntly acquired by Fitzpatrick & McElroy in Munice, and also the association of Mr. Sowar with this firm, means that every effort will be extended to give the patrons of Munice the very best in entertainment of motion pictures, attractions and all high-class legitimate amusements.

The enterprises with which Fitzpatrick & McElroy are connected are operating close to fifty theatres in Illinois, Indiana, Michigan and Wisconsin, and during the present month have opened a new fireproof theatre at Alpena, Mich. They have recently acquired all theatres at Michigan City, Indiana, have a new theatre under construction at Richmond and have several projects in course of completion through the major cities of Indiana.

Mr. Sowar's efforts and attention will be at the exclusive service of the patrons of the Munice theatres, and as personally completed during conference in Chicago, arrangements have been made for the best that there is in the market during this and the coming months for the entertainments of Muncie.

Mr. Sowar and his associates will have other important announcements to make in the near future relative to the theatrical situation of Munice.

Mr. Hayman of the law firm of White & Hayman conducted the legal negotiations for all parties concerned in this transcation.

ROSCOE COCHRAN DIES

Roscoe Cochran, Carmi, Ill., head of Roscoe Cochran Amusement Enterprises, owners of the Strand and Grand Opera House, Robinson, Ill., died on December 14. He had been ill about a year. He started in the business about twelve years ago, operating the Maine Theatre, Carmi, Ill. Later he took over the Opera House and Strand at Robinson. J. C. Hewitt, manager of the houses, will continue in that capacity.

NO TAX REPEAL

The House of Representatives at Washington, D. C., by vote has declined to repeal the tax on amusements. It is hoped that the motion picture industry will make some headway in a campaign taken directly to the Senate.

N. J. Meeting

ing was the report of J. B. Fox that he had collected over $1,000 for state and national dues in Camden County during the past month. Mr. Fox reported that never before had he found the local organization so highly regarded.

Resolutions in addition to the one sanctioning the drawing up of a Local Option Bill included one that the organization will never make a membership affiliation with the M. P. P. & D. A. In this respect, however, the point was emphasized that New Jersey will continue to function and co-operate for the common welfare of both producer and theatre owner.

The association also went on record as opposed to the bill to be introduced by Congressman Randolph Perkins authorizing collection of a tax by music publishers in excess of what the association believes to be a fair profit, especially since it would mean the payment of royalties to foreign societies.

Appreciation of his untiring efforts were embodied in a laudatory resolution to President Seider on behalf of the entire organization.

New Jersey theatre owners were warned not to answer any questionnaires of any description which might come to them through the mails until after they have been thoroughly investigated by the organization.

Another resolution put the organization on record as opposing voting of any nature through the mails.

A resolution of sympathy and condolence was extended to Sydney Samuelson, chairman of the board, over his bereavement in the recent death of his father.

A vote of thanks was tendered J. B. Fox and Charles Hildinger, who was the host at this meeting.

Evidence that Famous Players-Lasky, contrary to the denial it made at the last session of the New Jersey organization, is booking "The Ten Commandments" on a non-theatrical basis, was presented to the directors at Trenton in the form of a newspaper advertisement which publicised "The Ten Commandments" as playing in an independent hall in a New Jersey town on December 1 and 2.

The next meeting will take place at Morristown when the directors will be the guests of National President R. F. Woodhull and I. A. Roth.

Those in attendance at the Trenton meeting included: W. C. Hunt, Wildwood; Benjamin J. Hayney, Riverside; John Mannix, Bordentown; E. Thornton Kelly, Palisade; I. A. Roth, Morristown; Joseph and Samuel Varbalow, Benjamin Schindler, Camden; Louis Gold and John Keale, Newark; A. W. Hill, Paulsboro; J. B. Hail! The Wampas Stars of 1926

Thirteen Girls Are Selected Out of One Hundred

HERE they are, the thirteen girls who the Wampas select each year as the most promising young leading women on the screen and who this year the publicity men are labelling "Wampas Stars of 1926."

No longer are they called "baby stars." This time, the astute publicists are going on record as predicting the girls' elevation to stardom within the calendar year, based on their study of the girls' merits, achievements and future promise.

Over 100 girls were considered by the entire Wampas membership before the vote. The results were announced at the meeting of the publicity men and the girls will be presented in all their glory at the 1926 Wampas Frolic and Ball which will be held at the Shrine Civic Auditorium on February 4.

The lucky girls include:

Mary Astor, now with First National, played opposite Douglas Fairbanks in "Don Q" and John Barrymore in "Don Juan."

Mary Brian, from Texas, first came to the screen as "Wendy" in "Peter Pan," and is now in "Behind the Front" at the Lasky Studio, where she is under contract.

Joyce Compton of Kentucky is a newcomer to the films. She, too, has a First National contract; her first part was in "What Fools Men."

Dolores Costello, the only New Yorker on the list, is a daughter of Maurice Costello, early screen idol. She started in musical comedy and is now a Warner contract player, having worked most recently opposite John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast."

Joan Crawford also hails from Texas. Her stage name was Lucile Le Sueur. Her first screen role was in Jackie Coogan's "Old Clothes," followed by the part of "Irene" in "Sally, Irene and Mary." She is under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and has been loaned to Harry Langdon.

Marceline Day recently came into prominence after a couple of years in bits and small parts. Her two latest featured roles were in "The Splendid Road," produced by Frank Lloyd, and "The Barrier," an all-star production.

Dolores Del Rio is the young Mexican beauty whom Edwin Carewe induced to enter the films and who is scheduled for a featured role in one of his early productions for First National.

Janet Gaynor has been in the films just a short time. Already she has to her credit leads in a number of Universal pictures, and recently she was signed by Fox on a long-term contract. Her first featured part is in Irving Cummings' "The Johnstown Flood."

Sally Long is another recruit from musical comedy. Her most recently important screen role was in the Producing Distributing production, "Fifth Avenue."

Edna Marian is internationally known as a star of Century Comedies, although she has recently played important roles in several dramatic pictures at Universal and Fox.

Sally O'Neill was "discovered" by Marshall Neilan and stepped right into a prominent role in "Mike." She is now under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and will be seen soon as "Mary" in "Sally, Irene and Mary."

Vera Reynolds is another Wampas star of 1926 with a comedy background. Her dramatic opportunity was in "Icebound," where she was "discovered" by Cecil B. De Mille and played with him in several of his pictures while he was still with Lasky. Since the organization of his own company, he has signed Miss Reynolds for a long-term contract and is featuring her in a number of pictures, of which the first is "The Road to Yesterday."

Fay Wray was born in Canada, but had her first professional experience in the Hollywood Pilgrimage Play. Subsequently, she appeared in a number of comedies and is now under long-term contract to Universal, for whom she is now playing opposite Jack Hoxie under the direction of Al Rogell.

Another Donation

BRINGING his philanthropic contributions to more than $600,000, A. R. McNichol of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has donated $25,000 to the Victorian Order of Nurses, according to announcement made on December 19. Mr. McNichol is still the richest moving picture owner in all Canada, being the owner of the Lyceum, Starland and College theatres in Winnipeg.

COURTLAND SMITH MENTIONED

Rumors along the Rialto have it that final details for a Famous Players news reel will be completed when Sidney R. Kent returns from Europe and that Courtland Smith will resign as assistant to Will H. Hayes to conduct it. No confirmation could be obtained.

Twelve Immortals of Industry To Attend Naked Truth Dinner

ENTHUSIASM is running high among the entire membership of the A.M.P.A. on the coming seventh annual Naked Truth Dinner which has now become as famous in New York's motion picture industry as the celebrated Gridiron dinner in the newspaper fraternity.

The twelve Immortals chosen by the members of the A.M.P.A.—those twelve most representative men who stand as the ideals in the progress, growth and expansion of the industry—will be present. They are Adolph Zukor, Jesse Lasky, Will Hays, Marcus Loew, William Fox, ("Roxy") Rothafel, D. W. Griffith, Joseph M. Schenck, Carl Laemmle, Sidney Kent, Dick Rowland, and Sam Katz. Besides these representative leaders of the industry, there will be a galaxy of motion picture stars such as have never been gathered together under one roof at any time in the entire history of the business. One hundred stars and one hundred tables.

At the special meeting of the A.M.P.A. last week it was unanimously voted to have no speakers and no speech-making, thus this year's affair will far eclipse any of the former ones in many ways. Instead of one orchestra there will be two of the most famous orchestras of New York City, with music and dancing constantly and continuously during the entire evening and far into the dawn. The affair this year has been described as the first of the "Eye and Hoof" gala nights of these big annual dinners.

Plans and preparations are under way to make this party the outstanding event in the picture industry since its inception. Nat Rothstein of F.B.O. has been chosen by the A.M.P.A. as the chief and official announcer for the evening.

An idea of the magnitude of this year's party may be judged by the responses from the most prominent stars who have signified their intentions to be present, not alone from among those who are now in New York and those who will be here at the time the dinner is given, but stars from Hollywood as well.

Eighteen of the best known stars in the business have sent in requests for tables and have hinted at chartering a special compartment coach direct from Los Angeles to New York. Last season 122 requests for admission had to be denied due to lack of accommodations.

A timely suggestion is offered that all those who wish to be present at this party Communicate immediately with Charles Einfeld, 365 Madison avenue, New York.

NEW THEATRE SHEIK

A vicious form of male annoyer in a theatre has been discovered. When a woman patron of the Standard Theatre in West Lynn, Mass., ignored the attempts of a man seated next to her to attract her attention, she felt a sharp pain in one side of her body. This was followed by a burning sensation. Feeling faint, she asked her sister to leave the theatre with her. As they entered her home she fell to the floor. It was found that the woman had a puncture in her side, similar to that which a needle would make. Physicians have been unable to determine what form of liquid the fiend used.

Theatre Deals Cause Panic, John Flinn Tells A. M. P. A.

"THE motion picture industry is in a panic right now over the theatre situation," John C. Flinn, president of Metropolitan Productions and vice-president of the Producers Distributing Corporation, told members of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at their regular weekly luncheon held Thursday, December 17, at the Hofbrau-Haus, New York.

"A chaotic condition," he said, "has been caused within the industry because of the acquisition of control of hundreds of theatres throughout the country by leading producing and distributing companies in the business. Independent producers are worrying because they feel their product may find no theatre outlet.

"But," added Flinn, who is a past president of the A. M. P. A., "there is really no need for a panic and no reason for such general worry. The centralization of theatre control is a natural part of the evolution of the business, and will, to my way of thinking, in the end prove a boon to it."

He declared that the time is undoubtedly coming when practically all motion pictures would be booked through one central agency just as practically all of the big-time vaudeville acts are now booked through the United Booking Agency.

"At the present time," he pointed out, "there are hundreds of branch offices maintained throughout the United States by the various film companies to effect the distribution of their pictures at an estimated cost of $30,000,000 a year, the greater portion of which could be saved through centralized booking. Such a system would not only eliminate waste in overhead but would also force the production of better pictures.

"So far as the independent producer is concerned, he will never find difficulty in securing a ready market for good pictures, even over theatre circuits controlled by big producer-distributor organizations who have their own product."

Mr. Flinn declared that a year ago, as an independent producer, he met with no difficulty in arranging for the exhibition of pictures in theatres controlled by opposition companies.

Other speakers at the A. M. P. A. meeting were Theodore Mitchell, who, after a long stay in the publishing business, has returned to his old love, the movies; Mr. Long of the New York Evening World staff, who spoke in behalf of the Evening World's coal fund campaign, and Morris Ryskind. President Glenn Allvine presided.

Sales Manager Smith Names More Associated Managers

FURTHER changes in the personnel of the sales force of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., are announced this week by General Sales Manager E. J. Smith. In making the announcements of the changes, Mr. Smith states that Associated Exhibitors is rapidly approaching, in the field, a closely-knit organization of go-getters that will be second to none in the industry.

A. E. Atkinson has been appointed manager of the Indianapolis branch. The appointment was made by Lew C. Thompson, central sales supervisor. Mr. Atkinson was connected with Metro-Goldwyn for upwards of three years in the Pittsburgh territory.

Dan B. Lederman, western sales director, has appointed Fred Horn as manager of the Des Moines branch. For seven years Mr. Horn has been in the employ of Metro-Goldwyn.

The Cincinnati branch has been placed in charge of Otto Horowitz. Mr. Horowitz has been connected wtih the Philadelphia branch of F. B. O. for three years and he will be very much missed by his exhibitor friends in that territory.

Fred Voight has been made branch manager at San Francisco. Mr. Voight was formerly in charge of the Metro-Goldwyn exchange in that territory. During his many years association with Metro-Goldwyn he built up a fine representation for the product and won the good will of the entire exhibitor body of that territory.

J. H. Mayer is a newly-appointed salesman at the Cincinnati office. Mr. Mayer's experience embraces virtually every phase of the business. At one time he was director of advertising and publicity for Universal.

New Paramount Theatre Announced for Denver

PARAMOUNT has announced plans for a new theatre which will be located at Sixteenth and Glenarm streets, in the heart of the business district of Denver. There has been rumors for many months that Paramount would start construction on a new theatre in Denver, but not until a few days ago had definite plans been announced.

Theannouncement is significant in that it marks a new location for the first run theatres in Denver, all other first-run houses being located on Curtis street.

CHRISTMAS IN BERMUDA

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Tiffany Productions, left for a trip to Bermuda on Wednesday, December 23, to be gone for ten days. Accompanying Mr. Hoffman are his family and William D. Shapiro of the Franklin Film Company of Boston, the Tiffany franchise holder for New England, Max Schulman and Judge D. Lourie, all of whom are accompanied by their families.

Incorporations

With only four companies incorporating, the past week brought a slump in the number of companies entering the motion picture business in New York State. The four companies incorporated were: M. C. Distributing Company, Inc., capitalized at $25,000, with Louise Gilsinger, Louise C. Jentes, New York; Esther Freedman, Brooklyn; the capitalization of the following not being specified: Excellent Pictures Corporation, M. J. and A. S. Krellberg, New York; D. M. Palley, Brooklyn; Madaler Patent Rights Holding Corporation, Hampton Bays, Ferd Von Madaler, Hampton Bays; W. C. Grable, Mattituck; P. E. Taylor, Rockville Centre; the J. M. and L. W. Theatre Corporation, Albany, H. W Burmaster, M. M. Pedlow, Albany; M. E. Leonard, Brookview.

One Killed, 26 Injured In Quebec Theatre Panic

A serious accident occurred in the picture theatre in the remote town of Montmagny, Quebec, December 16, when the film which was being presented caught fire. A panic ensued with the result that one person was killed and 25 others were seriously injured. There were about 400 people in the cinema at the time. The Montmagny Theatre, like many other theatres in the Provincial towns of Quebec, is an upstairs hall and many people fell as they rushed for the stairway leading to the street.

TWO MORE IN LOS ANGELES

Two big Los Angeles theatres to be opened within the next ten days are those of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., the Uptown Theatre, which is to be opened on December 29, and the Manchester to be opened on January 5, 1926. The outstanding features of the Uptown Theatre, aside from the usual quality of West Coast buildings, is that the theatre has been placed far enough from the street to allow its being widened—this measure is in accordance with Los Angeles progress. The Manchester is designed as a family theatre and will permit people living away from the downtown section to enjoy the best in entertainment within the walls of one of the finest houses.

In and Out of Town

George Hackathorne has returned from a trip abroad.

William M. Vogel also is back from abroad.

Frank Fischer, owner of theatres in Wisconsin, is staying at the Alamac.

Clara Bow has returned to the West Coast, having completed work here in Paramount's "Dancing Mothers."

Irvin Willat and his wife, Billie Dove, are visiting relatives in Florida. They will see Palm Beach, Havana, Yucatan, Vera Cruz and Mexico City before returning to the West.

T. W. Lovejoy, manager of the Eastman Kodak Company, and Mrs. Lovejoy are back from abroad.

J. Charles Davis, 2nd, president of Davis Distributing Division and vice-president of Vital Exchanges, Inc., has left for California where he has established permanent headquarters.

Hal Roach is back on the West Coast after a short visit in New York.

"Laugh Month" Special

Edited by Charles Edward Hastings

Gotham's Main Street in "Laugh Month" Rally; Western Houses for "All-Comedy" Programs

BROADWAY rallies to the National Laugh Month banner with the receipt this week of assurances of active co-operation from Herman S. Heller, Managing Director of Warner's Theatre.

While the theatrical capital of America was taking its place in the ranks of the "Laugh Month" sponsors, the National Capital was likewise declaring itself in on the nationwide movement through word from its foremost exhibitor, H. M. Crandall, to the effect that the Crandall houses were lining up especially strong comedy programs in celebration of January as Laugh Month.

In his letter assuring cooperation with the Laugh Month plans, Herman S. Heller, Managing Director of Warner's Theatre characterizes the comedy as always "essential in a Broadway program." Mr. Crandall endorses the campaign in the following enthusiastic terms:

"May I take this means of saying that we are heartily in favor of the 'Laugh Month' plan, as outlined in the trade papers for January. We have arranged our bookings so as to have a goodly share of our entertainment for the month of January consist of comedies. We have always in the past made it a policy to advertise our comedies along with the rest of the program, and will continue to do so in the future. I am always happy to cooperate in anything that is for the general good of the industry, and I think this present plan of a 'Laugh Month' a very happy one."

Whitehurst Circuit "In"

The Whitehurst Combined Theatrical Interests of Baltimore, a powerful circuit, has joined up under the auspices of the circuit's General Manager, William M. Whitehurst, who, in a letter to Jack Pegler, of Pathe's field exploitation staff, writes as follows:

"Allow me this opportunity to express my full accord and support of the plan for 'Laugh Month,' as outlined in the national motion picture trade papers of recent date.

"As general manager of the Baltimore string of Whitehurst Theatres I want to voice an appreciation of the worthwhile efforts of the short subject producers during the past year in giving to the exhibitors, regardless of production cost, condensed comedies that have unquestionably enhanced the value of our exhibition programs.

"The advocacy of 'Laugh Month' would seem the natural deduction expected and the display of showmanship in making it a national issue is appreciated, I am sure, by the wideawake exhibitor.

"The short subject comedy has come into its own and the exhibitor who fails to recognize the fact is turning real money away from the box-office.

"Kindly accept my regards and cooperation."

"Ike" Libson "Sold"

J. M. Johnston, of the Cincinnati office of Educational Films reports that "a great many exhibitors throughout the territory have expressed a willingness to cooperate with the movement. I have personally called upon Mr. Libson, who has theatres in our three key cities in this territory. He has given me the assurance that he will make a special effort and use additional publicity for short subjects during this period."

An especially encouraging evidence of the way exhibitors are taking hold in the way of active preparations for the opening of the national campaign two weeks hence. Among those putting in heavy orders for Laugh Month banners, posters, and pennants during the past week were Roy Tillson, of the Fuller Theatre, and General Manager Beatty, of the Butterfield Circuit.

New England Theatres

Among the New England theatres that have signified their intention during the past week of cooperating in an active way with the Laugh Month Campaign are the following:

Massachusetts—Merrimac Square, Lowell; Empire, New Bedford; Olympia, Chelsea; Universal, Fitchburg; Palace, Pittsfield; Central Square, Cambridge; Harvard, North Cambridge; Allston, Allston; Strand, Dorchester; Codman Square, Dorchester; Fields Corner, Dorchester; Union Square, Somerville; Family, Worcester; Olympia, Lynn; North Shore, Gloucester; Strand and Plaza, Worcester; Fox, Springfield; Plaza, Salem; Modern, Lawrence; Allen's Charlotte Co., Inc., New Bedford; Allen's, New Bedford; American, New Bedford; Capitol, New Bedford; Casino, New Bedford; Colonial, New Bedford; Comique, New Bedford; Orpheum, New Bedford; Princess, New Bedford; State, New Bedford; Colonial, Brockton; Metropolitan, Boston; Modern and Beacon, Boston; Lancaster, Boston.

Rhode Island—Strand, Pawtucket; Laurier, Woonsocket; Strand & Majestic, Providence.

Maine—Opera House, Bangor; Music Hall and Stand, Lewiston; Colonial, Augusta; Opera House and Central, Biddeford; Opera House, Waterville; Columbia, Bath; Colonial, Belfast; Opera House, Gardiner; Temple, Houlton; Opera House, Rockland; Majestic, Rumford; Star, Westbrook; Park, Ft. Fairfield; Dreamland, Livermore Falls; Rex, Norway; Strand, South Berwick.

Vermont — Majestic, Burlington; Strand and Grand, Rutland; Park, Barre; Playhouse, Montpelier.

New Hampshire — Albert and Opera House, Berlin; Star, Concord; Lyric, Dover; Colonial, Portsmouth.

Exploitation Contest

Exhibitors in al parts of the country have signified their intention of entering the prize contest for the best exploitation tying up with Laugh Month in which the National Laugh Month Committee is to award $850.00 in cash prizes. A number of exhibitors have filled in the entry blanks which have been printed in the trade papers and have sent them to the National Laugh Month Committee in advance of the beginning of Laugh Month in order to "get their bids in early." As prizes are to be awarded for the best campaign conducted each week during the month, however it will be necessary for each

"All-Comedy Bills"

THE "all-comedy bill" seems to have become all the rage in the Kansas City territory.

This is a development following the successful experiment of Walter Fenny at his Best Theatre, Parsons, Kans., recently

About twenty-five theatres have contracted for all-comedy bills in the near future, it is said.

Every Kid Knows "Our Gang" Kids!

"Say It with Comedies" Is Timely Slogan

By STANLEY B. WAITE
Sales Manager of Two-Reel Comedy Department of Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

THE month of January, 1926, is to be LAUGH MONTH in the theatres of America.

A great number of slogans have been suggested to the theatre owners with which to exhort their customers to attend their performances more regularly and more often. Practically every industry and every movement for the promotion of business in all lines have had a day, a week or a season. In our own business we have had a Greater Movie Season and even the conservative members of our business have been greatly surprised with the benefits which have accrued to them from this movement. All campaigns for increased business that have been successful have enjoyed concerted and wholehearted co-operation from every member of the business to benefited.

The showmen and exhibitors of this country can make LAUGH MONTH just as effective in improving their business as they are willing to. It will depend entirely and absolutely on the manner in which the theatres of the country exploit the idea and follow up in the selection of their programs the purpose of the campaign.

STANLEY B. WAITE

No member of the reading public of our country can say that he has not been solicited effectively by the Association of Wholesale and Retail Florists in the Campaign which they have been conducting for several years to increase their business. This association adopted the Slogan "Say it with Flowers!", and in one form or another, they have reached every member of the reading public. In national advertising in all its forms and in direct solicitation have the florists of the country carried this message to their market. One phase of their campaign was to inaugurate one day of the year as the public as a whole to glorify the mothers of the country with floral offerings sent on this particular day. This movement alone has meant many millions of dollars to the florists of the country. They have persistently followed up this phase of their campaign and are now enjoying the benefits from their work.

It is unnecessary to point out to the real showmen of America that the basis of moving picture entertainment should be comedy subjects. Within the last couple of years the theatre-going public of America have definitely established the fact that they prefer "Mother's Day" and they have appealed to this type of picture to all others. More comedies have appeared on the programs of all the leading producers of motion pictures and the season 1925-6 has rightfully been termed "Comedy" year.

It cannot be denied that the motion picture fans of the country want every program they attend to contain some comedy subjects. By an examination of the amusement pages of the newspapers in all the larger cities, it is apparent that the regular theatre fans have established their preference as well for comedy plays. For one dramatic play in the theatres of New York and Chicago, there are ten comedies and comedy dramas. This is an undeniable indication of the type of entertainment desired by the theatre-goers of America.

Surely no exhibitor who is in touch with his patronage has failed to notice their preference for comedy subjects and there can be no happier or more appropriate time to start a concentrated campaign to reach new customers and make new fans of irregular patrons than during the first month of the new year. The moving picture theatres who get behind this move and avail themselves of the opportunities for increasing their business can definitely establish the practicability of this campaign.

It is a movement to make more moving picture patrons.

If the possibilities of LAUGH MONTH are fully appreciated and availed of, the theatres of this country will enjoy more business during the year 1926 than ever before. It will be a happier year for the moving picture industry, for the exhibitors of the country and for the theatre-going public.

exhibitor to make a separate entry with each week's campaign which he desires to have considerd for the cash prizes.

All exhibitors or exhibitor employees responsible for exploitation work are eligible to enter the contest and they can make as many as four entries during the month—one for each week.

Music for "Laugh Month"

The importance of proper music in putting over the comedy is emphasized in the offer of the Music Publishers Protective Association made through the National Laugh Month Committee of the fullest cooperation with exhibitors in arranging their musical programs for Laugh Month.

Exhibitors are invited to communicate with E. C. Mills, Chairman of the Board of the Association, at 56 West 45th Street, New York City, who will be glad to give any assistance in the arrangement of Laugh Month musical programs and especially to write to each exhibitor individually, offering suggestions as to proper musical treatment for comedies under each exhibitor's peculiar conditions. Mr. Mills, besides being an expert in every angle of motion picture theatre music, is a former exhibitor, and is as well equipped as any person in the country to give practical advice to exhibitors on their music problems.

The Music Publishers Protective Association is preparing under Mr. Mills' direction some concrete suggestions on the best music to use with comedies and other Short Features which will be ready for distribution to exhibitors soon.

Music publishers and other agencies are being notified of the Laugh Month campaign, offering another big tie-up for exhibitors in the form of window displays in music stories. The most popular plan for the music display seems to be one plugging the jazz type of song and boosting the comedy picture shown in the neighborhood theatre during Laugh Month.

Whole-hearted cooperation in boosting National Laugh Month is reported on the part of newspaper editors, columnists and cartoonists in various parts of the country. Column after column has been devoted to this unique idea, and, as January 1st, the beginning of National Laugh Month, approaches, an increased number of newspapers are falling into line behind the rib-tickling drive.

Several of the metropolitan dailies in New York City have been especially enthusiastic over Laugh Month. Arthur Brisbane, the noted Hearst newspaper editorial writer, has given it significant space. The New York World is an ardent supporter of the Laugh Month idea. Heywood Broun and "F. P. A." both have devoted an entire column to the idea, in the World, while similar Laugh Month copy has appeared in the New York Evening World. Frank Sullivan, feature writer of the Evening World devoted a column of his space to the drive, Palmer Smith gave it the better part of his section early World cartoonist drew sketches.

"Laugh Month" Deserves Full Co-operation

By ELMER R. PEARSON
Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

LAUGH MONTH was a great inspiration coming at a most opportune time. January comes around every year bringing unpaid bills, cold weather, Congress and the coal problem, but this year along comes LAUGH MONTH to the great relief of a sorely tried public.

When the full length of LAUGH MONTH has swept across the country co-operated with by people in the public eye, magazines and newspapers, it will so fasten itself upon the nation that it will spontaneously repeat itself year after year bringing cheer and courage to multitudes yet unborn.

Every retail merchant heretofore has found it necessary to force sales at tremendous price reductions in order to do any business that month at all because during that month the public is depressed as during no other time of the year.

The influence of LAUGH MONTH can overcome this harmful condition of the public mind and LAUGH MONTH deserves the thorough cooperation of every business institution of the land.

Each exhibitor can bring a great boon to the business men of his locality by assuming the leadership of the LAUGH MONTH campaign among his fellow merchants and induce each of them to carry the LAUGH MONTH SLOGAN in their advertising, in their window displays, and they will do right well to have a seat in his theatre at every performance.

ELMER PEARSON

Since September this industry has seen the release of a great may of the wonder works of the great producers of spectacles, drama, sex and weepy mello's in reelage from eight to twelve. The public has responded as never before, but any good showman knows that there is such a thing as becoming surfeited with heavy entertainment of this character, and particularly in January must the public be offered something of a very much lighter nature. Thus again LAUGH MONTH is, indeed, a panacea for what usually ails all business in January.

All great ideas have modest beginnings.

J. Sterling Morton of Nebraska started Arbor Day.

The Pilgrims started Thanksgiving Day.

The Short-Subject distributors have started LAUGH MONTH.

The industry ought to get behind LAUGH MONTH as it never got behind any similar movement before. It is going to live forever to the great benefit of all peoples and all business every January. How much benefit the industry derives this year will depend entirely upon the extent and quick reception of its individuals to take advantage of a great opportunity.

LAUGH MONTH is a grand idea in that everybody profits by unselfishness. Even the feature distributors have comedies. They are bound to profit. The exhibitors, merchants, distributors, producers and the public will be tremendously benefited by the celebration spirit LAUGH MONTH inculcates.

Let "Laugh Month" Open Short Feature Year

By J. E. STOREY
Assistant General Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"LAUGH MONTH", as the coming January has been designated, seems destined, even thus far in advance, to prove a decidedly valuable ally for Short Subject distributors and all who have at heart the best interests of this form of picture entertainment.

For years the producers of Short Subjects have made very largely thankless efforts to win for their product something like fair and just recognition from exhibitors.

They have devoted millions and millions in money and time to the perfection of an art that has been all but ignored by the market. They have steadily and consistently improved their product until it actually vies with the finest features. They have developed stars whose names have tremendous box-office value. They have given this product to the picture-loving world only to have it used merely to round out programs that glorify feature-length subjects, and they have known all the time that however poor the feature might be and however meritorious their short subjects, the feature would get the billing.

This was not only discouraging. It was manifestly unfair and unjust. It meant that nothing less than feature length pictures could expect recognition in advertising, exploitation and publicity. The feature alone was so honored for no reason other than that its length put it in the feature class.

J. E. STOREY

This is all in the past, however. A different state of affairs exists today. The past year has seen a marked change in the attitude of exhibitors and public. Through constant and patient hammering home their arguments, the Pathe Sales and Exploitation Departments have succeeded in bringing about a more equitable state of affairs. Today it is no unusual thing to see the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett comedies billed in electric lights and featured in advertising. No more convincing proof could be offered in support of the contention that the short subject is coming into its own.

All honor to the short subject producer, particularly the comedy producer! He has forced recognition of his product by the simple process of making it so meritorious, such a power at the box-office, that the exhibitor can no longer afford to ignore it. It is the opening wedge in the distributors' fight against an injurious practice and it has had telling effect.

But the campaign must now be waged more strenuously than ever. The year 1926 must see still further advances in prosecuting the case for the short subject before the Public. The "Laugh Month" idea offers us a splendid introduction for the work that faces us in the New Year. It merits our hearty support and cooperation. Let "Laugh Month" open the greatest year the Short Subject has ever known.

The First Pictures Were "Shorts"

Urges More Advertising for Short Features

By HARRY SCOTT
General Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

SO much has been written and said concerning the box-office value of short subjects and their ever growing importance in the field of motion picture entertainment that certainly by this time the message should have registered with telling force. Every conceivable medium has been used to get this idea before the exhibitor and to convince him of its value to him, and yet we have not perfected our work to the point where we may sit back and consider it completed.

It is true that the past year has seen a marked advance along the line. Concentrated sales and advertising effort have served to bring home to exhibitors generally the fact that they have been overlooking vast money making possibilities by their practice of literally ignoring short subjects in the past. The year 1925 may well be looked upon as the year of a great awakening in the motion picture industry—an awakening to a realization of the vital place short subjects occupy in the world of motion picture entertainment.

It now becomes the duty of motion picture distributors dealing in short subjects to make 1926 the year for definitely establishing as a fixed policy in all picture theatres the practice of according one, two and three-reel pictures advertising, publicity and exploitation consideration in proportion to their box-office merit rather than to their length. There is no reasonable or logical argument to be advanced against this, save the fact that custom has in the past decreed otherwise. Surely by this time it has been proved beyond all shadow of doubt that the quality, the money-making possibilities, the audience pleasing possibilities of a picture bear no relation whatever to the number of reels it contains.

In this connection, distributors of short subjects should most enthusiastically support the "Laugh Month" movement that has been proposed for January, 1926. Short subjects, of course, are not all comedies, but an overwhelming majority of comedies are short subjects, therefore the idea is particularly appropriate at this time. The coming year is to see the reaching of conclusions in this fight for just recognition of short subjects, and to start it off by dedicating the first portion of it to the extended use of laugh-making pictures is indeed to make a flying start.

The House of Pathe, long recognized as leader in the short subject field, has a vital contribution to make to the cause of Laugh Month. The entire two-reel comedy output of Hal Roach and Mack Sennett, the industry's foremost comedy producers; the Roach one-reel comedies, the Harold Lloyd productions, the Chaplin subject "A Dog's Life," Aesop's Film Fables, and Topics of the Day are regular releases and admirable ammunition for Laugh Month.

From all appearances, 1926 is to have an auspicious start. Laugh Month should inaugurate a year that will see the cause of short subjects far advanced toward the goal we are seeking—100 per cent recognition at the hands of exhibitors.

Court Jester to All—Pathe's Big Little Three

By WILLIAM A. V. MACK
Short Subject Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"IN the days of old when Knights were bold" the court Jester with his laugh producing antics was as vital a part of the King's household as the drawbridge over the moat and the key to the postern gate. The head of many an unfriendly foe escaped the anger of an enraged monarch through the unexpected capers of the lowly comedian.

"Laugh and grow fat" was the spirit of the day and judging from the pictures we have seen of the Kings of old, great must have been the laughter.

Harold Lloyd, who today outrivals any star of stage or screen, built his future on acceptance of the fact that "A little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men." Eminently successful motion picture producers like Hal Roach and Mack Sennett have staked their fortunes on the assumption that people the world over enjoy hearty laughter in large doses.

The designation of January as Laugh Month was a happy thought. Starting the New Year with a laugh and a smile augurs well for a year of sunshine and happiness in our business. The exhibitor who laughs up his sleeve at the suggestion can justify his action only because of the fact that his funny bone happens to be located in that portion of his waistcoat.

W. A. V. MACK

Those who join in the movement to create a national mirthquake will most surely have the laugh on those who don't.

During the month of January and every month next year audiences who attend the Keith Vaudeville Theatres anywhere in the United States will be guaranteed at every performance fifteen minutes of laughter by the gloom chasing twins AESOP'S FILM FABLES and THE TOPICS OF THE DAY. Both of these subjects are being shown regularly every week in the finest motion picture palaces throughout the land.

The wide distribution enjoyed by these two subjects in every civilized country of the world is ample testimony of the public's desire for merriment. The single reel comedy released through Pathe every other week by Hal Roach fills an important spot on the programs of our leading theatres and will contribute largely to the success of Laugh Month.

We venture to predict that public appreciation of the diversified quality program which includes a generous sprinkle of laughter will register at the box-offices throughout the land a new national attendance record for the month of January—LAUGH MONTH.

How "Laugh Month" Is Being Put Over Nationally

By Nat G. Rothstein
Director of Publicity, Advertising and Exploitation for F. B. O.

LAUGH MONTH will crash its way clear across the continent and back again, up and down, East and West, North and South, because the boys behind the movement have their hearts and souls in the idea.

Already more than 1,700 of the leading newspapers throughout the Nation have been communicated with and hundreds have signified their intentions to get behind LAUGH MONTH in every way they can to make it an event that won't soon be forgotten.

Originally the idea was sort of "pooh-pooh-ed" as being impossible, unfeasible, not practical—too many obstacles, too much red tape, too many angles and all that rot.

That didn't make an iota of difference among the boys who started out to put the idea across, they reasoning that after all things are accomplished by human beings who have faith enough in their proposition, and the boys back of the big idea had faith and will continue to have it long after the doubting Thomases have ceased croaking because of the wonderful results they will be enabled to see and hear about if they have eyes and ears.

In the New York World of Dec. 4th the famous "Columnist," Frank Sullivan, used a double column space and about 125 lines deep on the front page of the second section of the World to comment humorously on LAUGH MONTH.

Hundreds of the leading newspapers throughout the Nation will follow suit. The famous King Feature Syndicate that controls more actual circulation than any other syndicate or combination of syndicates in this country or elsewhere for that matter have famous nationally known cartoonists and humorists interested in Laugh Month.

Valuable Endorsements

Prominent editors, educators, men in high political stations, clergymen, publicists, and many of the best known men in other walks of life have O. K'd LAUGH MONTH as a great idea and one conducive to better mental state and better health for the Nation in not just one laugh month but a continuity of laughter during all the months, thru the medium of films or whatever other agency these constant laughs can be produced.

NAT. G. ROTHSTEIN

Magazines devoted exclusively to humor have accepted Laugh Month wholeheartedly and will boost it to the limit.

Publications of all characters that use humorous columns or humorous pages have already accepted this great Laugh Month idea. Already hundreds of letters have been received by the National Laugh Month committee from exhibitors praising the big time showman's idea behind Laugh Month and promising their utmost co-operation.

Leading figures in the film industry have written to the committee and have complimented the idea and the plan. Several of the most prominent theatre circuits have showered praise on the idea.

We can't begin to list the names of all who have already boosted the idea, proof that not alone those directly interested in the financial success of the idea but that others, big timers in other walks of life have set their stamp of approval on this big national week of hilarity.

Paging 17,000 Theatres

A broadside has been mailed out to 17,000 theatre owners to be followed shortly by a big press sheet carrying dozens of ideas, suggestions and plans for putting Laugh Month over with a smash.

When you remember that the tireless efforts of several of the high pressure boys in the industry are behind the idea you may understand that LAUGH MONTH can't fail to go over.

The press sheet now being printed is jam packed with ideas, stunts, suggestions, ballyhoos, and includes everything an exhibitor could possibly wish for to put LAUGH MONTH over.

One of the dandy ideas in this press sheet is the PROCLAMATION by Mayors in all cities.

Any exhibitor can quickly and easily sell the Mayor of his town the idea of happiness, optimism and LAUGH MONTH. It just fits right into the scheme of things for the big new prosperous year that's coming.

Thus such a proclomation will focus the public's attention to LAUGH MONTH at every theatre where Laugh Month is being conducted.

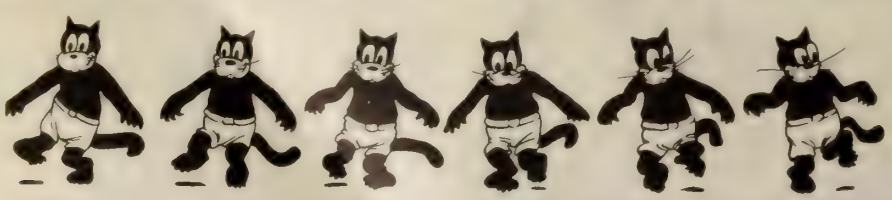
The decorations provided by manufacturers for exterior and interior house decoration will make a great flash anywhere.

Follow the variety of sure-fire ideas shown in the press sheet, all of which are very inexpensive and easy to do, and Laugh Month will pay you handsome dividends.

And on top of it all you'll get a brand new idea of what you can do with short subjects of worth while quality.

The idea in the main was "just an idea," yet it has grown with such amazing rapidity and to such proportions in less than two weeks that its success is unquestioned.

The Nation will know that LAUGH MONTH is a reality when January 1st comes around, and every smart exhibitor who is looking for extra business during January and who seeks to go still further and build up his business by the use of short subjects properly advertised will find in LAUGH MONTH a whale of a starting point. Crash the cymbals, sound the siren, ring the bells, shoot off the fireworks for LAUGH MONTH. It will pay you handsomely.



HENRY CAT DOES THE CHARLESTON FOR "LAUGH MONTH"—the feline dandy of "Aesop's Film Fables," the animated cartoon subject released by Pathe, caught by Paul Terry's facile pen in six characteristic movements in the Charleston Dance.

Try: "Two Hours of Short Features"

Short Feature Is Gaining In Prestige

By S. Barrett McCormick,
Director of Exploitation, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

A SWING around the theatres of the big Eastern cities by the Pathe field men has been convincing proof that short product is being played up more than ever by the exhibitors through their newspaper advertising, lobby and theatre-front displays, ballyhoos and novelties. Showmen have begun to see the vast possibilities of selling complete shows instead of only the feature.

Short product that was once considered a filler and was merely billed as "a comedy," or was not even mentioned, the showmen taking it for granted that the patrons would expect something of the sort, is now receiving prominent display in the advertising of the larger houses. The titles of the comedies as well as the name of the star are well displayed, while the special "cornerblock" illustrated newspaper ads on Pathe comedies are finding their way into print in increasing numbers. Special displays of various kinds are found on a majority of theatre fronts of key houses, novelties are distributed to the public and the theatre programs contain interesting material dealing with the shorts.

A visit to the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, found them using a special trailer announcing the coming of an "Our Gang" comedy. In it, the theatre management recommended that their patrons see it and vouched for its quality. In the frame of the Stanley Theatre front the "Our Gang" comedy headed the list of added attractions. Large paper mache cut-outs of Farina and Mary were used in the lobby decorations and "Our Gang" was prominently displayed in the house program.

S. BARRETT McCORMICK

As in the Keith-Albee houses in New York, Keith theatres everywhere are doing everything in their power to call the attention of their patrons to the Pathe comedy features on their vaudeville program. At Keith's Theatre, Providence, a large frame carried a complete black and white layout of players in "Our Gang," as well as a forceful announcement of the permanent added attraction. The Keith-Albee Temple Theatre in Rochester gave "Our Gang" space in their newspaper advertising equal to that of the headline act.

Manager Schwartz, of the Savoy Theatre, Philadelphia, had a big front flash on "Our Gang." Manager John Sidebottom, of the New Broadway, Philadelphia, had a good front display on the Pathe comedy played and on Aesop's Fables. Mr. Sidebottom uses all the Pathe accessories on the company's short product, including the mats of ads which are always furnished free. The Ritz, another Philadelphia house, had the comedy announcement in a conspicuous place on his theatre front. The Globe had a large cut-out of Ben Turpin hanging alongside the door. The Bell, under the management and ownership of M. Fineman, had a big front flash of short product.

Manager Joe Gans, of the Globe, used a front display on Pathe comedies, including one sheets, a cut-out of "Our Gang" and a large cut-out of Harry Langdon at the entrance of the theatre. The Victoria Theatre used a double brass frame for its Roach comedy.

The advertisements of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, include a good display of the comedy features. The Capitol, in Buffalo, carried a one sheet in its wall frame on a Mack Sennett comedy they were playing. The Emblem, Buffalo, had a front display of "Our Gang," Aesop's Fables, the Patheserial "Play Ball" and a large head cut-out of Mickey Daniels of "Our Gang." The Rialto, Buffalo, had a good "Our Gang" front flash, as did the Maxin.

"FAILURE," one of the most entertaining of all the O. Henry stories, has been brought to the screen in a two-reeler directed by Daniel Keefe, for release by the Fox Film Corporation. This production will be included in the "National Laugh Month" offerings from the house of William Fox.

Ask Yourself: "Does Laughter Hurt?"

Laugh Month Contributions from Bray Productions

By Jacques Kopfstein,
General Manager of Bray Productions

IT is particularly fitting that Bray Productions, the pioneers in the production of animated cartoons, should be represented during Laugh Month by the release during this period of some outstanding subjects.

I would call the exhibitor's especial attention to "Dinky Doodle at the Circus" as a production which combines everything desirable in a one-reel subject. We have in this straight cartoon comedy in which appear Dinky Doodle and Weakheart, the pup, creations of Walter Lantz, the eminent artist of the Bray Studios, also all the circus freaks, the Fat Lady, the Rubber Man, the Inseparable Twins, etc., for the first time in cartoon—then we have straight comedy—the artist appearing alone and then a combination of cartoon and straight photography—in particular the scene of the artist riding a cartoon mule is one of the most realistic as well as one of the most hilarious scenes ever depicted on the screen.

Other Dinky Doodle subjects which should prove of great audience interest are "Dinky Doodle at the Restaurant" which is now in course of completion. In this subject, Dinky gives the Child's flapjack balancers some interesting instructions; "Dinky Doodle and the Bad Man," in which Dinky and the artist have a most thrilling experience in lassooing the most desperate of all cartoon desperadoes—Dynamite Dan and reap a reward of one thousand cartoon dollars; "Dinky Doodle in the Hunt," showing how Dinky proves a greater hunter than his master.

JACQUES KOPFSTEIN

F. B. O., releasing the Dinky Doodle subjects, are also distributing the new series of one-reel comedies with cartoon, known as the "Unnatural History" Comedies. These subjects are burlesque on where the wild animals obtained their most distinguishing characteristics. In each "Unnatural History" the artist is forced by circumstances into the position of story-teller to his nephew and the Unnatural History tale which is told in cartoon results. Titles of the first four will indicate the variety of the subjects, "How the Elephant Got His Trunk"—"How the Bear Got His Short Tail"—"The Camel's Hump" and "The Leopard's Spots." For Laugh Month, in addition to the four above mentitoned, "The Goat's Whiskers" will be ready for release and we promise comedy, cartoon, burlesque and novelty in this subject as in its predecessors.

I would particularly suggest to the exhibitor that he play at least one comedy each day during Laugh Month, but not to forget that with Laugh Month over he still is to play more and more comedies. The Capitols, Rivolis and Strands were the result of audiences created by short subjects and in the old days short subjects were not "fillers" but were actually what filled the theatres. And if the exhibitor would only realize it, he could still "pack them in" with a diversified bill of quality short subjects.

In a varied bill of shorts there are bound to be several subjects that please every one in the audiences. This cannot be said of the feature. If the exhibitor will set one day each week aside during Laugh Month and play only short subjects that day and compare his business with what he does on other days, I know he will be agreeably surprised—but give this day the same advertising that is given the feature

HUNGRY FOR LAUGHS? Try "Hot Cakes for Two" in which stars Alice Day; if short of breath how about "Long Pants" which Hal Roach puts Glenn Tryon in—or into—they're the two end pictures, between which is a picture that must be good for the Saturday crowds because it's "Saturday Afternoon," Mack Sennett's Harry Langdon scream. They're all Pathepictures.

For the good of all -

Laugh Month

January 1926

When the "Laugh Month" idea was started no one ever thought of the possibility that there would not be enough comedies to meet the demand.

Bookings for January have been so tremendous that our laboratory has been called upon for many extra prints of many comedies.

Producers have also put their best foot forward. It is, therefore, our privilege to announce herewith the release, during January, of ten corking comedies; and to promise that even though they are released throughout "Laugh Month," prints on many of them will be available for pre-release bookings. Description of the five from Mack Sennett follows.

If you have not already made provision for enough comedies to adequately tie up with the popular "Laugh Month" movement, may I suggest that you get in immediate touch with your nearest Pathe exchange.

"Laugh Month" is a great idea.

It benefits everybody.

But it benefits most those who cooperate best.

Wm. Fox Made Features of "Shorts"

"Start New Year with a Laugh"—Grainger

By JAMES R. GRAINGER
Manager of Distribution, Fox Film Corporation.

WHEN Fox Films took for its slogan: "Start the New Year with A Laugh," we naturally had National Laugh Month in mind, but we were also of the opinion that if we put sufficient punch behind the suggestion to "start the new year with a laugh," it would be mighty good propaganda for the exhibitor to spread among his patrons. There's a whole lot in the power of suggestion and we see and hear so much of the drab side of life that any time anybody can start something that will produce a smile, he immediately begins to cash in on the little old sunshine dividends.

Fox Films heartily joins hands with anybody who starts out to distribute smiles and laughter. National Laugh Month is a splendid idea. It should be productive of more genuine mirth and healthy amusement than was ever created by any given agency in the history of the world, if exhibitors of motion pictures will co-operate with the creators of this unique idea. Millions of men, women and children will patronize the thousands of motion picture theatres during January and, in my opinion, if everybody will support the plan, young 1926, starting to work with a broad smile and a hearty laugh, will carry on much in the same manner throughout the year. Because of the medium through which it is hoped to establish a new record for laughter, National Laugh Month is bound to be a huge success. No medium other than the motion picture could hope to produce the results that are anticipated, for the undeniable reason that the plans for National Laugh Month will provide more people with opportunities for continuous and uninterrupted laughter than ever before. Live-wire exhibitors will grasp the importance of this plan with one accord for it will be to their advantage to give their patrons the benefit of an idea that has been so generously endorsed. To "'Start the New Year with a Laugh" means to start the New Year right, and show me the exhibitor who does not want to "get off on the right foot."

JAMES R. (JIMMY) GRAINGER is about to pencil in his initials on a map of his own United States.

De Haven and Tillson Are First Entries

A NUMBER OF INQUIRIES have been made by exhibitors to the headquarters of the National Laugh Month Committee for details as to the exploitation contest in which $850 in cash prizes will be distributed for the best exhibitor exploitation tying up with the Laugh Month campaign, showing an exceptional interest in this contest.

Rules of the contest have been printed in all national trade publications but the companies co-operating in the Laugh Month campaign are supplying their exchanges with copies of the rules so that these exchanges will be ready to meet any requests for printed rules.

The first exhibitors to signify their intention of bidding for the prizes to be distributed to exhibitors or exhibitor employees were Mr. A. M. De Haven, Directing Manager of the Opera House at Bangor, Maine, and Roy Tillson, Managing Director of the Fuller Theatre at Kalamazoo, Michigan. Both have been consistent boosters for Short Features and their efforts to cash in on the Laugh Month drive through their own local exploitation will be watched with great interest.

All exhibitors or exhibitor employees responsible for exploitation work are eligible to enter the contest and they can make an entry for each week in January so that the smallest exhibitor in the country has a chance to win four first prizes of $100 or a total of $400 in prizes for his exploitation efforts during Laugh Month.

Christie Season Product Half Completed; New Comedies Ready for "Laugh Month"

ROUNDING out the first half of its 1925-26 series of two-reel comedies, the Christie organization has just turned over to Educational for distribution new Bobby Vernon, Walter Hiers, Jimmie Adams and Christie Comedies which completes fourteen of the twenty-eight comedies to be released this year. Four new two-reelers will be released for National Laugh Month in January.

The newest Bobby Vernon comedy finished is "Yes, Yes Babette," with scenes laid in Paris, and with Vernon doing the role of a doughboy who returns to France to find his sweetie who during the War days was known to the soldiers as the "Darling of Paris." The girl in the case is played by Frances Lee. Also in the picture is Yola D'Arvil, a real Parisian who started her film career playing a small part in the Gloria Swanson production which Paramount filmed abroad last year. Bill Irving, Christie heavy, is a prominent in this comedy as the rival Apache who treats all comers rough. The comedy was written by Hal Conklin and directed by Earl Rodney.

The new Walter Hiers release is "Weak but Willing," in which the rotund Walter is initiated into a lodge with a lot of new wrinkles in the way of initiation stunts which cause discomfort to the comedian and laughter to the audience. Jack Duffy plays the role of prospective father-in-law and Chief Goatee in the Ancient Order of Goats which Hiers nearly misses by being initiated into the wrong lodge. In the cast with Hiers are Duane Thompson, who is a regular leading lady with this unit and Bill Irving. The Hiers comedy which was written by Sig Herzig will be released in January.

"A Salty Sap" is the title of the next Christie comedy which features Billy Dooley, supported by Amber Norman, Jack Duffy, Kalla Pasha and others and which was directed by William Watson. It is likely that Dooley will be featured in five of the current series of ten Christie comedies and in each he will no doubt appear as a sailor character, similar to that in which he became known in vaudeville. The titles also indicate sailor atmosphere. The first of these was "A Misfit Sailor" and the second which has just been released, "A Goofy Gob." The next Christie comedy with Dooley featured will be released in January.

Following this will be a Jimmie Adams star series comedy the title of which has not been selected. The story which has been filmed, is one of backstage atmosphere in which Adams as a country boy acts as a stage hand in a musical comedy of Russian extravaganza type. Molly Malone, Anita Garvin, Bill Blaisdell, Eddie Baker and a large chorus of girls under the direction of Ramona Oliver are in support of Adams in the new comedy.

Epes Winthrop Sargent Tells You

By Charles Edward Hastings

"BEGIN at the beginning—" Epes Winthrop Sargent, Exploitation Editor of Moving Picture World, snapped right into a nine-minute chat with his interviewer.

"The skilled showman won't have to be told," Sargent said. "But tell the unskilled showman to start things 'right' by devoting the balance of the month of December to smiling, when he is in his theatre, and an occasional gale of laughter won't hurt anybody standing around."

"Sarg" paused, and smiled. Finally, he continued:

"That may sound a bit strange, because December is not always a propitious month with exhibitors—so much money being spent for Christmas presents, etc. But if the showman books in some good attractions, the holiday season this year should prove better than any in the past. There is plenty of money in circulation, and the exhibitors should set about getting their share. But a laugh from the box-office, and a smile on the exhibitor's face—these help an awful lot.

"Now, in response to your request, if I may be permitted to make a few suggestions, it occurs to me that an early play on the 'HA' and 'HO' signs, varying in size from three feet to seven feet (the large ones for sidewalks or house tops) would be a fine introduction for 'Laugh Month', so far as the interior of the theatre is concerned.

Signs for the Theatre

"These signs may be arranged to suit the wishes of the showman, but the cut out letters should fairly cover the front of the house. One or two sets will not do. Use 20 to 40. These signs have been used to excellent advantage on a number of occasions, and especially is this true of the Harold Lloyd comedies. Used purely as teaser stuff, these signs never fail to attract attention and cause comment. Patrons asking questions regarding these signs should be informed (also with a smile) that 'January is National Laugh Month' and that 'this theatre will make a special effort to show short features that will appeal to patrons of all types.'

"On this point, the exhibitor may learn that among those who make inquiries are some who have a special choice to express. This gives the exhibitor a fine opportunity to study his crowd, and it would be a good play to book, if possible, some subjects asked for by his patrons."

Bookings, of course, "Sarg" points out, are made in advance, but the exhibitor should express his willingness to co-operate, even if a "request" is fulfilled at some later time, say after January has passed.

Use "Laughing Records"

"One of the very best 'stunts,'" Mr. Sargent continued, "is to make every possible use of the well known phonograph records, known everywhere as the 'Okeh Laughing Records.'" There are two of them, and they never fail to register. Frankly, in connection with a project like National Laugh month, I believe that few things lend themselves to exploitation as do these records. The showmen will find these records ready at hand. His nearest phonograph supply stores carries them, or can obtain them from the General Phonograph Corporation, at 25 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City.

"There are many ways in which the showman may use these records.

"Briefly, a phonograph in the lobby, with a repeater attachment, may be used to excellent advantage. This will attract passersby, as well as those entering the theatre. An attractive card, explaining that 'National Laugh Month' is coming, or is here, should be displayed. A phonograph horn with an extension tube may be hooked up to a lithograph of a laughing face, with an aperture for the emission of sound. A record also may be used, with an amplifier, in connection with a radio receiver set, and used in several ways. The Columbia and Victor people also have timely records.

"Don't overlook the phonograph shop tie-up, as it permits of wide exploitation. The window cards regarding the Okeh Laughing Records should also draw attention to your theatre and the short features being shown there. These cards may be changed weekly in advance. Also tie up the phonograph shops in cooperative advertising in the local newspapers, the exhibitor taking part of the space. The use of the Okeh Laughing Records on the phonographs that furnish music for the sidewalk listeners also is urged. Prizes of records of various kinds may be offered by the exhibitor for winning essays by school children, thus further tying up the phonograph stores in newspaper and window advertising."

Billboard Possibilities

"If the theatre is off the main street, and a billboard is available, the exhibitor can rig up an exceptionally good attention-arrester by attaching a phonograph horn to the back of the billboard, with wire gauze covering the aperture, and using one of the laugh records in connection with a laughing face set in the center of the stand. The phonograph-radio coupling would hit this stunt nicely, in my judgment. An extension cord, in series, could be laid from the theatre, or a nearby store, to the horn back of the billboard.

"The National Laugh Month Committee has arranged with a lithograph company for a 3-sheet poster that lends itself to this scheme. This poster shows a laughing face, and is just the thing for the horn. The Committee will tell you where to get this poster for 27 cents. This is better than using an old Lloyd poster.

Radio Tie-ups

"By all means tie up with a radio shop, and if your theatre is located in a city that boasts a broadcasting station, tie up with the station for fifteen minutes each evening to broadcast the laughter of your audience, and a talk on 'Laugh Month.' This should be an attractive stunt in thickly populated centers, and, in addition, radio fans over a wide territory served by the radio station will be 'listening in.' The laughing records can be broadcast, and, in the judgment of the exhibitor, the song may be sung from the stage into the microphone by a singer of local repute. There are a number of ways in which the radio tie-up may be employed.

"A stunt that has made more money for the exhibitor than any other single stunt consists of an offer of $10 or $15, to any man who can sit through your show and not laugh. The entrants, of course, must announce their intention of competing for the prize, and the theatre owner will select a judge, or judges, to observe the competitor, or competitors. This contest in itself proves very amusing to those grouped about the contestants and the judges.

How to Put "Laugh Month" Over

Laughing Contests

"A laughing contest is always in order, with the contestants on the stage. The object is to determine which of the contestants possesses the most natural laugh, and appropriate little prizes may be awarded to those selected by the audience as the winners, in one, two, three order. As a general rule, your audience gets a big kick out of a stunt of this character. Break it up, by giving a matinee 'laugh contest' for children, and a night show for adults. The idea lends itself to elaboration, as the showman sees fit to change it."

Essay Contest for Children

"The exhibitor," continued Mr. Sargent, "has a strong ally, as a business getter, in the child, boy or girl, and, properly appealed to, this ally never fails. The children may be invited to participate in an essay contest, using a topic, such as: 'My Favorite Comedian, and why?' A number of topics naturally suggest themselves for an event such as 'Laugh Month.' Prizes of admission tickets may be awarded to winning contestants in these essay contests. The parents of the children take a keen interest in the things the children write, and this, in itself, stimulates the interest of the elders in the shows at the theatre.

Comedy Convention

"A 'Comedy Convention' has everything in its favor, from the stunt angle, and nobody has ever known it to fail. In this stunt, the children impersonate the best known comedians—Chaplin, Lloyd, Keaton, etc.—and, after assembling at a point some distance from your theatre, they parade to the theatre, using the main traveled thoroughfares, with the exhibitor furnishing a band, banners, etc., and into the house and onto the stage, where the audience decides the winners.

Ad. Writing Contest

"Try your folks on an 'ad' writing contest, offering prizes for the best general 'ad' on 'Laugh Month.' Give a prize of $10 for the best 'ad', and pay $1 for each 'ad' used in your local newspaper. Use one 'ad' a day, and use the writer's name in one corner. Let your patrons vote on the best 'ad', and thus stimulate interest in your theatre.

"The amusing 'Clown Carnival' should prove a winning stunt for a great many theatres on an occasion such as 'National Laugh Month.' This is a variation of the comedy convention, in which the kids dress in crazy attire and impersonate clowns instead of comedians. For a matinee, children in the contest would be admitted free, to one show, with the audience voting on winning impersonations during a march of the children across the stage, during a five-minute interruption in the program. The exhibitor will choose suitable prizes for first, second and third places in the 'convention' contest.

"And, of course, the 'Comedy Interlude' just naturally offers itself. This stunt takes the place of 'Amateur Night' in a variety house, with the contestants allowed five minutes in any efforts they care to employ to make the audience laugh. The idea should not suggest the old 'Get-the-Hook' fun, offered seriously it proves a splendid divertissement for even the most staid audiences. A large part of the humor will be found in having a good announcer, not a difficult thing to find as almost every town has someone to whom they look for fun of this brand."

When the interviewer turned to the subject of "cost," Mr. Sargent said:

"There are certain expenses attached to any 'stunt,' however simple. But in many instances, cost is shaved down in proportion to the size of the theatre, its equipment and personnel. Many exhibitors employ publicity men. For 'National Laugh Month' it might not be a bad idea for the theatre owner who does not need a publicity man the year around to acquire the services of a local newspaper man, to assist him in putting his publicity across. Every theatre owner is aware that he must have a certain amount of printing and sign painting done, and I doubt whether his bills along this line should very far exceed their normal maximum. For the showman who delights in his showmanship, you have a few suggestions that will not set him back in any considerable sum. Some showmen will insist on spreading themselves, and their rewards should justify their added expense.

"No theatre owner should fail to avail himself of the excellent aids furnished by the National Laugh Month Committee. The men who make up this committee are experts. They have 'weeded out,' from many suggestions and designs, one of the best lines of posters, banners, pennants, slides, trailers, window cards, buttons, etc., that I have come across in many years of close application to study of these things.

"It is safe to say that before January 1, more than 90 per cent of the population of the United States will know all about 'Laugh Month,' and no theatre owner should fail to do his share toward 'pulling 'em in' to his theatre. This is done through advertising and exploitation. The National Laugh Month Committee has laid a fine 'groundwork.' From this point on, success depends upon exhibitor co-operation. The thing that sells the theatre and its shows, however, is exploitation. This is up to the man who owns the theatre."

* * * *

And this, in the opinion of the interviewer, is the meatiest nine-minute "chat" on record.

The First Laugh: "Eve—Her Apple"

Big List of Century Comedies Scheduled for Holiday Release

THE Stern Brothers announce an unusually large schedule of Century Comedies for release during the December holiday period. In addition to their availability for booking during the Christmas season, these comedies have been selected so that they will be equally as appropriate for presentation during January, National Laugh Month.

Th Century holiday list is headed by a new Buster Brown Comedy and includes two-reelers starring Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian, Al Alt and Eddie Gordon. These comedies have been selected from a big list of completed Century product as being of especial box-office value, and therefore of the maximum pulling power during the holidays.

The new Buster Brown Comedy is "Buster's Nightmare." It is the fourth in the Buster Brown series and recently had its Broadway premiere in the Warner's Theatre, New York City. Following its successful week in that house, it was played over the entire Loew circuit in and around New York City and went far in establishing the Buster Brown Comedies as one of the outstanding comedy offerings of the year.

"Buster's Nightmare" was directed by Gus Meins, with Arthur Trimble as Buster, Doreen Turner as Mary Jane, Pete the dog comedian as Tige, and Pinto Colvig as the Brown butler. The two-reeler is filled with humorous pranks and comedy situations. Reports from Warner's and the Loew houses state that the audiences were in a continuous uproar during the running of this comedy.

"Going Some," the Wanda Wiley Comedy slated for current release, is that star's latest two-reeler. It was made by Edward I. Luddy with Jack Singleton in the leading male role. In it Miss Wiley has ample opportunity for numerous comedy stunts and daring escapades, such as have gained for her the reputation as being one of the outstanding comediennes of the screen.

"Eighteen Carat," is by far Edna Marian's best comedy. In selecting it for holiday release, the Sterns were actuated by the exceptional reviews recently given on this picture by the trade reviewers. It is another of Miss Marian's inimitable "fresh from the farm" roles in which she is seen first as a farmer's daughter and then as a shop girl in the big city. Her escapades are many and the action is enlivened by many new gags. The comedy was directed by William Watson. This two-reeler is said to have one of the funniest automobile sequences ever screened.

"Scandal Hunters" is the Al Alt comedy included in the holiday schedule. It was directed by Jess Robbins and is a take-off on the adventures of a cub reporter on the trail of a big story. Larry Richardson and Marie Torpie are in the cast. Wherever it has been pre-released this comedy has met with great approval.

The Eddie Gordon comedy for December is "Captain Suds." Eddie is supported by Beth Darlington, Larry Richardson and Lillian Worth. The main feature of this two-reler is a comedy prize fight in which Eddie is matched against Richardson, who is almost twice his size. The fight reaches a rousing climax when Beth Darlington and Lillian Worth enter the arena and start a battle royal. Noel Smith directed the comedy and made it stand forth as a high-water mark in Gordon's efforts for Century.

Furnish "Ads" to Exhibitors

Pathe News Supplies Showmen with Series of Ten Advertisements to Cover General and Special Features

In order to give the exhibitor a full line-up of advertising accessories with which to cover the Pathe News regular and special features, the Pathe Exploitation Department has published a novel sheet of advertising illustrations with mats, which are suitable for a spot in the showman's newspaper ads.

There are ten ads in the series, varying from those one column wide and an inch deep to a two-column display advertisement six inches deep. These call attention to the regular Pathe News features and to "Flashes of the Past," the living record of important news events during the past 15 years, which is being shown in nine installments in the regular releases of Pathe News.

Some of the ad copy is prepared so that it will fit in with the local newspaper advertising in connection with Pathe News' current national advertising campaign.

A set of these ad illustrations were mailed to every exhibitor in the country playing Pathe News. The mats are issued free of charge.

Rock Starts "Alice Blues"

Joe Rock will begin production this week on "Alice Blues," a Blue Ribbon comedy featuring Alice Ardell, petite French star, and a well known comedian to be named shortly. Preparations are now being made to give this Rock fun film lavish settings and a strong supporting cast of funsters.

Hiers' "Laughometer"

Educational Comedian Can Now Register Audience Laughter

Especially for Laugh Month, a most unique machine has been bought by Walter Hiers for registering laughs. This machine, called a "Laughometer," will be used by Hiers to determine how well his different Laugh Month pictures, go over with the public. It resembles a radio microphone except that it has a cylinder attachement which contains a spool of paper on which a pencil marks in jagged lines the volume of the applause and a permanent record is thereby secured on each production that the rotund comedian makes, for releasing through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Hiers has purchased the exclusive rights to use this machine and has the first and only model ever made. The machine is the invention of D. W. Brownell.

Use Pathe "Shorts" Only

Pathe Short Features Exclusively to Be Used in Another New House at Homestead, Pa.

Another instance of Pathe short features' appeal to the exhibitor was shown at the opening of the Million-Dollar Stahl Theatre in Homestead, Pa., when three of the Pathe products were included in the initial bill.

Pathe News, Topics of the Day and "Aesop's Film Fables" were the only short features screened and had a large share in maintaining the interest of the large audience that crowded to the theatre for the opening performance.

This house will play Pathe short features exclusively.

Fox Short Features Get Many Important Tieups

FRED C. QUIMBY, short subject sales manager of Fox Films, and his associates, have been working with radio broadcasting stations, book publishers, newspapers and national advertisers in an endeavor so to surround the picturegoer with Fox short subject exploitation that he won't be able to avoid it without going to bed. Their efforts have been crowned with success. Here's what they have accomplished:

Doubleday Page and Co., are getting out the first real bargain edition of O. Henry's works—four volumes that will sell for 90 cents. These will be placed on sale in more than 15,000 different cities throughout the United States and Canada and the trade paper, newspaper and direct by mail advertising to back up the campaign will reach 10,000,000 people.

Doubleday Page and Co., will arrange window and stores displays and will furnish free material to booksellers that will materially aid the O. Henry comedies being produced by Fox Films. When it is considered that more than 20,000,000 people have already read O. Henry's works, it will be seen that this tie up reaches more people than the present motion picture audience of America.

Every possible radio station has been induced to broadcast short humorous O. Henry stories, and the idea is spreading rapidly because there is a great public demand for such a form of radio entertainment. The first story to be broadcast was "Transients in Arcadia" from Station WGBS, Gimble Brothers, New York City.

The Bell Syndicate, which syndicates the Helen and Warren stories to eighty-one newspapers in the United States and Canada with a combined circulation of 6,000,000, also supplies these papers with photographs of Kathryn Perry, Hallam Cooley and scenes from various Helen and Warren pictures, together with copy advising that this service is being produced by Fox Films and the pictures are being run at the local theatres. They also include the specific bookings in this information so that every picture goer may know exactly when he can see them.

Each one of these papers has also started a Helen and Warren department asking the readers if Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley is their idea of Helen and Warren. The most interesting letters are printed in subsequent issues of the paper. This tieup is especially effective because the people must see the pictures in order to comment on them, and everyone likes to see his name in print.

Small, Maynard and Co., have just issued a book entitled "The Married Life of Helen and Warren." All booksellers handling this volume will be supplied gratis with window displays and advertising accessories.

Chas. Scribners Sons have made special bookstore tieups and window displays for all dealers handling the Van Bibbers stories by Richard Harding Davis, which are also being made in picture form by Fox Films. These are the comedies that made such a howling success last season and are being received this season with even greater acclaim.

It's easy to see now why Fred Quimby is all het up. Not only has he a great product to sell, but he's selling it, and has arranged exploitation tieups that will help any exhibitor to pack his house when a Fox short subject is announced. Quimby's idea of the proper question for a picture patron to ask is "what feature are you going to show with the Fox Short Subject this week?" Maybe he's over-enthusiastic. But he and his entire staff are trying might and main to make that idea a reality, and exhibitors all over the country are rapidly absorbing his enthusiasm.

"If They Are Good, Say So—" Parsons Urges the Critics. "If They Are Bad—Say So!"

THE MOTION PICTURE CRITICS and special writers on the New York newspapers, and newspapers in the Metropolitan area, were the guests of the Short Association at a luncheon held on Friday afternoon, December 18, at the Hotel Lorraine, Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, New York City.

The luncheon was given as part of the promotion of "National Laugh Month," and to lay before the critics the importance of reviewing the short features on the programs of the first run theatres in Gotham.

P. A. Parsons, Director of Advertising for Pathe Exchanges, Inc., presided, and introduced Joseph Dannenberg, Editor of "Film Daily," and R. F. Woodhull, President of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

"If you see a short subject and it is good, say so," said Mr. Parsons. "If it is bad, say so. By so doing you will encourage production of good short features, and discourage the production of bad short features."

"Babe" London, known to screen fans the world over, comedienne in many Christie comedies, and also a large factor in a number of big features, sang two songs and danced for the sixty guests. "Babe" was the "whole show." No other entertainer was scheduled.

Mr. Woodhull stressed the thought that exhibitors are deeply interested in the onward progress of short features, and their problem of booking good little features will be lightened if production is maintained at the present high artistic standard reached within the last two years. He said the showmen can read all they wish regarding the longer features, but the newspaper critics seem to neglect the short film in their reviews. He hoped this would be overcome in the future.

Mr. Woodhull spoke of the change in balancing vaudeville bills. "We used to book 'dumb' acts for our opening numbers. Now we try to make every act a good one. That's what we are doing with our entire picture programs.

"Forget 'Laugh Month' in its commercial sense," he told the newspaper critics. "When you help the world to laugh you are enriching us."

It is expected that similar "meetings" between recognized film executives and newspaper critics will be arranged, shortly, in all exchange centers, so that this topic may be properly presented to the reviewers.

Nothing Succeeds Like Laughter

E. Oswald Brooks, of Pathe Writes Booklet on Serials

JUSTIFYING the existence of the chapter-play by likening the Bible, the "Arabian Nights Entertainment" and even human life itself to the serial form of presenting a story on the screen, E. Oswald Brooks, Serial Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has just issued a handbook, "The Serial Idea," calculated to be of inestimable value to the exhibtor in building a regular attendance at his theatre with such serial attractions as "The Green Archer" and other Pathe continued films.

Citing the purely human trait of wishing to know what is going to happen next week, or in the future, Mr. Books points to the leading fiction magazines as proof of this universal desire to become acquainted with what is going to transpire next. He sets forth the fact that a great number of world-famous publications, with circulations running into the millions, utilize their front covers, the most important page of the book, to announce forthcoming serials, and argues that if continued stories were not the very backbone of the circulations of these huge publications, the publishers would not devote such valuable space to them.

"The application of the serial idea to the motion picture screen," says Brooks, "must, in order to be fully successful, follow exactly along the lines of its application in the popular weekly and monthly magazines and newspapers. In other words it must be inaugurated and maintained as a steady policy. No theatre which runs serials in a spasmodic manner can hope to get the best results."

Discussing the serial policy and its results, as proven by the records, Brooks continues:

"Each successive serial will gradually build up a regular serial clientele for that theatre. The first serial played may not please all classes but it most surely will please a large following. The next serial may appeal to a different class of patrons plus the steady customers created with the first serial. The third serial will again attract even more patrons. And so on, with snowball-like growth, until by the time the first year of serials is completed the theatre will have a steady, regular and guaranteed weekly income on the day or days it presents its serial programs."

Brooks sums up the serial idea by quoting a letter sent to the house managers of the theatres belonging to all of the most important circuits, after that letter had received the personal O. K. of the chief executives of those circuits, a part of which follows:

"The average theatre program today very closely approximates the reading public's bill of fare. You give them a screen newspaper in the NEWS, a screen magazine with the various REVIEW reels, and you give them fiction stories with the features. Yet there still appear to be many exhibitors who have not realized that the one big circulation-getter and circulation maintainer, the serial, is most surely worthy of very serious consideration."

In listing the famous authors, known throughout the world for their contributions of serial stories to national publications, Brooks names among them Emerson Hough, Albert Payson Terhune, Earl Derr Biggers, Mary Hastings Bradley and others whose works have been represented in recent Pathe-serial productions.

The handbook is profusely illustrated with reproductions of page advertisements by large publications announcing serial stories and with samples of advertisements used by theatre owners and managers to increase attendance through the presentation of serials. "The Serial Idea" is well presented and the exhibitor concerned with box-office figures can hardly fail to be impressed by the striking array of facts offered for his consideration.

"THAT MACK SENNETT THINKS UP SOME FUNNY ONES"—and he lives up to his rep in titling "From Rags to Britches" which he "thunk up" for his latest Pathe release.

F. B. O. Short Subjects in Many First Run Houses

The Princess Amusment Co., at Lincoln, Nebraska, one of the largest first run houses in the country, has purchased the entire series of Standard Fat Men and Blue Ribbon comedies, as well as the 25 Bray Cartoons, which F. B. O. are distributing.

Charles Sweeten of the Majestic Theatre, at Evansville, Ind., has booked "The Adventures of Maizie," consisting of twelve two reel episodes, in which Alberta Vaughn is starred, the Standard and Blue Ribbon comedies and the "Fighting Hearts" series, shortly to be filmed on the F. B. O. lot.

New Comedies Start at "U"

Two comedy units have started work at Universal City under the supervision of Scott Darling, head of comedy production. Richard Smith is directing Neely Edwards in the first of the new series of one-reelers. Arthur Lake and the "Sweet Sixteen" company, have begun a new one.

Kenneth J. Bishop, president of Tennek Film Corporation, announces that through its Sales Manager, Jack Lustberg, it has closed a deal for world rights, except America and Canada, with the M. C. Distributing Co., Inc., 729 Seventh Avenue.

The deal includes four series of twelve two-reel subjects each, The Two Star Comedies with Fatty Layman and Charles Dorety; The Hank Mann Comedies; The Chester Conklin Comedies and the All Star Comedies, the first of which features Bill Patton, Stuart Holmes, Sheldon Lewis, Clara Horton and Eric Mayne.

John Bernhardt, secretary and vice president of Tennek, leaves for Europe in January on the S. S. Cleveland, directly bound for Hamburg, where Tennek has its principal foreign branch.

"Comedies Will Dominate Future Programs" —Christie

COMEDY will soon be the predominating factor on the average motion picture program and the whole-hearted response that has been accorded the Laugh Month campaign by exhibitors, press and public is evidence of the increasing pace at which the comedy movement is travelling, according to Al Christie.

Mr. Christie, one of the oldest and most successful producers, has made a deep study of the wishes of the picture theatre going public. For the last half dozen years his product has been confined entirely to comedies, most of which have been short features released by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc. A large part of the Educational Pictures program for Laugh Month comes from the Christie Studio, among the late December and January releases made by Christie being the Christie Comedies—"My Swedie" with Neal Burns and "A Salty Sap" with Billy Dooley; the Bobby Vernon Comedy "Yes, Yes, Babette"; the Walter Hiers comedy, "Weak But Willing," and the Jimmie Adams comedy, "For Sadie's Sake."

"The screen is passing through the same phase as did the stage, but more rapidly," says Mr. Christie. "The first plays of which we have any recollection were tragedies. Drama came later, and it was not until the last few years that comedy, musical shows, vaudeville (almost entirely comedy) and farces predominated on the stage. There are few tragedies, and fewer dramas today than ever before.

"The screen programs of the future will, in my judgment, be composed almost entirely of comedies. The tendency that way can be seen by the increased use of 'comedy relief' even now in the screen dramas. People crave laughter and they must have it if the screen is going to remain a permanent part of the amusement of the people.

"The campaign for Laugh Month was announced only a very short time ago. At best those who suggested Laugh Month probably did not realize the tremendous hold which the idea would take on the imaginations of everybody. The response has been a veritable flood of endorsements and pledges of co-operation. It has been generally conceded that this was a season of comedy more than any season in the past, but the tremendous growth of the Laugh Month movement illustrates in a most spectacular manner the rapid development of the comedy field and is a forecast of comedy predomination sooner than even those of us who are closest to comedy production had realized."

Stern Signs School Girl For Roles in Century Comedies

Viola Carleton, a New York school-girl, has been signed by the Stern Brothers, producers of Century Comedies, for comedy roles in the two-reelers they make for Universal release. Miss Carleton is a newcomer to the screen, but it is prophesied that she has a brilliant future as a comedienne.

"Mummy Love" Elaborate Two-Reeler

At last a comedy producer has succumbed to the lure of spectacular sequences in fun films. In "Mummy Love," a Blue Ribbon comedy with Neely Edwards and Alice Ardell in the stellar roles, Joe Rock is employing some of the most lavish settings ever used in the production of two-reelers. Among the elaborate sets are a magnificent palace and court yard; mighty catacombs and mummy caves and a desert scene of great proportions. Marcel Perez is directing the production of "Mummy Love," which will be released by the Standard Cinema Corp., through the offices of F. B. O.

MARRIAGE CIRCUS. (Pathe-Comedy). Star, Ben Turpin. Ben does his stuff with the same pleasant expression as before. The titles are all that can be asked for and the direction seems right; maybe there isn't anything wrong with them, but people don't like him here. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LOBBY GOW. (F. B. O.-Comedy). Star, Jimmie Aubrey. Good comedy. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (150 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

LOVE GOOFY. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Jimmie Adams. Seemed to cause a great deal of hilarity amongst the crowd on a Saturday night. We are satisfied with any comedy when it does the same. Tone and appeal, good. Better class town of 4,000. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RUNAWAY BALLOON. (Pathe-Comedy). As always, gets the laughs. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

STUPID BUT BRAVE. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Al St. John. A slapstick comedy that had even the highbrows amused. Not as many laughs as some comedies, but amused generally. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

SURE MIKE AND NEWS REEL 86. (Pathe). News not interesting but comic very good. Comic in one reel with Martha Sleeper. All classes. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SWEET PAPA. (Fox-Comedy). The first Fox comedy in this theatre and it was surely well received. Most people remembered the Fox comedies at the Majestic and came to see it as much as to see the feature. They were not disappointed. It is a fast one. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WHIRLIGIGS. (Educational-Comedy). The print was in fair shape on this, and was more interesting to our audiences, as it was more complete and not all cut to pieces, making new splices. Tone, good. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

BEWARE. (Educational-Comedy). A Swiss movement on the part of several yodelers, a dusky one, a near-sighted old man and a girl. Spooks a chicken under the dusky's one's cap. Skeletons, chases. That's it. Most of the stuff is rehashed. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

INNOCENT HUSBANDS. (Pathe-Comedy). Star, Charles Chase. Here is a very funny comedy. Based almost entirely on situations and not slapsticks. It will please every fan who likes this kind of comedy. In my estimation it is a knockout. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mitchell Conery, Conat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

KING COTTON. (Educational-Comedy). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Supposed to be a knockout by the critics, but for some unknown reason it failed to produce hearty laughter here in Nazareth. Tone, good. Fair appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. G. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Exhibitors Enthuse Over Buster Brown Comedies

STERN BROTHERS, producers of Buster Brown Comedies, released by Universal, are being deluged with letters and wires from exhibitors attesting to the great box-office value of the new Buster Brown comedies.

The following excerpts are indicative of the commendations reaching the Universal home office:

Aaron Saperstein, owner of a chain of theatres in Chicago, wrote as follows:

"I am running this series at the Lexington, Garfield, Lincoln, Palais Royal and Olympia theatres and certainly find them very good drawing cards. I think they are the best comedies on the market today, in fact, they are in a class by themselves. After running the first few we find them to be a good box-office bet."

Sol Best, another Chicago chain owner, reported along similar lines. He said: "I have contracted for your Century Comedies including the Buster Brown series for my three theatres, namely, the Madison Circle, Lawn and Elaine, and feel that congratulations are in order, especially on your Buster Brown series.

"They are in my estimation real comedies, chuck full of funny situations and are real money-makers according to my receipts on the days I run them. At least twenty adults wanted to know when we were going to run another Buster Brown, showing that they appeal not only to children but have 100 per cent appeal."

R. S. Wallace, manager of the Ohio theatre of Alliance, O., sent in the following report:

"Just finished playing the second Buster Brown comedy and want to say that they certainly gave the best of satisfaction to our patrons. They attract the children to the box-office and please both children and adults. Judging from the laughs they get they are in a class with any two-reel comedy on the market. Advise us as soon as the next one is available, as we feel we are giving our patrons a treat when we show them a Buster Brown comedy."

Three More Directors Are Added To Fox Comedy Staff

The West Coast Studios has added three new comedy directors to the staff. They are Lex Neal, who has just completed his first picture under this new arrangement, "A Flaming Affair," Max Gold and Andrew Bennison, who have just completed "Officer of the Day," which they co-directed.

Mr. Neal comes to the Fox studios after having directed several pictures for Buster Keaton.

Max Gold won a promotion from assistant director to that of director. Andrew Bennison for several years was a Fox comedy writer.

Directors Neal, Gold and Bennison are working under the personal supervision of George E. Marshall, comedy director general.

Manager Thinks "Short" Worth Playing is Worth Advertising

THE Evening Journal of Martinsburg, W. Va., contains in a recent issue, a program ad of Crandall's Apollo Theatre, in which Fox News is given nearly as much space as the feature advertised, and in which the News Reel is described as "A feature in itself." The ad further specifically mentions the different features that make up the reels, with the big Intercollegiate Football games being given special prominence in type.

The idea of "plugging" a news reel in feature proportions is that of H. A. Doman, manager of the Apollo, who states that any "short" worth playing, is worth advertising. Doman also uses the advance continuity sheets that come to him carrying the Fox reel contents, and from these makes up special newspaper readers. In these readers he singles out some particularly big feature such as a news "scoop," and plays it up heavily in his copy. The one-sheet listing the "reels contents" is not displayed solely on a lobby board, as is the custom with some exhibitors, but an extra number are placed on boards about town, alongside paper on the feature.

This astute manager is not merely running a theatre, but he is practising the first principle of merchandising by creating in advance, a demand for "one" of his articles in order to sell them all.

Little Feature Prologues

The Editor of Moving Picture World's "Presentations" Department Offers Suggestions for Staging Novelties to Introduce the Little Gems of Your Program—Just as Important as Your Longer Features—Don't Miss Any Showmanship Bets

By Colby Harriman

LAUGH MONTH and the Stage. Two vital factors. Laugh Month is as important as Greater Movie Season, and in some ways supersedes the national movement to the extent that Laugh Month carries with it a definite idea and defines for the producer and exhibitor the bases of his operation. Such definition offers a consistent link between stage creations and exploitation activities. The presentation and prologue producer is one of the favored individuals at this particular time as the stage offers so many opportunities for him to contribute his share of the smiles and happy moments of Laugh Month.

To arrive at some sort of understanding, it is best to analyze comedy as applied to a motion picture and to the stage.

Comedy in a picture depends chiefly upon the situation. The situation which has a "slight value," and further enhanced by clever titles and suitable musical accompaniment attains its purpose.

Wide Range of Expression

On the stage comedy is given a wider range of expression. There is not only the sight value but added to that is the human or personal element, the flesh and blood contact with the character whose voice and physical action co-ordinate to translate the situation in terms of completeness. On the stage as in the picture the situation or the core of the episode is the vital element, and with the development of the standard in the motion picture theatres today, it is no easy task for a producer of a motion picture or of a stage creation to produce comedy situations, as it is essential that there be a unification of all the elements which constitute a sure fire theme or scene.

Where is the line of synchronization between the motion picture and the stage in the motion picture theatre? This question is propounded not pedagogically but to emphasize the point. The line or link is the "sight value" of the stuation. Motion picture audiences depend chiefly upon optical reception for their entertainment and in stage creations the producer must be certain that his productions emphasize the sight value both in color, action and scene. Without the motion picture, the stage offers other attributes in putting over comedy, such as jokes, gags, etc., but these are out of place in a motion picture theatre.

Is Limited on the Stage

Comedy on a motion picture stage is limited. This is due to the precedent which has been engendered in the audiences by past productions. If a producer, during Laugh Month, desires to inject speaking parts and like accompaniments he may be treading on dangerous ground. It has been the experience of many that in production, a scene which is radical in its construction, a situation or attitude which is an extreme departure from the general routine often proves fatal as it fails to "get over." On the motion picture stage we find three elements with which the producer may work which will lend temselves consistently to a synchronization with the motion picture subject. These elements are the song, dance and pantomime.

Suggestions for Prologues

We could write reams on comedy ideas which we have been able to glean throughout the field of production, ideas which would be suitable to motion picture production, but in this brief analysis only a few suggestions can be incorporated. For instance, comedy quartets emulating cartoon features may step out of a specially constructed screen and put over a number. There may be artistic travesties on operatic scenes, futuristic and impressionistic scenes with break-a-way scenery, jazz orchestras in comedy garb and roles blending with a hodge-podge of color and situation, acrobatic novelties including bouncing, jumping acts with lobsterscope effects, grotesque and weird costuming, fast moving eccentric dancing in ensemble formations. These are merely a few high spots but for every comedy picture that is produced there is a sure fire comedy theme which may be taken by the producer and translated into a stage presentation which will carry with it the elements of strict comedy or farce, and secure the laugh desired by all who produce for comedy.

Laugh Month means much and to the producer who concentrates, results of an amazing calibre will be attained.

"The Feud"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

EVERYONE of the Van Bibber comedies produced by William Fox have been laugh-getters and "The Feud" is one of the very best of the lot. In addition to having all of the characteristics of the others, it has the advantage not only of an American locale for the action but it is also a clever and highly amusing burlesque of a popular type of motion picture plot, the Kentucky feud. This time, Van is shown touring Kentucky in an auto and before he knows it he has bought an estate and the feud that goes with it. By a succession of typical Van Bibber lucky happenings he discovers a hidden treasure and single-handed overcomes and captures the rival band of feudists. There are a lot of highly amusing situations that will keep you chuckling and two absolutely new gags that are "whizzes." A deaf man asks Van the price of his car as the auctioneer is selling the estate and Van shouts $6,000 which is accepted as a bid then the deaf man asks the price of the most expensive car. When Van shouts $15,000 the house is knocked down to him. Later Van locates the treasure from a map that ends with the instructions to grasp your right thumb forcibly with your left hand and let go suddenly. In doing this his elbow hits the spring of a secret panel in the wall. These two scenes are genuinely funny and should convulse any audience as the laughs are spontaneous and unexpected.—C. S. Sewell.

"Marvels of Motion"

(Red Seal—Novelty—One Reel)

AS with the previous numbers of "Marvels of Motion" Issue "C" takes several subjects which are presented in normal, slow, reversed and stop motion and trick photography combined. The result is interesting and to the uninitiated baffling. The well selected subjects include shots of tennis champions such as Johnson, Tilden, Helen Wills, Alonzo, Patterson, etc.; a dancing team; roping and broncho riding at a rodeo; Ranger, a remarkable jumping horse, bulldogging and a midget trying to ride a burro. —C. S. Sewell.

"The Call of Hazard"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

BUILT along familiar "western" lines this Mustang brand two-reeler featuring Fred Humes develops an average amount of entertainment value by its smooth direction, hard riding and snappy fighting. The hero appears as a cowboy who comes to the defense of the daughter of a traveling patent medicine man when she is attacked by a gambler who has cheated her father. Fred secures evidence that the gambler used marked cards and as a result of a fight following an auto chase in which he follows the villain on horseback and takes a short cut he proves by a scar on the man's shoulder that he is a criminal. Fred wins the reward and the girl.—C. S. Sewell.

"The Gosh Darn Mortgage"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS is a really funny travesty on the favorite melodrama of the stage and screen, replete with typical Mack Sennett gags and atmosphere. The cast includes Thelma Parr, Peggy O'Neill, Douglas Gerrard, Edna Tichenor, Charles Farrell and William McCall. Eddie Cline directed. The stranger from the city starts the trouble. One innocent country maiden is ignored, another is wooed. The father of the unlucky girl, who already has a perfectly good sweetheart, favors the city chap to save the old home. The unwilling bride puts the veil on the willing bride. Then it passes back and forth several times until the city chap and the favored lover aren't quite sure which girl is which. Of course true love triumphs in the end. There are some good chase scenes and the players are excellent in their roles.—Sumner Smith.

"Going Good"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

A VERY familiar slapstick formula has been followed in this Century comedy starring Wanda Wiley, that of the inventor who is harassed by foreign spies who use bombs and other dastardly schemes to gain control of his invention. Wanda first appears as a girl in overalls scrubbing an auto which runs away and happens to be passing when the inventor, to elude the spies jumps from a skyscraper window and lands on the car. There is a chase and an explosion in which each finds themselves in the other's clothes and finally they land in a house where the furniture is all covered with sheets. Figures keep jumping out and stealing the "paper" but finally the inventor wins and proposes to Wanda. There is nothing new in this comedy but it may prove amusing to the dyed-in-the-wool slapstick fans. It is neither as snappy or amusing for the majority as several of Miss Wiley's recent offerings.—C. S. Sewell.

"A Salty Sap"

(Educaational—Comedy—Two Reels)

BILLY DOOLEY scores in this Christie Comedy of a sailor, the butt of all jokes, who comes ashore to collect an inheritance bequeathed to the sappiest member of a family. It is up to him to qualify and this he does by simply acting natural. The evidence is conclusive, particularly when he sets fire to the house and then drowns it in a flood of water from a bath tub faucet he forgot to shut off. Most of the scenes revolve around Dooley while acting natural and other members of the family trying to act nutty. They should canse screams of merriment. Dooley in his make-up looks the part of a perfect fool, so much so that he doesn't have to do much to get the laughs. This subject, however, gives him some good gags and the result is good entertainment. Incidentally, Jack Puffy has a fine part.—Sumner Smith.

"Live Cowards"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

AL ST. JOHN is the chief player in this Mermaid Comedy. Others in the cast are Otto Fries, Virginia Vance, Eva Thatcher, Jack Lloyd and Phil Dunham. The subject follows conventional comedy lines in telling the sad story of newlyweds entertaining their in-laws, with scenes of lions and leopards rampaging the house for a finale. It would be good stuff if it had not been done so often. The actors are capable, the stunts are funny and the action moves with a zip, thanks to the direction of Stephen Roberts and the supervision of Jack White.—Sumner Smith.

"Pathe Review No. 1"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

THE CHIEF feature of this first issue of the 1926 series is a section of Annette Kellermann as a diver before the Knechtel "process camera." It is her second appearance in the Pathe Review and it is much more effective than the first, though that was striking and beautiful. Audiences ought to eat up this issue. Minting the coins of the French Republic is shown under the name of "How to Make Money." Time - lapse cameras register the blooming of American flowers in Pathecolor.—Sumner Smith.

"Prep School"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

IN this issue of the Blue Bird comedies Arthur Lake, the featured player is cast as a chap working his way through prep school by peeling potatoes. He pretends that a noted little dancer is his sweetheart and Eddie as a wealthy chap seeks to have some fun by forcing Arthur to ask her for a dance. The dean who likes Arthur has explained the situation and the girl kisses Arthur and gives him all of her dances to the chagrin of Eddie and the other boys. A picture that is up to the standard of the series and should appeal more especially to the growing generation.—C. S. Sewell.

"Good Producers Laugh at Combines"—Bishop

By KENNETH J. BISHOP
President, Tennek Film Corporation

IT has been my experience that the more talented a showman is, the less he fears combines. The older theatrical men who have watched the many attempts of combinations to "tie up" the theatres of the country in all the different fields of amusements, whether it be the legitimate drama, musical comedy, burlesque, vaudeville or even the fight of the circuses to hog certain territories to the complete exclusion of rival organizations, are perfectly satisfied that real monopoly in the theatre world is an impossibility.

You only have to hark back to the days when Klaw and Erlanger seemed to have the whole theatrical business in the hollow of their hands, probably the nearest approach to a successful combine that the theatre has ever known. Even in those days certain independent producers who gave the public what it wanted managed to make big money and play many of the best theatres, while the smaller independents confined their bookings to the many small circuits of theatres and broke their long jumps with the little one-night-stand magnates who either refused to tie up with a circuit or were not invited to the party.

But the most interesting thing about the Klaw and Erlanger combine from our viewpoint during the present fight for theatres now going on in our own midst is the ease with which it was split wide open by the Shuberts. Theatres were shot up like Florida bungalows opposite the K. and E. houses in every important city and there was a wide open market created during the very years that the combine expected to see their carefully laid plans succeed.

The history of every branch of the show business presents instances that prove how impossible it is for any group of producers and exhibitors to monopolize it. There will always be circuits. This we know from past history. But as long as there is more than one circuit; as long as there are newspapers and magazines to tell the public about meritorious productions; as long as there are clever producers creating pictures the people want to see; popular directors, players and authors that know how to guide the golden stream to box-office windows, we need have no fear of combines.

New producers, new directors, new authors, new stars, new players and new theatres enter our chosen field every day. Also, the contracts the old ones have signed and are now operating under terminate daily. Where is the business genius who can control the raw stock, the finished product, the distribution, and the market for such a product?

Right at the present moment it seems to me that the biggest opportunities for independent producers and distributors, who are not prepared to invest hundreds of thousands of dollars in single productions, are in the short subject field. Short comedies, especially, offer splendid opportunity for large quick returns. If you asked me what the exhibitor needs most today I would say "novelty", and the short subject is his only salvation when it comes to varying his program.

That is the reason that Tennek Film Corporation has adopted the slogan: "A Short Subject, Not A Short Sighted, Policy" or "Variety Is The Spice Of Programs." We are placing great importance on our different series of two-reel comedies and striving hard to make them out-of-the-ordinary. With Fatty Laymon and Charley Dorety, Hank Mann, Chester Conklin, Bill Patton, Stuart Holmes and Clara Horton as stars we have personalities that allow us to introduce wide variety into our different series, while Eileen Sedgwick and the police dog Lightnin,' Queenie the tiger, and the Selig wild animals, the laugh subject, Chuckles, and the Honeymoon Travelogues give us the opportunity we need for interesting novelty pictures.

We fear no combines and can honestly see no reason why anybody in our very exceptional industry need fear them either.

Sterns Offer Prizes for "Laugh Month" Exploitation

SPECIAL prizes to exhibitors are offered by the Stern Brothers for exploitation stunts used with their product during Laugh Month, it was announced this week. The product includes the Buster Brown productions and the Century Comedies released by Universal.

Therewil be three prizes of $25 each, one prize of $15 and one of $10 allotted as follows:

For the best exploitation of a Buster Brown Production during Laugh Month, the Stern Brothers will write the exhibitor a check for $25. The next best Buster Brown exploitation will get $15 and the third best, $10.

For the best exploitation stunt on a Wanda Wiley-Century Comedy, the Sterns will award $25. A similar prize wil be given for the best stunt on an Edna Marion-Century Comedy.

"We hope this will lend additional incentive towards the advertising and exploitation of Short Product during Laugh Month," assert the Sterns. "Many exhibitors realize what god box-office tonic even the simplest exploitation of Short Products means, but far too many theatre men are indifferent on this score. It has been proven time and time again that One Dollar invested in good exploitation is good for Two at the box-office. One hundred per cent on your money is a pretty good return.

"The Buster Brown Productions are ideal subjects for exploitation. Besides offering a variety of national clothing, shoe, hosiery and other ready-made tie-ups, they offer unusual opportunities for any stunt with a child, or toy angle. Reports from various sections of the country are pouring in confirming their availability for simple and effective exploitation."

It is pointed out by the Stern Brothers that exhibitors competiting for hese prizes should send in an account of what they do, with pictures or other material there possible, to the Stern Brothers, 730 Fifth Avenue, New York City, and also to the Contest Committee of the National Laugh Month, 218 West 43rd Street, New York City, as exploitation stunts done during Laugh Month are in line for the previously announced Laugh Month prizes. In case of a tie, the Stern Brothers will award duplicate prizes.

F. HERRICK HERRICK, Director and Producer of the Herrick Productions, "on location" in the making of "Keep It Up" which Davis Distributing Division will put out.

Signing of the Locarno Treaty Shown Exclusively by International News Reel

MOTION PICTURES of the signing of the Locarno Peace Treaty, the making of which created almost as great a sensation as the ratification of the pact itself, are being shown exclusively by International Newsreel in leading motion picture theatres throughout the country.

When the plenipotentiaries of the great European nations gathered in the historic Gold Room of the British Foreign Office and attached their signatures to the Treaty, the most important event of history, since the signing of the Armistice, took place.

Motion picture cameramen from all over the world had followed the great men of the seven European nations through all the stages of the preliminary proceedings at Locarno. Very few realized, however, that it would be possible for a single cameraman to invade the sacred precincts of the Foreign Office in London to record for posterity the actual signing of the Treaty, designed to end war for all time in Europe.

To the consternation of the conservative English press, certain motion picture cameramen were admitted when the pact was signed and the epochal pictures that they made were secured for exclusive distribution in the United States by International Newsreel.

When it was announced that through their enterprise International Newsreel had the exclusive rights in America for the pictures, a great hue and cry was raised by competitors. Not only was the British government appealed to, but the influence of Premier Mussolini, of Foreign Minister Stressemann, of M. Briand, Stanley Baldwin and Austin Chamberlain was sought in an effort to permit others to show the films. When those efforts failed, the State Department at Washington was also appealed to but all attempts met with the same response—That International Newsreel had secured the exclusive rights and was entitled to all the benefits therefrom.

Under heavy guard, and protected by big insurance, negatives of the pictures were brought to this country aboard the Steamer "Homeric."

Prints were made and sent to all parts of the United States and the pictures are now being shown in the important theatres in every town and city.

The exclusive presentation of these pictures in this country by International Newsreel is regarded as one of the most outstanding "beats" in newsreel history.

"Entertainment First" Will Be Producers' Slogan

THAT the majority of picture producing companies will strive for "entertainment first" in their new season for 1926, and for art in pictures as an incidental consideration, is the belief of Al Christie, prominent comedy producer, maker of the famous Christie Comedies, Bobby Vernon Comedies, Walter Hiers Comedies and Jimmie Adams Comedies released by Educational, who bases his claims on the fact that the most popular pictures of the past year have been the big comedy successes.

That these pictures have been the most successful from a popularity standpoint, according to Christie, is proven by the lists which have been made up of the pictures which made the most money for the exhibitors in 1925.

"Gradually the industry has swung back to its first principles," says Christie, who himself is a pioneer and who should remember the early days of filming. "Those first principles of making pictures were 'entertainment' for the masses, whether it was in comedy, romance or melodrama. We are in a business of selling entertainment to the public, and when such pictures now and then achieve artistic merit in addition to their entertainment qualities, so much the better. But first of all they have to be entertainment to register successfully with the public and the exhibitor.

"Because the industry has been convinced of this important consideration in picture making, I believe 1926 will see more companies striving for 'entertainment first' and losing less money striving for art. Incidentally, by reaching out for entertaining pictures, they will probably happen on to art more often.

"It is not necessary to enumerate the pictures which have been the most popular this past year. But if you will stop to think over the pictures you enjoyed the most it is very likely that your favorites will fall into the 'entertainment' class whether they were hilarious comedies, romantic love stories or thrilling melodramas."

EVEN THE ANIMALS ARE IN ON IT—and Neely Edwards, who's making Bluebird comedies for Universal, sees to it that they know what it's all about.

Switching the Spotlight to the Exhibitor

Buckley Helps Albany Elks Raise $1,500

IT took C. H. Buckley, owner of the Leland and Clinton Square Theatres in Albany and the Empire in Glens Falls, to devise a means that easily resulted in the Elks Lodge of Albany raising more than $1,500 that provided Christmas joy for hundreds of boys and girls in the Capital City. When Mr. Buckley learned that the lodge was looking around for the necessary funds, he talked over things with his manager, Alex Sayles, a former newspaperman. The two conceived the idea of a Sunday night show to which every member of the lodge was invited. The feature, as it was disclosed by Mr. Buckley, was to be "Bonds of Happiness," with a suggestion that the evening would be one of pleasant surprise. The Leland, where the entertainment was held, was packed from pit to dome long before the entertainment got under way. It started off like a regular show, a news reel and then a comedy. Then came the surprise, as Judge Daniel H. Prior appeared on the stage and in a very effective speech outlined the needs of the lodge. Within fifteen minutes he had disposed of $1,500 in "Happiness Bonds" and the money was available for the happiness that came to the poor children of Albany on Christmas morning. After the speech and the money had been subscribed, the feature picture of the evening was given.

Clarence Gardner, owner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany, is not averse to taking on another theatre, providing that he can secure just the sort he wishes. He admitted the other night that he has been looking around for another house which may become the nucleus of a chain.

The seven-piece orchestra at the Strand in Schenectady has been discontinued. From now on music will be provided by the organ with Mrs. Gettys presiding at the console. The ten-piece orchestra at the neighboring State Theatre, also a Farley house, will be continued.

Between trying to do his Christmas shopping and doping out entertainment that would put crimps into opposition houses, John Garry, manager of the Empire in Glens Falls, was heard to admit the other day that he will be glad when Christmas is a thing of the past.

The many exhibitors who booked in times past with Mrs. Fred M. Garfield, formerly Marie Wheeler, manager of the Merit exchange in Albany, will extend congratulations and best wishes over the birth of a son. Mrs. Garfield is now residing in Jamestown.

A little bit of advertising and a little bit of Christmas cheer must be the motto of Julius Byck, owner of the Rudolf Theatre in Tannersville. For all of Mr. Byck's friends in Albany have received postcards carrying a picture of the theatre along with the words "Merry Christmas."

Saranac Lake is to have a new theatre opening about January 15. The owner, L. M. Sanschagrin, was along Film Row the past week on his initial booking trip. Mr. Sanschgrin said that he would conduct a contest in the near future in order to choose a name for his house. The theatre came about through a shift that recently occurred in Saranac Lake, leaving Mr. Sanschagrin with a vacant building on his hands. He decided to convert the building into a 400-seat theatre, to which he will charge a 25-cent admission. The house will run six nights a week and there will be an orchestra of three pieces.

Among the out-of-towners along Film Row just before Christmas were Fred Herbs of the Strand in Philmont and W. F. Kennedy, of the Lyceum in Champlain.

The Barcli in Schenectady, managed by Frank Braymaier and one of the Farash houses, will go into second runs on January, with four changes to the week. The house was recently opened after having been closed for several months and has been running to split weeks.

The church of Notre Dame in Schuylerville is $150 better off because of the minstrel and picture benefit recently given at the Broadway Theatre, run by Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Milligan in that village. The Milligans are a whole souled couple always ready to help out the needy, whether it is a church or an individual.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Sequin of Rouses Point, owners of the New Liberty Theatre, are back home after a little vacation with friends in Vermont. Mr. and Mrs. Sequin stopped over in Albany and visited many of the exchanges.

H. Russell Emde, former manager of the Griswold in Troy, has been promoted to the position of resident manager of Proctor's Palace Theatre in Newark, N. J. E. M. Hart, who was formerly in charge of Proctor's Theatre in Troy, and who has also been connected with Proctor houses in Albany and Schenectady, will succeed Mr. Emde as resident manager of the Proctor house in Mount Vernon.

The Rialto in Glens Falls came out a week or so ago with a big newspaper advertisement announcing a Christmas present to the residents of Glens Falls in the shape of reduced admission prices to the theatre, effective at once. A special school children's performance was also given during the past week by the theatre on one of the afternoons.

Employees of the Clinton Square, Leland and Empire theatres, operated by C. H. Buckley of Albany, tucked away a shiny five dollar gold piece on Christmas Eve, the gift of Mr. Buckley.

Fred Mossert of the State in Glens Falls seems to be having much success these days in running quite a number of Westerns. Like all theatres, however, in Glens Falls, the State fell off during the holiday season, the slump being augmented by a two weeks' mission that attracted as high as 2,110 persons a day.

Now that he is getting out a "Reel News" for the Strand group of houses in Albany and Troy, Tony Veiller, manager of the Mark Strand, may be heard talking as glib as can be these days about make-up and editorial position. But, then, Tony was a newspaperman so he may be pardoned.

Lew Fischer is a bit chesty these days, but there is a good reason. He has just finished redecorating his theatre in Hoosick Falls, and the job is so pleasing that he can not refrain from mentioning it to everyone whom he meets.

"The picture theatre business may be all right," remarked John J. Walker, former owner of the Barcli in Schenectady, the other day, "but there certainly is nothing the matter with the Florida real estate game." And with that Mr. Walker shoved $1,600 through the wicket, his profits for the week. Mr. Walker is the Schenectady representative of Florida interests.

It has been definitely decided to name no manager at the Strand in Schenectady. Frank S. Learnan, formerly connected with the State Treasurer's office in Albany, has been named as assistant to James Roach, and between the two it's a safe bet that the Strand will be well looked after.

Congratulations to Peggy Steers. She is now Mrs. Samuel Baker and is back from a honeymoon to Boston and other points. Mrs. Baker was formerly cashier at the Albany Theatre in Schenectady.

South Utica is to have a new picture theatre by Max Lichtman of Utica and Moses Cohen of Old Forge. The theatre will seat 950.

There is one exhibitor in Northern New York who doesn't worry over telephone calls and never asks for a reverse charge. He is J. H. Grappotte, who not only runs the theatre in Cape Vincent but is also the local manager for the telephone company.

Mama Spank

IT occurred at the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany, N. Y. The theatre was well filled. The organ was softly pealing. The air was surcharged with the intense interest of a love scene between the two leading characters on the screen. Then, as if out of a clear sky, and seemingly from nowhere in particular, came the words, "Mama! Mama!"

Patrons shifted uneasily in their seats. Another "Mama!" and the mystery was solved, as a woman, her face reddened in confusion, made her way out of the theatre, but careful, oh so very careful, not to again squeeze the talking doll under her arm and which was to become the prize gift to a certain little girl on Christmas morning.

One Worry

CLAUDE FISH of the American Theatre in Schenectady has few worries. One is the carelessness shown by some directors.

For instance, he recently played a picture which in one scene showed burglars working in the dead of night, but outside could be seen a couple of sparrows pecking away in gathering their meal from the pavement. And if that wasn't bad enough, there came a picture where the heroine plunged head foremost into a pond and then was shown emerging with the finest marcel in the world. Another one was where the hero enters wearing a straw hat, which he hangs on a hatrack, and then goes over before the fireplace and rubs his chilled hands before the blaze.

Massachusetts Theatre Divides Day's Receipts Among Employes

THE Franklin Park Theatre in Dorchester, Mass., celebrated the third anniversary of the Christmas Fund Day on Dceember 17. The entire day's receipts were divided equally among the employes. After the close of the evening performance a banquet took place on the stage.

Paul Kirchner, who recently took over the Grand, Latrobe, has completed extensive alterations, all of which were consummated without closing the house. The theatre has been done over inside and out and presents a most pleasing appearance. The improvements cost Mr. Kirchner in the neighborhood of $15,000. He is making good at the Grand, a house of 700 seats.

Majestic Theatre in Buffalo Sold, Cornell Plans Another

THE Majestic Theatre at Pearl and Genessee streets, Buffalo, has been sold through the McNaughton Realty Company to A. Victor & Co., furniture dealers, who will raze the structure and on its site erect a modern business building. However, the lease has over a year to run so the present policy will continue for some time. Dr. Peter C. Cornell, manager, says plans have been made to acquire a site for a new Majestic.

Calgary Showman Has Plan to Please All

A UNIQUE program arrangement was carried out by Manager John Hazza for the Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, during Christmas Week when he presented a special feature picture at matinees only and then split the week with two other features for evening performances. The matinee picture, as a treat for juvenile patrons, was "Old Clothes," starring Jackie Coogan. For the first half of the week "Exchange of Wives" was the feature for night shows, and for the last three evenings the attraction was "Shamrock." The plan worked out to advantage in suiting all tastes.

Manager D. C. Brown of the Regent Theatre, opened with a special engagement of "Little Annie Rooney" starting December 21, performances being held continuously from noon to 11 p. m. The previous attraction at this downtown house was "The Iron Horse," which played to fine business for three weeks. Before that "The Freshman" drew the crowds for five weeks.

Fred McLennan, manager of the Brock Theatre, Brockville, Ontario, recently presented a repeat engagement of "Charley's Aunt" for two days, the previous occasion on which the feature had been shown at the Brock Theatre being less than five months before. The return run was even more successful than the first presentation, which is going some for a city of 10,000 people.

A ten-piece orchestra and an extra picture now take the place of five acts of vaudeville at the Capital Theatre, Ottowa, Ontario. Manager P. Kansas City exhibitors were given something to ponder over this week when it was announced by Walter A. Beseck, superintendent of buildings, that a city ordinance prohibiting persons in theatres from standing in passageways to aisles would be strictly enforced. The ordinance heretofore has not been enforced.

"If the interpretation of the ordinance means merely that passageways are to be left open, we expect to comply with that, but if it means that persons will not be allowed to stand in foyers or other places away from the aisles, then we will oppose such a measure," said R. R. Biechele, president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri.

The Globe Theatre is the next Kansas City house to fall in line in staging Charleston dancing contests. The preliminaries, staged in the earlier part of the week, attracted much curiosity, from a box office standpoint, in the finals to be staged Friday night.

Jess Fishman, general manager of Standard Film Service, was in the city last week for a few days, spending the time at the local exchange because of the continued illness of Robert Rowan, branch manager, who is confined to his hotel with high blood pressure.

Harry Scott, general manager of Pathe, was in the city last week, conferring with officials at the exchange. Scott used to manage First National in Detroit and was a very popular and efficient executive.

Mr. and Mrs. Glenn D. Brady of the Exhibitors Supply Company, are mourning the loss of their 5-months-old baby, who died suddenly after a short illness.

J. R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox, dropped into Detroit for several days last week to confer with Frank Drew, local manager. While here he declared Fox would have a brand new first-run theatre within a short time.

Cincinnati

Ralph Kinzer, booker for F. B. O. Cincinnati office, has resigned and has been succeeded by George Kirby.

Population of Cincinnati is rapidly increasing. W. A. Shalit, manager of United Artists, is father of a baby boy. Likewise a baby girl has arrived at the home of Arthur Kaspar and wife. Kaspar is booker at the Standard office.

Lewis Thompson, who covers Cincinnati, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Pittsburg and Detroit in capacity of district supervisor of sales for Associated Exhibitors, has had St. Louis added to his territory.

Albany

As Alex Weismann shivers these days in the chilly winds of Northern New York, he recalls that it was only a year ago that he was residing in Mexico City, Mr. Weissmann is now representing the Metro-Goldwyn product.

E. D. Leischman, chief auditor of Universal, visited the Albany branch the past week and then went on to Buffalo.

Leon Herman and Ray S. Smith, Universal salesmen, had a narrow escape from being injured a week or so ago when Mr. Smith's car skidded as the two were on their way back to Albany from Schenectady. The car left the road, overturned and was badly wrecked.

T. G. Myers, special feature representative for Pathe, was in Albany the past week and was over the territory with some of the salesmen.

The family of J. N. Klein moved the past week to Boston, where Mr. Klein will make his headquarters in connection with his present duties with Associated Exhibitors.

Austin Interrante, the new manager for Warner Brothers in Albany, was in Plattsburg and other sections of Northern New York last week.

Harold Filkins, local F. B. O. salesman, is ill at the Memorial Hospital in Albany.

Abe Van Dusen, shipping clerk at the F. B. O. exchange, did some fast work Sunday that was necessary on account of close bookings. Leaving Albany, Mr. Van Dusen went to Coxsackie, where he brought a picture from there to Louis Buettner of Cohoes, and then scurried over to Amsterdam, where he sceured another picture which he hustled over to the American in Troy, catching the openings of all theatres on time.

Texas

Jack Petit has resigned as salesman for Pathe at Dallas.

Jack Underwood has taken over the management of the Enterprise Distributing Corporation at Dallas.

W. C. Winters, former Pathe booker at New Orleans and Charlotte, will assume the duties of head booker in the Dallas office January 1, relieving Harry Sachs, promoted to Pathe home office as inspector booker. Mr. Winters was married recently.

Kansas City

Coat collars were turned up along Kansas City's movie row last week but business was not halted one whit. George Matthews, new representative for the Warner Bros. branch, started out on his first trip into the territory, while the resignaion of R. R. Thompson former Warner representative, was announced. Several changes in the personnel of the First National branch were announced. Ralph Heft, former booker, succeeded Ed Lowery as salesman in Southwest Kansas, while E. P. Behrhorst, former shipping clerk, was promoted to head booker. Sam Spring, secretary-treasurer, and Ned Depinet, division sales manager of First National, were again Kansas City visitors. Five dollar gold pieces are becoming common around the First National branch, as a result of that company's policy in thus rewarding salesmen who obtain the signature of exhibitors not heretofore numbered among the First National fold. Louis Marx, assistant to Fred McConnell, in charge of Universal's complete service plan, was a busy visitor. C. L. Durham, former Metro-Goldwyn representative of St. Louis, has been added to the sales force of that company in Kansas City, succeeding Fred Horn. Louis Rogers, personal representative for "Doc" Shallenberger of Arrow Pictures Corp., was in Kansas City lining up the distribution of his product. Charles Bessenbacher, manager of the Independent Film Corp., made a hurried trip through the territory and returned saying: "There is a Santa Claus." Ed Lowery, former First National salesman, has joined the sales force of the Midwest Film Distributors, Inc. Workmen were busy remodeling the Pathe office, making room for increased business activities.

Chicago

John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of the Producers Distributing Corporation, was in the Chicago offices the first of the month and made a hurried visit to Milwaukee with Cecil Marberry, district manager.

The boys are giving Charley Fulkins, Pathe salesman, the glad hand on his recent marriage to Miss Edna Walters.

More cigars are in order from Harold Loeb of the Fox Exchange, who is the proud father of a fine baby boy born last month. Both mother and boy are doing well, according to the proud father.

The big event of the January season is the inaugural ball which will be indulged in by membership of the Film Board of Trade and friends on January 26. Joe Abramson of the Film Board will handle the details of the big event. J. J. Sampson of F. B. O., is president, George Dembow of Fox is vice-president, Irving Mandell is secretary and Louis Rozelle is treasurer.

Sam Spring, treasurer of First National, was in the city for an informal meeting of the Chicago sales force and Ned Depinet, of the southern division was here with him for the meeting.

Louisville

The Big Feature Rights Corporation of Louisville, Ky., moved last week into its new exchange building erected at 917-23 W. Jefferson street, Louisville. Colonel Fred Levy is president and Lee L. Goldberg secretary of the corporation, which has grown with astounding rapidity during the past nine years. "From a bathtub to a big film exchange" is the heading of a letter addressed by Mr. Goldberg to exhibitors in his territory. Mr. Goldberg refers to the time, nine years ago, when the entire exchange quarters consisted of a small theatre dressing room, the films being stored in a bathtub. The personnel comprised Mr. Goldberg, Mr. Starkey, salesman, and a stenographer. The company now employs approximately fifty men and women.

"Bluebeard's Seven Wives"—First National

Ben Lyon, Lois Wilson and Blanche Sweet in Satire on Picture Making Filled with Laughs

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

MOTION PICTURES and their making come in for good-natured kidding that will provide enjoyment not only for those in the industry, but the general public as well in the Robert Kane production "Bluebeard's Seven Wives" directed by Alfred A. Santell for First National.

A plodding bank clerk is so worried because his waitress-sweetheart turns him down because he won't grow a mustache that he gets mixed in his accounts and is fired. Unable to land a job he tries to land as an extra in the movies but fails. The hero of the picture does not show up and the conceited director, to demonstrate that he is a genius, picks the poor clerk, John, for the role, discovers he has sex appeal and persuades the producers to sign him as a star. The press agent gets busy, gives him a Spanish name and proceeds to fill the newspapers with storise of his marriage to seven famous stars and how he leaves each just after the wedding. John, however, tires of the "Bluebeard" role, balks at the seventh wife and stealing away marries his real sweetheart and hides on a little farm.

There is no hint of the "Bluebeard" idea until late in the picture but the earlier reels are filled with really clever satire on picture making. The high-and-mighty director with his satellites bowing low and "yessing" him; his discovery and moulding of the "human clay" into a screen star; the go-get-'em space-grabbing methods of the press agent; the efforts of the producers to hold the new star down to the smallest salary and how he unconsciously outwits them; the solicitude of one partner for his "Louie Fourteen" desk that the press agent keeps putting his feet on; the way all the young dandies copy the star's mustache and manner; the wild scramble to locate the star when he disappears and the way he and his wife elude the producers by pretending entire ignorance of the movies, are all extremely funny. Aided by clever subtitles they insure laughter.

The story is a good natured farce with a smooth running and amusing story that holds the interest. It has been admirably directed by Alfred Santell so as to get the maximum of merriment.

Ben Lyon is fine both as the dashing romantic star and as the hum-drum spectacled bank clerk. His feminine fans are due for a revelation when they see him as a bum with several days' growth of beard. There is an excellent cast, for featured with Lyon is Lois Wilson as his waitress-sweetheart in a pleasing and sympathetic role and Blanche Sweet who plays opposite him in the sequence, where, in keeping with the spirit of the story the new star is shown in a picture "Purple Passions" and an up-to-date and snappy and considerably changed version of "Romeo and Juliet." One of the best performances is that of Sam Hardy as the press agent who supplies a lot of smiles and pep, but Dick Bernard in a Perlmutter type of role as one of the producers contributes his share and Dan Pennell is excellent as the director.

Your audiences will like "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," the cast will attract them, they will laugh at the scenes poking fun at movie-making and enjoy the genuine comedy. This film should put a box-office smile on your face.

"The Splendid Crime"—Paramount

William DeMille's Smooth and Pleasing Story Provides Effective Vehicle for Bebe Daniels

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

SWINGING into the present trend with an original story, William De Mille strives for no unusual or spectacular effects in "The Splendid Crime," for Paramount, but does achieve an interesting and often engrossing story along familiar lines, but worked out with the smoothness which is the hallmark of his direction.

It offers Bebe Daniels in the role of a girl crook who is caught by a wealthy young man as she steals through the hall to open the door to her confederates. He reads her a lecture and leaves her alone with a roll of bills, telling her that it is up to her to prove whether or not she is a good sport. She leaves the bills but takes his photograph, leaving half a dollar in exchange, and with the photograph to give her the courage, she goes straight, and finds employment as a dressmaker.

In time she comes to the man's house to do some work for his sister. Meanwhile he has risked his fortune in speculation. More margin is required and his money is gone. He is tempted to take the life savings of his housekeeper, which she has entrusted to him for investment, but the girl urges him not to, and when she finds that he is over tempted, she gets her former partner to open the safe for her and takes the money to remove temptation. Touched, he faces poverty, permits the margin account to be wiped out and gets a job as golf instructor. Then he comes to her to claim his reward.

It is all a bit trite; though you rejoice in the fact that the happy ending is not arrived at through a miraculous recovery of the stock market. Apart from this, the story is along somewhat familiar lines and derives its chief appeal through the smooth development and the comedy.

Bebe Daniels does an unusually good bit of work as the girl. She is sincere and convincing. It is the best work she has yet done in a dramatic role. Neil Hamilton, as the man, is appealing in spite of his weakness, and Fred Walton is artistic in every gesture. His every motion and expression is well considered, but the work is too thoroughly in the picture to command the attention he deserves. Lloyd Corrigan, as the other crook, is also well in the picture. The others are all competent, thoroughly so, and the ensemble work contributes in no small degree to the success of the picture. It is thoroughly good entertainment, except for the subtitles, which are never good and sometimes very bad.

"The Wedding Song"—Prod. Dist. Corp.

Splendid Entertainment Picture, Replete with Comedy and Heart Interest, Showing Leatrice Joy at Her Best

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

IN "The Wedding Song," from the novel by Ethel Watts Mumford, Producers Distributing Corporation has a picture of unquestioned artistic appeal and box office value. It is one of the most entertaining pictures we have seen in a long time, combining excellent comedy, real heart interest and a striking realistic melodramatic climax. The situations, emphasized by unvarying fine subtitles by George Marion, Jr., are a series of kicks, first to the humor and then to the emotions.

The story concerns a youthful pearl king who leaves his Pacific island only to become the potential victim of a band of clever and desperate crooks. He marries a beautiful girl—one of the band—and she later repents because of her love for him.

The plot, therefore, is one which has become trite and shop-worn. But the situations and the characters utilized by the author are so striking and their transference to the screen by Director Alan Hale so deftly accomplished that the result is a picture which captures the fancy at the beginning and grips the interest to the last foot.

Leatrice Joy's work as the girl crook could hardly be improved upon. She screens magnificently and she scores whether in comic or dramatic moments. Robert Ames is generally fine as the gullible youth. He is well cast and his acting enlists the sympathies. Charles Gerard has a strong part as the brains of the gang, and Gertrude Claire is simply corking as Grandma, a sweet-faced old lady crook. Ethel Wales as Auntie has a slighter role than Gerard and Miss Claire, but scores nevertheless. All the others are good.

This picture ought to go far in increasing the prestige of Alan Hale. He has directed a couple of other pictures—just how many we don't remember just now — and has shown promise. In "The Wedding Song" he demonstrates that as a dircctor of entertainment pictures he must be reckoned with in the future. Under his direction the acting is splendid and the scening particularly fine. He moves incidental, atmospherical players about the set very cleverly. They are inobstrusive, yet contribute a finishing touch to the scene. Furthermore, Hale selected beautiful exterior backgrounds and picturesque interiors. Real gems of humor are the scenes where the crooks, posing as a friendly family, welcomes the lamb to the fold and wax genial over the dinner table.

The subtitles, as we said before, are great. They increase the value of the comedy situations a hundred per cent. The first half of the picture is a series of all kinds of laughs —chuckles, the kind that show the teeth and the convulsive kind. The latter half of the picture moves swiftly and it will keep the audience on the edges of the chairs. There are many good directors in this business who can learn something about stressing situations to their exact value and giving a picture smoothness of movement by seeing Alan Hale's picture. But, then, they don't often get such a good story to work with as Hale got.

"Tumbleweeds"—United Artists

William S. Hart Has a Typical Role in Stirring Land Rush Story with Plenty of Punch and Action

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

FOR the first time in nearly two years a new William S. Hart production is being offered to exhibitors. It is "Tumbleweeds," which is being distributed by United Artists Corporation and produced under the direction of King Baggot.

The story which has been produced on a big scale deals with the driving out of the cattlemen and their herds from the Cherokee strip lying between Oklahoma and Kansas and the opening of this territory about thirty years ago to homesteaders. Hart appears as Don Carver, a cattleman, who resents this act until he meets Molly, one of the incoming horde, seeking a home. He determines to stake his old ranch at Box K for her. Through the villainy of her half-brother he is arrested for entering the strip too soon when he goes to round up stray cattle. Breaking out of the stockade he is able because of his fleet horse to outdistance the others but finds the villain ahead of him. His action is misunderstood and the girl throws him down, however, it all comes out all right in the end.

The presence of William S. Hart in this picture is naturally the chief point of interest and his legion of admirers will find that he has been provided with a typical "Hart" role in the character of Don Carver and handles it in the manner which made him famous as a "western" star. He is seen as a strong silent man, ever-ready to champion the weak and oppressed, whether human or animal; a cowboy intensely partial to his cattle, a man quick on the draw and deadly accurate with his gat, a virile he-man but a bashful lover. In short, he is the same William S. Hart that millions liked in a role cut and tailored to exhibit the characteristics that made him the idol of millions.

The title is the name of a desert plant that is blown about by the winds and which the cowboys have applied to themselves to indicate their roving nature. Little of the story deals with cattle as the story opens with the ranchers being ordered off the land they have rented from the Indians. A strong sympathy is built up for them and they are shown as naturally opposed to the incoming homesteaders. There are a number of effective shots of vast herds of cattle as the cowmen are shown moving their stock off the strip.

Concentration of the story on the land rush gives good opportunities for stirring action and the scheming of the villains and their defeat by the hero furnishes good punch melodrama, while the romantic angle is pleasing. There is an effective and typical Hart touch where he uncomplainingly accepts the heroine's rebuke and prepares to leave the country, believing he has lost her.

The picture starts off at a leisurely pace, but continues to gain momentum and from the beginning of the land rush to the final flash there is no dearth of rapid and effective action, which is punctuated with good comedy relief supplied by Lucien Littlefield as the star's eccentric pal.

King Baggot has smoothly and finely directed this production. He has built up wonderful suspense in the scenes just preceding the firing of the gun to start the rush, which will get the spectators' nerves on edge, and has put over the stampede with a big punch. This is handled on a gigantic scale with hundreds of men and women of all classes and ages on horseback and in all kinds of conveyances from high bicycles to prairie schooners dashing madly for the coveted property. This is an honest-to-goodness punch, and Oh, boy, the way Hart breaks from the stockade, mounts his horse and outdistances everyone will provide thrill after thrill for all who like fine riding. Why there are scenes where his horse's feet seem to be leaping through the air, barely touching the ground. These scenes should "get" anyone who likes action.

Barbara Bedford is charming as the girl in the quaint dress of that period and Littlefield contributes an effective characterization. J. Gordon Russell and R. Richard Neill are all that could be desired as the villains and the others are satisfactory.

In "Tumbleweeds" William S. Hart not only has a stronger story with decidedly more punch and action than his more recent productions, but a thoroughly congenial and typical role. The star will draw them in and the picture should please Hart fans and the public in general and prove a good box-office attraction.

"His Secretary"—Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Norma Shearer Again Scores Heavily in Widely Contrasting Roles in an Amusing Light Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

AGAIN we take off our hat to Norma Shearer. In "The Lady of the Night" she revealed exceptional ability in character roles as a tough and jazzy girl of the underworld. Now, in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picture "His Secretary" in which she is starred, she adds to her gallery of achievements an even finer performance as a severely plain, unattractive and old-maidish type of stenographer, which stands out even more forcibly by contrast with her portrayal of the stylish beautiful girl in the later reels.

"His Secretary" is good clean comedy, never boisterous but with a rapid succession of smiles and chuckles to keep an audience in good humor, arising legitimately out of the situations. The "plot" is slight but so smoothly has it been directed by Hobart Henley with such a wealth of bright little human touches and real comedy happenings and so excellently played by the leading trio, Norma Shearer, Lew Cody and Willard Louis that it is decidedly worth-while entertainment, the kind that leaves the spectator with a pleased smile of satisfaction.

Ruth, an ugly-duckling type of office worker adores Colman the junior partner. Sloden the senior partner is caught by his wife flirting with his beautiful secretary. To play a joke on him, Colman "fixes" matters by arranging for Ruth to acompany him on a business trip, remarking that he would not kiss a face like that for a thousand dollars. Ruth, stung by this remark which she overhears, goes to a beauty specialist and is "made over" into a stunning woman, blossoming out in stylish rainment. The The scheme works, Colman falls for her. With the aid of the janitor, she arranges a trap and when Colman kisses her makes him give a check for a thousand. Then she reveals the deception and all ends happily.

Miss Shearer demonstrates her talents by her remarkable performance as the ugly stenographer. By her make-up she succeeds in obliterating all her natural charm and her entire acting and every gesture is thoroughly in keeping with the character. She holds the attention just as firmly as when she is seen as her own attractive self. Lew Cody as an easy-going somewhat cynical man-about-town and Willard Louis as the flirtatious married man both give fine performances. The work of these three dovetail into each other and provide a wealth of good comedy. Karl Dane, who made such a hit in "The Big Parade," gives a good account of himself in a bit as a thick-witted Janitor.

"The Perfect Clown"—Chadwick

Larry Semon Has Familiar Type of Role in His New Feature Comedy Directed by Fred Newmeyer

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

FOR his second feature comedy for Chadwick Pictures Corporation which is being distributed on the independent market following "The Wizard of Oz," Larry Semon is being presented by I. E. Chadwick in "A Perfect Clown" which was directed by Fred Newmeyer.

Larry appears as an office clerk who has considerable trouble with his Irish landlady and her burly husband over his board bill. He finally gets away arriving at the office so late the boss wants to fire him, but he is saved as his girl has punched the time-clock. Later in the day he is given a satchel of money to take to the bank which he finds closed and all night he and the negro porter wander in fear of burglars. Finally they encounter two and are forced to exchange clothes. They are chased by a horde of cops but reach the office next day and find that the money is in another satchel.

Most of the gags are of a familiar sort. The best two, which are sure laughs, are where Larry slides off a pile of lumber into a cordon of cops and when his sweetheart sees him in convict garb and wants to know what he means by coming to the office in his pajamas. While a number of the situations are amusing for the slapstick fans the action lacks snap as there is hardly sufficient material for the footage that has been used and no new gags are introduced.

There are fewer stunts and trick stuff than is usual in a Larry Semon comedy, but otherwise Larry gives a typical performance. Oliver Hardy, a familiar figure in Semon's pictures appears as the rough landlord and Dorothy Dwan is attractive as the girl, with Otis Harland as the boss and Kate Brice as the landlady. G. H. Black as the negro porter is a good foil for Larry.

Larry Semon fans will probably find considerable to amuse them and slapstick fans will note considerable material that they have laughed at in other pictures. As a whole it is not up to this star's average.

"The Cowboy Musketeer"—F. B. O.

Tom Tyler's Newest Is Entertaining Western Dealing with Fight Over a Hidden Gold Mine

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

AN EXCEPTIONALLY well-handled rescue scene introducing a new stunt, provides a good thrill and regular hair-trigger suspense to "The Cowboy Musketeer," the latest vehicle for Tom Tyler, the new F. B. O. western star, raising it above the average of this class as an audience attraction.

A variation of the several "western" formulas provides the story. A rancher dies just before he imparts to his daughter the secret of a map showing the location of a gold mine. The crooked foreman seeking this information hires a desperado. A wandering cowboy learns of the girl's plight, poses as the thug and after finding the map hidden in a bracelet, succeeds in outwitting the crooks and winning the girl.

The action follows along the usual lines and even the punch climax starts out as if it was going to be just a repetition of the familiar situation where the hero ropes the girl as the auto plunges over the cliff; but—the rope slips and as she faints it seems as if it would strangle her. Gradually it slips entirely over her head and her limp body begins to fall as the soft earth on the cliffside crumbles. Of course the hero reaches her in time, but there is splendid suspense and a thrill for the fans in the meantime. There are some good shots of a cattle stampede and another rescue here, but it is toned down so as not to anticlimax the big punch.

Tom Tyler continues to maintain the good impression of his earlier films, as a likeable hero of good personality, a fine rider and fighter and he should grow in popularity with the fans. Little Frankie Darro again demonstrates that he is one of the cleverest child actors and adds a pleasing touch to the action and a good human interest note.

"The Cowboy Musketeer" should prove a popular attraction with the majority of "Western" fans.

THREE MILES OUT. (5,700 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. A good show but not as much comedy as press sheet would have you believe. Why didn't the producers put Harrison Ford's name on the advertising? Tone, fair. Sunday, possibly. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Theatre (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

UNDER THE ROUGE. (6,055 feet). Star, Owen Moore. A good underworld picture. It pleased fairly well here and would say as a program picture you'll get no great amount of censure in playing it. Attendance good. Weather fine. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

YANKEE CONSUL. Star, Douglas McLean. Splendid picture with lots of chuckles. Several laughs and a few thrills. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers, town of 110. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Theatre (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

F. B. O.

AIR HAWK. (5 reels). Star, Al Wilson. A good thrill picture. Good print. Everybody pleased; showed it at Bellwood Saturday night. Went over good. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

ALIAS MARY FLYNN. Star, Evelyn Brent. Good thrilling crook drama. The kind the average theatre goer clamors for. Tone, good. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five percent. Working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre, Greenville, South Carolina.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,000 ft.) Star, Richard Talmadge. Very good. Plenty of action. Not much story but the kids like it and if your patrons like scraps and plenty of them book it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty percent. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Bathchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Good western. Horse does his stuff. Best Thomson I ever had. Excellent appeal. Tone, good Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farm class city of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (200 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. A fine western picture lots of action. A good child's part, and plenty of action Play this one. Good story that will draw. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

DANGER AHEAD. Star, Richard Talmadge. Of all stars Dick is the best. He puts the punch in his pictures. A very good picture. Sunday, yes. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,301 feet), Star, Mary Carr. A little bit surprised on this as there was quite some protest regarding the picture's inconsistency, the patrons have cause for this because it's far fetched in some ways, but as an audience picture play would say it will go over. It's no "Over the Hill," don't be told that it is, and if you pay too much for this you may get in trouble. Weather fair, attendance fairly good only, and this despite a lot of publicity on the subject. Those who attended the matinee must have knocked for the night business was way off and no competition, those are my reasons for buying this picture carefully. A good program picture, and I can't say more for it. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Happy New Year!

We exhibitors who constitute the members of that fraternity of good will which our fellow-scout H. H. Hedberg, gave the name to — "Our Gang" — wish every exhibitor success for the coming year.

We wish he'd send dependable tips, too. They make the success more certain. OUR GANG.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,301 ft). Star, Mary Carr. Good audience appeal. Prints new. F. B. O.'s gold bond special. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five percent. Farm class town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (200 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

FIGHTING DEMON. Star, Richard Talmadge. Good picture, plenty of thrills. Talmadge popular here. Tone, good. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Thomson is a good drawing card in this town. His pictures have all been good and his horse Silver King is about the best on the screen. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. Rural class town of 700. Admission 10-25. W. C. Whiting. Opera House (250 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

HEADS UP. Star, Lefty Flynn. Again I say F. B. O. has the pictures not because that I stand good with them, but right down to the bottom of my heart I know they have action pictures that please and not in twelve reels either, they're in five or six reels so people don't get tired. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Not a special. Excellent appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

RANGE TERROR. (4,738 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Very good for Saturday show, people turned out to see it and no complaints registered, business held up to average for Saturday, plenty of action. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

RIDING COMET. Star, Yakima Canutt. Good western subject, but star not too popular. Tone, good. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

WHITE THUNDER. Star, Yakima Canutt. Oh boy! What a picture. What became of "Yak" lately. I hear no more about him. Come out "Yak" and thrill the public again. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. All to the mustard. Recommend Thomson and all his pictures to my brother exhibitors. Tone, excellent. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star cast. A wonderful picture. Every theatre should play it. Democrats will not like it as well as Republicans. Had bad weather here. No big attendance but no fault of picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

ANNA CHRISTIE. (7,631 feet). Star cast. A picture that will not please the better class of people. No great amount of action. An underworld story that will only please the roughnecks. Tone, no good. Sunday and special, no. Fifty per cent. appeal. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

ANNA CHRISTIE. (7,631 feet). Star, Blanche Sweet. Too gruesome, morbid. Rental too high. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHITE FANG. (5,600 feet). Star, Strongheart. Outside of the dog there is nothing to it. The poorest dog picture to date and that probably accounts for the reason that First National didn't distribute it. Tone, questionable. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Sills' stock took a drop on this one. The rank title would kill it for any decent audience. Shame on 'em! Tone, poor. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats). Decorah, Iowa.

BLACK OXEN. (7,831 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A picture that did not please the patrons. Rental too high for this small town. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BORN RICH. (7,511 feet). Star cast. Good picture, worth seeing. Rental too high. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BRIGHT SHAWL. Star, Richard Barthelmess. Just an ordinary program picture which failed to register at the box office on a one day's showing, business fell below normal. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A fair picture that was sold too high for the drawing power. Pleased about seventy-five per cent. of the people. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Drew good business for me Sunday and then fell off Monday, Tuesday. The publicity given this picture did not avail me anything in this neck of the woods. Town 5,000, nothing to depend on except farming community. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

CHICKIE. (7,000 ft). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Drew fairly good on account of story having run as serial in newspaper, otherwise probably wouldn't have done much. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

DESERT FLOWER. (6,837 ft). Star, Colleen Moore. For us this was a good bet at the box office. Drew all classes for two days, to good business. Dairy and farming country. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farming and dairy class town of 1,750. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

I WANT MY MAN. (6,174 ft). Star, Milton taining. Title was nothing to attract attaining . Title was nothing to attract attention, therefore, business was off. Instead of increasing second night it decreased more than one third. Tone, bad. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty percent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

NECESSARY EVIL. (8,307 ft.) Star, Ben Lyons. Good entertainment but it failed to draw, like most of the First National's the title seems to be misleading, whenever we play a picture with a title of that nature I can expect to do no business. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, not much. Farming and dairy class town of 1,750. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre. (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

SEA HAWK. (12 reels). Star, Milton Sills. This is a wonderful high powered picture and pleased all my patrons who came to see it. Don't believe it is a picture for the small exhibitor; however, if you advertise it heavy you will get results. Had opposition so just made expenses but a good advertisement for the theatre at that. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (8 reels). Star, Ronald Coleman. A first class program picture and prints in good shape. Bought it right and made a little money. Don't be afraid to buy this one for you can't lose. Had lots of fine comments from those who saw it. Had a good Saturday night crowd. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred percent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

Fox

AS NO MAN HAS LOVED. Star cast. This is a wonderful picture that went over to good business by a tie-up with the Parent Teachers Association. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Town and rural class in small town. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 ft). Star, Tom Mix. Now Tom lay off this type. They don't like you all dolled up with a feather in your hat. No matter how much action there is in the picture they stay away. Very good, but not your sort. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, fifty-fifty. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

GOLD AND THE GIRL. (4,512 ft). Star, Buck Jones. A western mining camp story that gives Buck Jones an opportunity to pull off some of the stuff that has given him his reputation. The plot is along familiar lines with the hero posing as a miner sent to clean up a lot of crooks who are holding up gold shipments. A dog in the cast stages some really good stunts. This kind of a picture will pack your house on a Saturday night. Tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. One of the best racing dramas. It is supposed to be a horse telling her life story and some short shots of the World's best race horses. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeals to all classes. Country class town of

Between Ourselves

A get together place where we can talk things over

The Index to Reports for the six months ending with our last issue took up so much room that I couldn't get any reports in that issue at all.

Because of the necessity for holding back the Index till the last minute to get in the dates of latest reports, the make-up of pages was delayed until too close to press time to give me leeway to add any pages. That's why—in case you wondered. VAN.

1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas. B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

ROUGHNECK. (7,619 ft). Star, George O'Brien. Fox certainly is dirty in that they will substitute a show in the last minutes thereby causing the exhibitor to lose all he has invested in the way of advertising. We were to have "Warrens of Virginia." Show was good but the audience didn't want to see it. They wanted what they paid for. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

THANK YOU. Star, George O'Brien. Alec Francis runs away with the honors in this one. However, story nothing to rave over, in fact, very ordinary program picture. One cannot conceive George O'Brien as a jazz clown blowing chicken feathers at his sweetheart, after such wonderful work in "The Iron Horse" and other serious pictures. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

THAT FRENCH LADY. Star, Shirley Mason. Very good program picture. Suspense and mirth go hand in hand. The characters are good in this one. Will please most any patronage. Tone and appeal, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

WINNER TAKE ALL. Star, Buck Jones. If you like action stuff don't pass this one up. It has a ring fight that will make you take notice and you will also notice they like it. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. The horse racing doesn't amount to so much but the story underlying it is about as good as has been seen in that kind of a drama. Some good racing scenes that should appeal and many humorous bits. A good show. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Metro-Goldwyn

LIGHTS OF OLD BROADWAY. (6,437 ft). Star, Marion Davies. A good picture with Marion in a dual role. Good for any house but a better bet if you cater to the Irish. All Cosmopolitan pictures cost me a big price, so I don't make anything, being in a small town. Title hurt the drawing power of the picture. Did a better business on "Zander the Great." Print new. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Poor appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MERRY WIDOW. Star, Mae Murray. A great picture, Mae Murray does the best acting of her career and John Gilbert wonderful. Credit goes to von Stroheim. Director can't be beat. Boys, don't depend on exploitation men that is promised you. You either get none at all or an office boy that doesn't know the first thing about pictures. Get out and exploit it yourself and pull it over big. It's worth it. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

MERRY WIDOW. (10,028 ft). Star, Mae Murray. What a relief when you compare this picture to Eric von Stroheim's first (supposed to be) masterpiece "Greed." You all know "Greed" was for the junk pile, but boys here's something in the gay, glorious, and romantic type that the better class will eat up. Gilbert and Murray wonderful, by Roy D'Arcy as the Crown Prince walks away with the picture. It just had to snow on days that I ran this so didn't do as well as I expected. Beautiful settings. New print. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SNOB. (6,913 ft). Star cast. Here's a real pippin' with one hundred percent entertainment and picture value; it's bound to get under the skin of any audience anywhere; better than most specials; something real and natural about it because it is human. Opera House (1,000 seats), Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

Paramount

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE. (6,586 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A contribution to the screen that is a gem and a classic. Your people will like this one boys, sure pop. Florence Vidor and Adolph Menjou as the parents and fascinating Betty Bronson as the daughter are simply irresistible. A production that is perfect. Well, our folks all came out a-smiling. Don't miss it. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This picture will please the leisure classes more than the working people. Had good comments on this. Do not believe action fans will like it. They want too much money for this. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 ft). Star, Gloria

Swanson. Gloria doesn't mean a thing here, though this one pulled because the paper showed her in a bathing suit but at that we wonder just where the physical attraction is. Patrons laughed during her most serious moments at her apparent emulation of Bernhardt; it's a pathetic burlesque. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy percent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

CROWDED HOUR. (6,508 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A program show that we played on a Saturday which pleased our audience about fifty-fifty. They could have made this in fewer reels and saved some good film. Tone, good. Special, never. Fair appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. We missed out on this on the first night but pleased those that came second night. It is an excellent program with Miss Joy taking an excellent part. Tone, good. Special, no. Fine appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LAWFUL LARCENY. Star cast. We have played lots of Paramount pictures, but here is one just as good as many of their specials and lots better than most of them. Well made and interesting; it's away from the threadbare theme we have seen so much of. Opera House (1,000 seats), Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Rather a light entertainment, but had no serious kicks. Think it a very passable picture and one, if bolstered up with a good "filler" program, should get you some profit. Weather rainy; attendance good. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MARRY ME. (5,526 feet). A much overrated picture. Not action enough to satisfy average person. Too slow and draggy. Fair tone. Sunday, no, and for special. Fair appeal. Draw rural class, town about 1,450. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 ft). Star, Bebe Daniels. A splendid comedy with Raymond Griffith thrown in for good measure. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton, Altoona, Canada.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Raaymond Griffith. A very fine comdey feature. Griffith will make a splendid comedy star if continued in this calibre picture. Fair box office value. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

PONY EXPRESS. Star, Betty Compson. Excellent. Better than the "Wagon." Should break records, did here. Cruze's best production. Fellows clean up on this one. Everyone will like it. Got fifty cents on run, and an Indian orchestra with picture. Best program we ever had. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good comedy and pleased everyone. MacLean is getting to be a very good comedian and his pictures satisfy and send them home in good humor. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fair. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Plenty of scandal but as Gloria Swanson played in it it got by. plenty of gowns, also LaRocque and Cortez good in support. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. Mildred B. Russell, Benton Theatre (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

STREET OF FORGOTTEN MEN. (6,986 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A very fine picture. Well acted and carries a splendid moral. The picture is full of pathos, yet never becomes boresome. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. I cannot add to the good things said about this picture. One patron said: You can afford to run such a picture once in a while even if you make nothing on it as it will give prestige to your house. Financially, my experience with specials has not been good but I made some money on this. I hope to get it again later to run at regular prices. Sunday and special, yes. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents, specials, 25-50. L. E. Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,802 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A light enjoyable photoplay all about a husband and wife who cannot agree; the wife gets an interlocutory decree of divorce but at the end of the year limited absence makes her heart grow fonder and with the help of grandma prevents his marriage to a rival and they become reconciled. I guarantee this picture. Will please your people. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. The color a novelty well done. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

WILD HORSE MESA. (8 reels). Star, Jack Holt. We consider this an extra good western picture. It seemed to please eighty-five percent of our audience. Some thought the ending tame and should have ended with a thrill in catching the white horse. We ran this picture two nights. Snow storm second night, but had a larger crowd than the first night. Consider the picture a special. Town of 860. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (245 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. Very good western had some action, lots of scenery in fact most anything you could want in the outdoor picture. Tone and appeal, good. Surday and special, yes. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. This is a very good Zane Grey picture, however, nothing to rave about, and not worth the price asked, when you compare it with other pictures better for less money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes, town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriver, Oneida Theatre (225 seats), Oneida, South Dakota.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. Many exhibitors have panned this one but I thought it was very good, although not as good as other Zane Grey stories. The scene of the wild horse stampede was wonderful. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

In Disguise!

It isn't often that the folks in "Our Gang" let anybody see what they look like—although we'd all be glad to see each other's "phiz" and learn each other's show-life history.

But here's one of the "Gang" who comes in—but in disguise!.

"This is the way I imitated 'Charley's Aunt' (in exploiting the Pro-Dis-Co picture of that name) and distributed 'cat' heralds through the business section of this little city.

"It packed them in and besides I got quite a little 'kick' out of it. Many patrons did not know me in this outfit.

"The picture pleased one hundred per cent."—G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, Cloverdale, California.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star, Rex (horse). A wonderful picture and out of the run of the usual pictures. Pleased all who saw it. What more can you ask. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Excellent appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Of course Lloyd is always good but he will have to try again and probably several times before he makes another as god as "Granma's Boy." What do you say? Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This one pleased but the exchange got all the money. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture is absolutely there, best thing Lloyd ever made and will make you plenty of money providing you buy it right, it's about a fifty-fifty proposition, and should be bought with this point in view. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-nine per cent. All classes town of 2,000.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Positively the greatest thing Lloyd has ever done. The best of all is the football game if this don't bring down the house then the audience is dead. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Ran to capacity of house two nights and it's a good one. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. O. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valiant, Oklahoma.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 ft). Star, Syd Chaplin. Well boys, here is a feature comedy that kept them talking in my towns for days after a perfect wow. Advertise it, play it. Make a little cash. Tone and appeal, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

OFF THE HIGHWAY. Star, William V. Mong. An artistic picture if ever there was one and my dear friend "Billy" Mong does the best work of his career. This is an unusual picture and is going to mean much at your box office unless you go after it. It's fit for any man's theatre and I would have done a lot more than I did had the weather given the picture an even break. Weather, rain. Attendance considering the elements, good. Not a special but a program picture of class. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 ft). Star, Harry Carey. This is a fair Carey production but not as good as some of his former pictures. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 feet. Star, Harry Carey. This is the worst picture Carey has turned out in some time and failed to please or draw. It is a fair program picture and you may get by with it as such but don't feature this one. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis. Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

TEXAS TRAIL. (4,720 feet). Star, Harry Carey. The poorest picture of Carey I have yet had in the series, even the Carey fans kicked. Tone, good. Special, no. Poor appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 ft). Star cast. A very good picture. Should please all. To me it is better than "Covered Wagon." Sunday and special, yes. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

DON Q, SON OF ZORRO. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is a wonderful picture but there are many that have beat it at the box office. I played this in the cream of the seasons three days to less business than I did on "Wild Horse Mesa" in two days in hot weather. "America" and "Pony Express" both beat in two days. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

Universal

CALGARY STAMPEDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. Three days to good business. Picture liked by all. A great rodeo. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

JACK HOXIE, Universal star, is now making a series of Westerns along new lines that are rapidly growing in public favor.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD. Star, Reginald Denny. A picture which should suit everyone. Full of good comedy. Tom Wilson as the colored cook almost steals the honors. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

CIRCUS CYCLONE. Star, Art Acord. A new star for my house and did not draw but the horse and dog make an exceptionally entertaining feature out of it. The horse has possibility but don't believe the dog will get far. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Good western program picture. Audience well pleased with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples' Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 ft). Star, Baby Peggy. A fine picture. Played Andy Gump in Hollywood with this. The poorest Gump I ever looked at, but the picture went over fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre, Grantsville, West Virginia.

FAST WORKER. Star, Laura LaPlante. Very good, but not up to "Sporting Youth," at least that was what my folks said about it. Tone and appeal, good. Small town class and farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A goodly number for my crowd like the Westerns and seem to get a thrill from them. This was my first Hoxie and it pleased. Not a special. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

GOOSE WOMAN. (7,500 feet). Star, Louise Dresser. This is a fine picture. A little heavy but dramatically very fine. Capable directing and acting and the author Rex Beach has drawing power at the box office. It is not like most of his stories though, so should be advertised, emphasizing the drama, not the action. Sunday and special, yes. Universal class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

GOOSE WOMAN. Star, Louise Dresser. A film classic from every angle, but you must go after this; here where they rather like the comic side of things (seeing so much of the other) they turned out well and attended at night, which is the best indication of a picture's value, for I have a word-of-mouth audience, and very eloquent in their likes and dislikes. Weather fine. Attendance, excellent. I should pronounce this a special. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HEAD WINDS. Star, House Peters. Just another sea story. They never do go over here so why crab about this one in particular. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 ft). Star, Reginald Denny. Good feature comedy. Special, no. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton, Altoona, Canada.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 ft). Star, Reginald Denny. Played this after "The Iron Horse" and had people say they like it much better. However, it is Denny's best to date. A scream from start to finish. Get it and tell them you got it. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

LORRAINE OF THE LIONS. Star, Patsy Here's a dandy for Saturday program for small towns. Has everything and just what you want for Saturdays. Went over good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

ROARING ADVENTURE. (4,800 feet). Ruth Miller. It's hard to say much for or against this, it's well produced, the acting is good, but it's so highly improbable that the intelligent chap is going to laugh at its absurdities. Where they are not too discriminating it may get by, and where it does please it will please well, on the other hand it won't stand analysis, so it's up to the town exhibitor, what does your clientele consist of? Weather good. Attendance good. Program offering nothing more. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ROARING ADVENTURE. (4,800 feet) Star, Jack Hoxie. Oh you Hoxie! Always good pictures. You can depend on him. Tone, good. Appeal, ninety per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

ROSE OF PARIS. (6,362 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. Good little story. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SIEGE. Star, Virginia Valli. A splendid offering, that pleased every one here, it has drama, comedy and tense situations and is admirably acted. Now then there isn't anything left to wish for in this picture. Advertise a lot on this. Get to your "thinkers" the others will follow. Good weather. Not a special as I class them. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SPORTING LIFE. (6,709 ft). Star, Bert Lytell. As per usual score another one for Uncle Carl, oh boy, but Universal has sure rung the bell one hundred percent, so far this season. People are commencing to learn that Carl Laemmle's name on a picture means a real picture and his latest one helps to make another perfect score. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

WHERE WAS I. Star, Reginald Denny. Not as funny as some he has made, but good for many laughs. They enjoyed it here and the attendance was fine, although the weather could have been improved upon. Good comedy program film. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHITE OUTLAW. Star, Jack Hoxie. Where they don't care as long as they see something go through the machine, okay. It will stand no critical dissection, they

Swanson. Gloria doesn't mean a thing here, though this one pulled because the paper showed her in a bathing suit but at that we wonder just where the physical attraction is. Patrons laughed during her most serious moments at her apparent emulation of Bernhardt; it's a pathetic burlesque. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy percent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

CROWDED HOUR. (6,508 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A program show that we played on a Saturday which pleased our audience about fifty-fifty. They could have made this in fewer reels and saved some good film. Tone, good. Special, never. Fair appeal. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DRESSMAKER FROM PARIS. (7,080 feet). Star, Leatrice Joy. We missed out on this on the first night but pleased those that came second night. It is an excellent program with Miss Joy taking an excellent part. Tone, good. Special, no. Fine appeal. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LAWFUL LARCENY. Star cast. We have played lots of Paramount pictures, but here is one just as good as many of their specials and lots better than most of them. Well made and interesting; it's away from the threadbare theme we have seen so much of. Opera House (1,000 seats), Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,989 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Rather a light entertainment, but had no serious kicks. Think it a very passable picture and one, if bolstered up with a good "filler" program, should get you some profit. Weather rainy; attendance good. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MARRY ME. (5,526 feet). A much overrated picture. Not action enough to satisfy average person. Too slow and draggy. Fair tone. Sunday, no, and for special. Fair appeal. Draw rural class, town about 1,450. Admission 10-30. I. I. Kennedy, Electric Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Missouri.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Raaymond Griffith. A very fine comdey feature. Griffith will make a splendid comedy star if continued in this calibre picture. Fair box office value. Tone, yes. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers. Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

PONY EXPRESS. Star, Betty Compson. Excellent. Better than the "Wagon." Should break records, did here. Cruze's best production. Fellows clean up on this one. Everyone will like it. Got fifty cents on run, and an Indian orchestra with picture. Best program we ever had. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Krieghbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good comedy and pleased everyone. MacLean is getting to be a very good comedian and his pictures satisfy and send them home in good humor. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, fair. Mixed class town of 1,800. Admission

SOCIETY SCANDAL. (6,433 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Plenty of scandal but as Gloria Swanson played in it it got by. plenty of gowns, also LaRocque and Cortez good in support. Tone, poor. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. Mildred B. Russell, Benton Theatre (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

STREET OF FORGOTTEN MEN. (6,986 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A very fine picture. Well acted and carries a splendid moral. The picture is full of pathos, yet never becomes boresome. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. General class town of 3,300. Admission 10-25. Kreighbaum Brothers, Char-Bell Theatre (800 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. I cannot add to the good things said about this picture. One patron said: You can afford to run such a picture once in a while even if you make nothing on it as it will give prestige to your house. Financially, my experience with specials has not been good but I made some money on this. I hope to get it again later to run at regular prices. Sunday and special, yes. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents, specials, 25-50. L. E. Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

TOMORROW'S LOVE. (5,802 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A light enjoyable photoplay all about a husband and wife who cannot agree; the wife gets an interlocutory decree of divorce but at the end of the year limited absence makes her heart grow fonder and with the help of grandma prevents his marriage to a rival and they become reconciled. I guarantee this picture. Will please your people. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture. The color a novelty well done. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

WILD HORSE MESA. (8 reels). Star, Jack Holt. We consider this an extra good western picture. It seemed to please eighty-five percent of our audience. Some thought the ending tame and should have ended with a thrill in catching the white horse. We ran this picture two nights. Snow storm second night, but had a larger crowd than the first night. Consider the picture a special. Town of 860. Oren J. Spalti, Strand Theatre (245 seats), Pleasantville, Iowa.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. Very good western had some action, lots of scenery in fact most anything you could want in the outdoor picture. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. This is a very good Zane Grey picture, however, nothing to rave about, and not worth the price asked, when you compare it with other pictures better for less money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, eighty-five percent. All classes, town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriver, Oneida Theatre (225 seats), Oneida, South Dakota.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft). Star, Jack Holt. Many exhibitors have panned this one but I thought it was very good, although not as good as other Zane Grey stories. The scene of the wild horse stampede was wonderful. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star, Rex (horse). A wonderful picture and out of the run of the usual pictures. Pleased all who saw it. What more can you ask. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Excellent appeal. Railroad class and miners town of 3,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Of course Lloyd is always good but he will have to try again and probably several times before he makes another as god as "Granma's Boy." What do you say? Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This one pleased but the exchange got all the money. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture is absolutely there, best thing Lloyd ever made and will make you plenty of money providing you buy it right, it's about a fifty-fifty proposition, and should be bought with this point in view. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-nine per cent. All classes town of 2,000.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Positively the greatest thing Lloyd has ever done. The best of all is the football game if this don't bring down the house then the audience is dead. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

In Disguise!

It isn't often that the folks in "Our Gang" let anybody see what they look like—although we'd all be glad to see each other's "phiz" and learn each other's show-life history.

But here's one of the "Gang" who comes in—but in disguise!

"This is the way I imitated 'Charley's Aunt' (in exploiting the Pro-Dis-Co picture of that name) and distributed 'cat' heralds through the business section of this little city.

"It packed them in and besides I got quite a little 'kick' out of it. Many patrons did not know me in this outfit.

"The picture pleased one hundred per cent."—G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, Cloverdale, California.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. Ran to capacity of house two nights and it's a good one. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. All classes town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. O. Herndon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Valiant, Oklahoma.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245 ft). Star, Syd Chaplin. Well boys, here is a feature comedy that kept them talking in my towns for days after a perfect wow. Advertise it, play it. Make a little cash. Tone and appeal, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

OFF THE HIGHWAY. Star, William V. Mong. An artistic picture if ever there was one and my dear friend "Billy" Mong does the best work of his career. This is an unusual picture and is going to mean much at your box office unless you go after it. It's fit for any man's theatre and I would have done a lot more than I did had the weather given the picture an even break. Weather, rain. Attendance considering the elements, good. Not a special but a program picture of class. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 ft). Star, Harry Carey. This is a fair Carey production but not as good as some of his former pictures. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

SILENT SANDERSON. (4,641 feet. Star, Harry Carey. This is the worst picture Carey has turned out in some time and failed to please or draw. It is a fair program picture and you may get by with it as such but don't feature this one. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis. Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

TEXAS TRAIL. (4,720 feet). Star, Harry Carey. The poorest picture of Carey I have yet had in the series, even the Carey fans kicked. Tone, good. Special, no. Poor appeal. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

United Artists

AMERICA. (14,000 ft). Star cast. A very good picture. Should please all. To me it is better than "Covered Wagon." Sunday and special, yes. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

DON Q, SON OF ZORRO. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. This is a wonderful picture but there are many that have beat it at the box office. I played this in the cream of the seasons three days to less business than I did on "Wild Horse Mesa" in two days in hot weather. "America" and "Pony Express" both beat in two days. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

Universal

CALGARY STAMPEDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. Three days to good business. Picture liked by all. A great rodeo. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

JACK HOXIE, Universal star, is now making a series of Westerns along new lines that are rapidly growing in public favor.

CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD. Star, Reginald Denny. A picture which should suit everyone. Full of good comedy. Tom Wilson as the colored cook almost steals the honors. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

CIRCUS CYCLONE. Star, Art Acord. A new star for my house and did not draw but the horse and dog make an exceptionally entertaining feature out of it. The horse has possibility but don't believe the dog will get far. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Good western program picture. Audience well pleased with it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples' Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

FAMILY SECRET. (5,076 ft). Star, Baby Peggy. A fine picture. Played Andy Gump in Hollywood with this. The poorest Gump I ever looked at, but the picture went over fine. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre, Grantsville, West Virginia.

FAST WORKER. Star, Laura LaPlante. Very good, but not up to "Sporting Youth," at least that was what my folks said about it. Tone and appeal, good. Small town class and farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. A goodly number for my crowd like the Westerns and seem to get a thrill from them. This was my first Hoxie and it pleased. Not a special. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

GOOSE WOMAN. (7,500 feet). Star, Louise Dresser. This is a fine picture. A little heavy but dramatically very fine. Capable directing and acting and the author Rex Beach has drawing power at the box office. It is not like most of his stories though, so should be advertised, emphasizing the drama, not the action. Sunday and special, yes. Universal class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 ft). Star, Reginald Denny. Good feature comedy. Special, no. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton, Altoona, Canada.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 ft). Star, Reginald Denny. Played this after "The Iron Horse" and had people say they like it much better. However, it is Denny's best to date. A scream from start to finish. Get it and tell them you got it. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

LORRAINE OF THE LIONS. Star, Patsy Here's a dandy for Saturday program for small towns. Has everything and just what you want for Saturdays. Went over good. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

ROARING ADVENTURE. (4,800 feet). Ruth Miller. It's hard to say much for or against this, it's well produced, the acting is good, but it's so highly improbable that the intelligent chap is going to laugh at its absurdities. Where they are not too discriminating it may get by, and where it does please it will please well, on the other hand it won't stand analysis, so it's up to the town exhibitor, what does your clientele consist of? WHERE WAS I. Star, Reginald Denny. Not as funny as some he has made, but good for many laughs. They enjoyed it here and the attendance was fine, although the weather could have been improved upon. Good comedy program film. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHITE OUTLAW. Star, Jack Hoxie. Where they don't care as long as they see something go through the machine, okay. It will stand no critical dissection, they laughed out of turn here at its drama and the attempts of the actors, the dog and horse were good. Fine attendance. Weather ditto. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WINE. (6,220 feet). Star, Clara Bow. Plenty of action and jazz. Good story, worth seeing. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants, town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California

WINE. (6,220 ft). Star cast. A very strong picture dealing with the bootlegging business and the outcome of it, it will please most everyone as it has a good all the way thought. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Appeal, eighty-five percent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. (6,803 ft). Star cast. This picture went over good. The acting of the dog was certainly good. Exhibitors don't be afraid of this one. Ran the "Bell Hop" Larry Semon comedy with it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety percent. Farming class town of 1,000. Admission 20-35. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre (250 seats), Grantsville, West Virginia.

CLEAN HEART. Star, Percy Marmont. This is sure a good one. Don't be afraid to boost this one. Vitagraph is certainly putting out some real pictures and the small theatre can afford to buy them. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five percent. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre, Grantsville, West Virginia.

Warner Brothers

EVE'S LOVER. Star, Irene Rich. A well made story that lacks originality, but will please the majority. Registered lightly at box ofice. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better classes, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LIMITED MAIL. (7,144 feet). Star, Monte Blue. Played this on a Saturday and they enjoyed it. I didn't see this, but inquiry revealed the patrons felt well satisfied. I gave the feature good fillers support, simply a motter of price on this. From what I could glean while it pleased, the picture is of the program variety. Weather good. Good Saturday attendance. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LIMITED MAIL. Star, Monte Blue. A good picture. Lots of action. Pleased about eighty percent. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

TRACKED IN THE SNOW COUNTRY. (7,500 ft). Star, Rin Tin Tin (dog). Here is one of the best dog pictures ever made. Had a poor comedy and people started saying a "bum show" after the feature they said it was the best ever. A truly great dog in a great picture. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Admission twenty-five cents. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

Independents

DANGER SIGNAL. (Columbia). Star, Jane Novak. All find Columbian pictures among the best of the so-called Independents, and this is a good program and will please most any kind of an audience. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

DAUGHTERS WHO PAY. (State Right). Star, Marguerite De LaMotte. Not a bad show from some angles. Didn't like it much myself but will go over unless people don't like long drawn out scenes about nothing in particular. I don't. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Short Subjects

An exhibitor who evidently doesn't go all the way through Moving Picture World—and because he's so lonely in this, we won't even mention his name!—says, "Where are all the Short Subject Reports?"

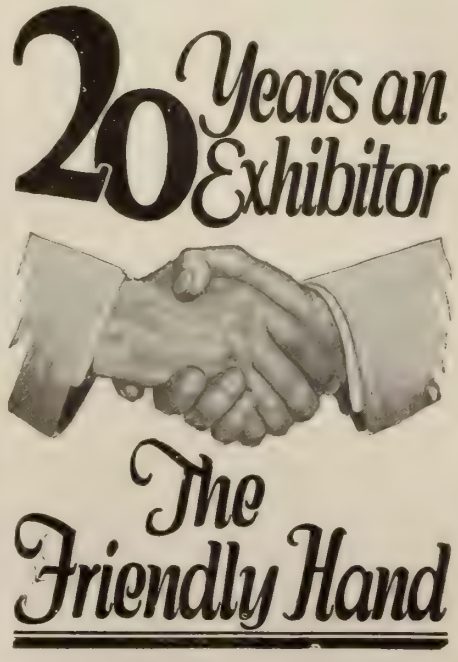
They're in a special place—Straight From the Shoulder, Jr.—in the department that is rapidly growing in popularity—The Little Picture With the Big Punch.

FATAL MISTAKE. (Federated). Star, William Fairbanks. Newspaper reporter story which did just a fair business on one day's showing. Cannot recommend it very highly. No tone. Special, no. Poor appeal. General class town of 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

FIGHT FOR HONOR. (State Right). Star cast. An ordinary program picture like all the other Steiners. If you need something to fill in or want to run a roughneck might pick an extra rough one of these and blow about it. It won't work very often, though. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal about eighty-five per cent. All classes town of $3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING STRAIN. (State Right). Star, Neil Hart. Pretty good comedy that is supposed to be taken seriously. Some bunk. One of these wide open spaces mixed with the scarlet coated engines of justice and so on. The Mounties get there atfer Hart has cleaned 'em up. Story, direction, scenario, etc., by Hart not photographed by Neil Hart. Tone, possible. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FLOOD GATES. (State Right). Star cast. This has the greatest flood scene I ever saw. Pleased all who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Oil field class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (275 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.



HE WHO LAUGHS LAST. (State Right). Star, Katherine McDonald. Couldn't be worse. It's a shame such stuff is forced on the public. Can't understand how such pictures were ever taken by Progress Pictures Company for distribution. They are business killers sure. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. General class town of 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

KNOCKOUT KID. (State Right). Star, Jack Perrin. The best State Right western I have bought. Comedy and action all the way through. Paper the best. A good one for Saturday. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeals to farmers. Country class town of 1,380. Admission 10-25. Jas B. Trout, Liberty Theatre (256 seats), Leonard, Texas.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. Star, Leatrice Joy. Harold Bell Wright's book play made into a fair entertaining picture which did better than average business for one day. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30 for specials. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SECRET OF THE PUEBLO. (Steiner). Star, William S. Hart. An out of the ordinary story is the only feature of this film. Characters are not liked here and the story was the only thing that saved a total frost. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SPEED MAD. (Columbia). Star, William Fairbanks. Here is a racing picture that is as good as many racing pictures released by Paramount, etc. Rental is much smaller and it will please as well. Went very well with patrons. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

SPEED SPOOK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. Pretty good comedy. Business increased second night. Did better for me than his later release "The Crackerjack." He fails to register as strong at the box office as Keaton or Lloyd. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy percent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SWANEE RIVER. (State Right). Star cast. This is in a class with "Over the Hill" and "The Old Nest." Buy it, boost it. Showed on Sunday, Monday. Gave City Fathers, school kids aid teachers and minister a pass. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Oil field class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (275 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

TRAIL DUST. (State Right). Star cast. Did good business. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

VERDICT. (State Right). Star cast. This is a wonderful production showing the fallacy of passing the death sentence upon circumstanial evidence. Made people think. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Oil field class town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (275 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

WOMEN FIRST. (State Right). Star, Helen Holmes. Fair railroad drama. Could be improved on, just got over. Tone, fair. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Middle and working class city of 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (365 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

THE INTERPRETERS "PASS THE WORD ALONG" from the director (standing at left) to the Indians in First National's "The Scarlet West."

Star Value Big Element in Pictures Says Western Sales Manager for F. N.

RETURNING from a trip to the far West, Ned Marin, Western Sales Manager of First National Pictures, is impressed by the healthy condition of the motion picture business in that part of the country. During the five weeks that he was away, Mr. Marin visited Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, Denver, Omaha, Des Moines and Detroit, conducting meetings at the First National branches and conferring with important exhibitors.

Commenting on the theatre situation and the boom in building which has caused considerable speculation during the past few months, Mr. Marin said that judging from his observations in the West, there is nothing unusual in the present plans for theatre construction. "It merely means," said Mr. Marin, "that the old type house which has become antiquated in its architecture and physical convenience is giving place to the modern theatre with all its comforts.

"In many cities and towns in California and other Western states, I found new theatres of the most attractive design under way. I also found that they are intended to supplant the converted opera houses and other old structures which have been the best that the towns afforded up to the present time. I think that an actual check of the incoming and outgoing theatres would reveal that the total seating capacity is being increased to only a normal degree. As the new theatres are opened the old houses will be closed. The death knell has been sounded for the old fashioned theatres. Therefore, there is no reason to be concerned about the situation. If the antiquated, and in many respects inadequate, houses could be filled, it certainly should be far easier to attract patrons to the more desirable theatres.

"One thing that impressed me in my talks with exhibitors and in visiting their theatres was the great value of a popular star in a motion picture. Sometimes I think we are inclined to underestimate the drawing power of a star's name. Actual box office figures have proved, and I know that exhibitors will back me up in this statement, that a good many first rate pictures fail to draw as they should, merely because of the lack of a box office name at the head of the cast. An essential factor in the success of First Nationl Pictures is the drawing power of the stars which they preesnt. Norma Talmadge, Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Milton Sills, Leon Errol and Johnny Hines all have great followings throughout the West and every exhibitor I met seemed to be eagerly awaiting the first of Harry Langdon's productions. I feel sure that within the next year Langdon is going to come to the top os one of the biggest comedy drawing cards in the field.

"If exhibitors are doing more business with First National product than with that handled by any other company, and I have been assured that they are, this condition is largely due to the star value of the pictures as well as the story value which is never slighted.

"While on the Coast, I saw enough of 'Irene,' Colleen Moore's coming production to feel confident that it will be the greatest picture of her career. Incidentally, I may remark that in travelling through the West I found that no star surpasses Miss Moore as a box office attraction. Exhibitors told me that she always draws big business in whatever picture she appears. At the Coast Studios, I also saw parts of "The Viennese Medley" and know it is going to be a wonderful special.

"The trip West gave me my first opportunity to get in close touch with the personnel of the First National exchanges and I was greatly impressed with the high calibre of the men representing the organization. They are filled with enthusiasm over the product for the coming year and everybody down to the office boy is working heart and soul to make an outstanding success of First National Month. We are getting wonderful support not only from our sales force throughout, but from all our First National franchise holders and other exhibitors, who have confidence in the superiority of our pictures."

Laurence Stallings Engaged

Laurence Stallings, co-author of the sensational war play, "What Price Glory," and author of "The Big Parade," has been engaged as the special dramatist for "Old Ironsides," the heroic story of the frigate Constitution, which James Cruze is to direct for Paramount, according to an announcement made today by B. P. Schulberg, associate producer.

Marcus Loew Highly Compliments Studio Efficiency on Visit to Big M-G-M "Lot"

CREDIT for the high quality of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions does not go altogether to the artists, writers and directors of that organization, according to Marcus Loew, president, who is now on his annual visit to the studios at Culver City.

Much of the credit is due the highly efficient studio organization, and the various departments thereof, Mr. Loew told the executives assembled at a dinner last Saturday evening.

"I can't resist the temptation of personally thanking you for your wonderful co-operation in the making of our productions," said Mr. Loew. "Without the efficiency of the various departments represented by you men, pictures such as we have turned out this year could never have been made. You who have contributed so much towards our successful production can be assured that as long as I am with the organization you will remain with us and that will be all my life, I hope."

Mr. Loew's speech went on to pay high tribute to the ability of the various department heads and lauded the men as the most efficient in the motion picture producing industry. As a reward for their efficiency and co-operation he offered to build for employes a community hall which will house a gymnasium, swimming pool and theatre, where they will be able to stage entertainment programs and also witness screenings of all the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures in order that each man can see the result in the finished product of his individual contribution.

Mr. Loew's speech was greeted with great enthusiasm by all those present and he was heartily cheered at its conclusion.

Mr. Loew, the big chief of the M-G-M organization is on the coast to confer with Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production, Irving G. Thalberg and Hunt Stromberg, studio executives, on future productions and to map out the production plans for next season's product, some of which were gone over during the time Harry Rapf, another of the M-G-M studio executives, was in New York preparatory to sailing for a vacation abroad.

While Metro-Goldwin-Mayer has had one of the most successful seasons in the history of the industry and carried out a vast production program, all indications point to even a greater schedule of productions for next season, the organization already having acquired some of the most valuable screen material the market afforded.

Mr. Loew has not as yet determined just how long he will remain on the coast.

Elinor Glyn to Scenarize and Supervise "Love's Blindness"

LOUIS B. MAYER, Vice-President of Metro-Goldwin-Mayer in charge of production, announced last week that he had signed a contract with the famous novelist, Elinor Glyn, in which Miss Glyn contracts to write the scenario and personally supervise the production of her novel, "Love's Blindness" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Love's Blindness" has appeared serially in many newspapers throughout the country. It has been widely exploited by these papers and is known to millions. Mr. Mayer believes that this latest Elinor Glyn achievement will prove to be one of the biggest box-office attractions in many years.

All the Elinor Glyn novels that have been transferred to the screen by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in the past few years have been immense successes. They are "Three Weeks," "His Hour," "The Only Thing" and the forthcoming "Soul Mates."

"Soul Mates" has been adapted from Miss Glyn's widely read novel by Carey Wilson. The two featured roles are filled by Eileen Pringle and Edmund Lowe, and the direction is by Jack Conway.

Four More Warner Pictures Finished at Coast Studios

FOUR more Warner Bros. productions have been finished at the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios in the last ten days and are now in the process of editing and cutting.

Monte Blue's newest picture, "The Man Upstairs," adapted from the Earl Derr Biggers comedy-mystery story. "The Agony Column," is almost ready for release and its official premiere is expected in February. Dorothy Devore has the woman's lead. Roy Del Ruth directed and E. T. Lowe, Jr., wrote the screen story.

Syd Chaplin's second comedy, "Oh! What a Nurse!" which also is finished, is expected to be a spring release. Robert E. Sherwood, editor of Life, and Bertram Bloch wrote the story, and Darryl Francis Zanuch adapted it for the screen. Charles ("Chuck") Reisner, who directed, is now busy on the cutting and editing.

February 13th probably will be the release date of "The Cave Man," in which Matt Moore and Marie Prevost are starred. In this feature Moore makes a decided departure from everything he had done before, getting away from the timid, bashful boy type of character. Lewis Milestone directed from the scenario by Darryl Francis Zanuck. Gelett Burgess was author of the original story.

Dolores Costello and John Harron have the featured roles in "The Bride of the Storm," an adaptation of James Francis Dwyer's novel, "Maryland, My Maryland." J. Stuart Blackton directed and Marion Constance wrote the scenario.

Mary Carr Featured in "The King of the Turf"

Mary Carr, famous mother of the screen, has been added to the all-star cast of F. B. O.'s racing melodrama, The "King of the Turf," according to an announcement by B. P. Fineman, general manager of production.

Mrs. Carr recently completed an important role in "Flaming Waters," which Harmon Weight directed for Associated Arts and F. B. O. and also featured in F. B. O.'s outstanding success of the current season, "Drusilla With a Million."

Others in the "King of the Turf" cast besides Mrs. Carr, are Patsy Ruth Miller, Kenneth Harlan and David Torrence. James Hogan is the director and J. Grubb Alexander prepared the script from the original story by Joseph Louis Vance, the novelist and John C. Brownell, F. B. O. home office scenario chief.

Roberts Visits De Mille Studio

Deserting his wheel chair for the first time in many months, Theodore Roberts, well on his way to recovery from a long illness, was a recent enthusiastic visitor to the De Mille Studio, where he watched his old "side-kick," Cevil B. De Mille, at work on his current personally directed production, "The Volga Boatman." Many De Mille directed pictures have witnessed Roberts in featured roles, the most recent being "The Ten Commandments" in which he played Moses.

To Play "Whispering Smith"

In order to permit H. B. Warner to appear in "Whispering Smith" for Metropolitan Pictures, Cecil De Mille has set forward the starting date of "Silence" until early in January. This famous melodrama which ran last year in New York and is now to be shown in stage stock in Los Angeles, is listed as one of the biggest offerings on the current De Mille program. It will be directed by Rupert Julian. Beulah Marie Dix is writing the continuity with Bertram Millhauser acting as production editor.

Chautard in "Paris at Midnight"

Emil Chautard, one of the screen's foremost directrs, has been engaged to portray the role of Pere Goriot in "Paris at Midnight," Frances Marion's new Metropolitan Picture, which is based upon the Balzac classic, "Pere Goriot." Chautard is the first player engaged for "Paris at Midnight." E. Mason Hopper will direct.

Murnau to Produce for Fox Film Corp.

Will Make Picture or Two, Injecting His Own Idea of Production

F. W. MURNAU, Germany's premier director, who is to be loaned by UFA to Fox Films, is coming to Hollywood not with the intention or expectation of bringing something new, but to make a picture or two with American actors and equipment, backed by an American organization, says Hermann Bing, Murnau's assistant and technical director, who is now at Fox Films studio, preparing for the director's coming.

"Murnau's intention," says Mr. Bing, "is to try to make pictures which will please the American theatre patrons—commercial successes because of their artistry. He will bring his Central European training, experience, knowledge, and his individual originality to Hollywood because here is assembled the pick of the world's actors, the best of the world's motion picture equipment; here, within fifty miles of the studios, is scenery duplicating any scene in the world and, behind it all, the world's best film organization.

"Murnau's object will be not to describe but to depict the relentless march of realities, not from an objective but from a subjective viewpoint.

"Here in America you have an expression 'Turn a man inside out.' That comes near to expressing Murnau's intention, but not quite. He aims to turn a man's mind, his heart, his soul inside out and then put him on the screen for other men to see. To Murnau, no man is good, none is bad. All are "fifty-fifty" good and bad and this is what he tries to show in pictures.

"Hollywood is the melting pot of Cinemaland. Here are actors from every country, every race and every nook of the world, from the Esquimo of Alaska to the Black of Central Africa. Here Orientals mix with the Occident. Behind them are the optimism of a young nation, full of the vigor of industry and the sound and sane American way of thinking which has brought such great material progress.

"To this Cinema melting pot and its background, Murnau will bring the ideas and ideals of Central Europe, different entirely from those of America because of the psychic morbidity that has come into the depression that followed the war.

"To put this subjective thought on the screen, to open up the mind, the heart, the soul—that is Murnau's aim. Several European stories with this intention have been submitted to Fox Films

The story or stories chosen will be 'painted' in motion pictures—that is reproduced as the painter reproduces—not as the photographer. In accomplishing this Murnau will do nothing spectacular. There will be no elaborate sets, no big scenes, no splurge, no blustering effects.

"The story will be told in the pictures, not in the titles, as Murnau uses titles only when absolutely necessary, because he holds that a man can reproduce his ideas in films just as another man can express his ideas in paints and oils or in marble or in the printed page.

"I doubt that Murnau would undertake the production of an American story. Your manner of thinking is so different from that of Europe that it would be difficult for him to absorb your viewpoint and for this reason I believe that he will adhere to his expressed intention to return to Europe and stay there when his work with Fox Films is completed.

"Mornau made a tour of the United States a year ago and spent some time in Hollywood. He was impressed by the organization of the industry, the assemblage of the world's talent, the scenery and by the vastness, the beauty, and industry of America, by the hospitality, the generosity, the nonchalance of the American people—and above all by their obliging courtesy. He is a great admirer of America and dresses in American fashion.

"Out of this studious atmosphere this man, who is still in his thirties, has produced 'The Last Laugh,' 'Der Brennende Acker,' 'The Phantom,' 'Die Fenanzen des Grossherzogs,' 'Tartuffe' and 'Nosferatu.' Now Murnau is preparing to produce 'Faust' and as soon as this is finished he will come to Hollywood. He should arrive some time during the spring.

"While I am talking, permit me to dispel the frequently heard erroneous rumor that Murnau is a Scotchman. He is a North German, born and educated there. After he completed his university studies he turned to acting. He appeared in Zurich and Bern. In 1921 he returned to Berlin and started his first film 'The Hunchback and the Dancing Girl.' His contract with UFA does not expire until 1927."

Semon Dons Straight Make-up For Role in "Stop, Look, Listen"

IN "Stop, Look and Listen," Larry Semon's first big comedy feature for release by Pathe Exchange, Inc., the comedian departs somewhat from his usual screen make-up of baggy trousers, etc., and gives an extremely funny performance in a straight comedy characterization.

Larry Semon has been known in the past as an artist in the matter of comedy make-up and his fun-making has been characterized by the broad, slapstick methods that have such a big following among patrons of screen comedy. In "Stop, Look and Listen," we see an entirely new and different Semon. Minus the make-up and the grotesque comedy garb, we find the popular comedian as a droll young man clad in modish business clothes and wearing distinguished looking nose glasses with a silk cord attached.

As the hero of the fast moving and supremely funny story that is presented in "Stop, Look and Listen," Mr. Semon displays still another quaint comedy sense that has heretofore lain dormant. He proves that the comedian who can get his work across without the artificial aids to laugh-making such as make-up and trick clothes, is a far greater artist than the player who relies to a large extent upon them.

Chase and Gorman to Make Independent Series of Four

AN indication of renewed confidence in the independent market is contained in the announcement by Maurice A. Chase, president of the Chase Pictures Corporation, that he and John Gorman have formed a partnership to produce a series of four pictures.

F. W. MURNAU

Production will be entirely in the hands of Mr. Gorman. Distribution, which will be on a "state-rights" basis, will be superintended by Mr. Chase.

Three scripts have been already okehed. Mr. Gorman is now in process of assembling a cast for the first of the series. It will be called "A Broadway Drifter," and is expected to be ready in the early Spring. Others approved are "Common People" and "Home Sweet Home." The fourth, expected to be made from a current fictional success, is in negotiation.

Mr. Gorman has been responsible for a number of pronounced financial successes independently distributed during the last decade. He has been among the most sought-after directors by Independent producers. This is his first seriously planned venture where he shares responsibility other than as an artist.

Mr. Chase is nationally known as a student of self-values and as an exceptionally successful salesman.

Fox Product for Opening Months of New Year Has Big Box-Office Value in Stars

BOX-OFFICE values in stars, stories, titles, directors and authors are represented in full measure in the Supreme Attractions and Short Subjects to be released by Fox Films for the last half of the current season.

Stars whose popularity makes them real box-ofice attractions directed by men who have well substantiated reputations as the makers of successes; stories based on noteworthy plays, fiction or historic incidents; authors whose names are household words, and titles selected for their drawing power are the winning characteristics of every one of the productions which the Fox Company is making for release after January 1.

Just as the first half of this season showed Fox making the most progresive stride of any company in the industry, so do the forthcoming releases represent another stride forward, this one of even greater length than the first.

According to its latest release chart, Fox Films will release twenty-six Supreme Attractions, twenty-three two-reel comedies, fourteen one-reel Varieties and fifty-two issues of Fox News between January 1st and August 15th.

The folly of following the crowd in the Game of Life is the basis of the first Supreme Attraction of the new year, "The Gilded Butterfly," which is scheduled for release January 3. This is John Wray's second production under the Fox banner and is from a story by Evelyn Campbell which was adapted to scenario form by Bradley Kink. Alma Rubens, Bert Lytell and Huntly Gordon play the leading roles with a strong supporting cast which includes Herbert Rawlinson, Frank Keenan, Vera Lewis, Arthur Hoyt and Carolynne Snowden.

"The Palace of Pleasure," with the love story of the world-famous Lola Montez as its theme, is the second Fox 1926 release. The scenario for this story is an adaptation of Adolf Paul's sensational Glazer. Emmett Flynn is the director of this production, which has a superlative cast headed by Betty Compson, who plays the part of Lola, and Edmund Lowe. Henry Kolker enacts the very important "heavy" role in this picture with Nina Ramano, Harvey Clark, Francis McDonald, Samuel Blum and Jaques Rollens in the other supporting parts.

A Tom Mix starring vehicle, "The Yankee Senor," is released on January 10 at the same time as the Flynn production. Olive Borden plays the leading feminine role opposite the star in this production, which is an adaptation of Katherine Fullerton Gerould's novel, "Conquistador." Emmett Flynn directed this production from a scenario by Eve Unsell. The cast includes Tom Kennedy, Francis McDonald, Kathryn Hill, Margaret Livingston, Martha Mattox, Raymond Wells, Gene Pallette, Harry Seymour, J. Franz and Alex Francis.

Lou Tellegen plays the title role in "The Outsider," based on Dorothy Brandon's highly successful play, which is scheduled for January 17. Jacqueline Logan and Walter Pidgeon have the roles of the dancers. Rowland V. Lee directed. Another John Golden stage hit, "The First Year," will be brought to the screen by Fox on January 24 with Kathryn Perry and Matt Moore as the newlyweds. This is Frank Borzage's second Golden opportunity to display his genius for picturizing comedy.

"CLOTHES MAKE THE PIRATE" and First National makes the picture—with Tully Marshall, Dorothy Gish, Leon Errol, Edna Murphy, and Nita Naldi wearing the clothes.

A rollicking, thrilling motion picture version of Charles Hoyt's play, "A Trip to Chinatown," with Margaret Livingston as the widow and Earle Foxe as the man with the explosive lung, is scheduled for the last day in January. Robert Kerr directed under the supervision of George Marshall. Buck Jones in "The Cowboy and the Countess," another combination of laughs and thrills, will be released at the same time.

George O'Brien plays the leading role in "The Johnstown Flood," a thrill picture scheduled to be shown in first run houses on February 7. Irving Cummings is directing. Howard Hawks is directing May McAvoy in his original story, "The Road to Glory," listed for February 14. The following week will bring the screen presentation of "Dangers of a Great City," based on the melodrama by Alfred Kennedy.

February 28 brings "The Dixie Merchant," film version of Barry Benefield's popular novel, "Chicken Wagon Family," and Tom Mix's second picture of 1926, "My Soul Pal," with Olive Borden, Tom Santschi and little Virginia Marshall.

Peter B. Kyne, celebrated American author, is now on the Fox lot in Hollywood helping John Ford in his preparations to film "Rustling For Cupid," the second original Kyne story under his contract with Fox. "Corncob Kelly" is the temporary title selected for Kyne's third screen story. Other pictures scheduled for spring releases are "Manhood," "Yellow Fingers," "Siberia," "Separate Rooms," Tom Mix in "Tony Runs Wild" and "Hardboiled," Buck Jones in "A Man Four Square," "The Gentle Cyclone" and "The Fighting Buckaroo."

Fox will start the New Year with two laugh films on January 3 with the release of "Cupid a la Carte," in the O. Henry series and "His Own Lawyer" in the Helen and Warren series.

Carroll Nye makes his first appearance under his contract with Fox Films in "Cupid a la Carte," with Florence Gilbert playing the leading feminine role opposite him. Robert Kerr directed, under the supervision of George Marshall. "His Own Lawyer" finds Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley, who enact the roles of Heeln and Warren, in the throes of entertaining their relatives. The situation is complicated by Hal being brought to trial after a raid on a night club, with hilarious consequences involving the judge, who escaped sans trousers. Thomas Buckingham directed.

The second of the "East Side West Side" series, "The Fighting Tailor," is scheduled for January 10. Georgie Harris and Barbara Luddy continue as the Jewish boy and his pretty Irish colleen. It was directed by Benjamin Stoloff. Another of the series, "Pawnshop Politics," has been launched with the same principals and is scheduled for March 7. "The Whirlpool of Europe" is the Fox Variety listed for January 10.

Sid Smith and Consuela Dawn play the leading roles in "A Flaming Affair," an Imperial Comedy scheduled for January 24. This is Lex Neal's first production since he came to the Fox lot from the Buster Keaton studio. "Old Virginia," a one-reel Fox Variety, is scheduled for simultaneous release.

M-G-M Child Contest That Holds Interest from Coast to Coast Closing

THE Child Movie Star Contest, conducted by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in conjunction with the New York American in the East and the Kellogg-Dickson chain of newspapers on the West Coast, has just drawn to a close after a most intensive and exemplary publicity and exploitation splurge of three months.

It is expected that the eastern winners will be announced by the first of January next and the westerners by the fifteenth of that month. The public interest, however, promises to be sustained throughout the making of the pictures in which the winners are to appear and possibly long after their release.

Credit for the conception of this publicity idea of discovering a new child star goes unreservedly to Howard Dietz and Pete Smith, the former of the New York offices and the latter of the M-G-M studios in Culver City. Executives in both quarters are highly enthusiastic and are already of the opinion that the results will be most satisfactory. It is also reported that they have pronounced it the most ingenious and fruitful campaign ever carried out for a future production.

It is estimated that a combined patronage of more than a million has been built up for the pictures in which the winners are to appear. This estimate includes the contestants, who number over 80,000, their parents or guardians, relations and others whose interest has been aroused by news stories, photos, heralds, posters, circulars and film concerning the contest.

In California the slogan of "Have You a Million Dollar Baby in Your Home?" spread like wildfire in popularity. For over six weeks, according to reputable advices, there were "Million Dollar Baby" parties and parades held almost daily throughout Southern California, which is literally blanketed by the Kellogg-Dickson group of newspapers.

Exhibitors everywhere were quick to grasp the opportunity of linking with the Contest. Box-offices became registration booths and lobbies became art galleries for the display of the entrants from their respective localities. The lobbies were watched for announcements and films of the various contestants were patronized as regular attractions.

Five of Los Angeles' leading portrait artists succeeded in getting themselves tied up with the Contest and sharing its publicity by presenting to each entry an 8x10 cabinet photo in an art folder free of charge.

That mechanical marvel, the M-G-M Trackless Train, arrived in Los Angeles in the midst of proceedings and was instantly pressed into service. Trainload after trainload of children and parents were conveyed by it to the various headquarters for registration.

Neither did the Los Angeles department stores overlook an opportunity to share in the glamorous publicity. Many of them are augmenting the regular ten prizes to be awarded with merchandise. And even scholarships in Dancing, Piano, Violin and Oratory have been offered to the 90 runners-up in the Contest.

With the exception of the voluntary offers of merchandise to the runner-up, interest in the Contest in sophisticated New York has been worked up to concert pitch with methods almost similar. Until December, at least, a column of editorial matter and two columns of entrants' photos have appeared daily in the New York American. The American has also devoted full-page ads. and wagon and newsstand posters to the exploitation of the Contest.

The M-G-M Scout Train toured New York's five boroughs and its suburbs, filming eligible youngsters. These films were shown in all of the Loew Theatres, noticeably increasing patronage. Photos of entrants from each section were placed on exhibition in the respective lobbies of the Loew Theatres.

Pamphlets and circulars were distributed in the schools and mailed to interested parents; and various other means of making the Contest the most talked-of thing in the home were carried out to advantage.

Thus, the pictures in which the winners of the Child Movie Star Contest will appear have practically been sold before they have been made. The novelty of the Contest has been commented upon throughout the country and even in Europe, as the clippings reveal. And although it is limited to a radius of fifty miles from New York and Los Angeles, there are entrants from all cities and from England, Sweden and Germany.

Earle Foxe gets tangled up in a Southern feud in "The Feud," the Van Bibber comedy scheduled for release on January 31. Earle has the aid of Florence Gilbert and Frank Beal in his difficulties. The picture was directed by Robert Kerr under George Marshall's supervision.

Harold Goodwin and Shirley Palmer get involved in the dificulties of "A Bankrupt Honeymoon" in the Imperial Comedy for February 7. This was directed by Lew Seiler. "Egypt Today" is the Variety issued at the same time.

Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley continue as Helen and Warren in "Hold for Investigation," scheduled for February 14. At present they are working on "Cheaper to Move," which will be released on March 28th.

February 21 will bring the release of three Fox short subjects, "Elsie in New York," of the O. Henry comedies, "Officer of the Day" of the Imperial Comedies, and "Sawdust and Spangles" of the Fox Varieties. Hallam Cooley got far enough ahead on the Helen and Warrens to appear as the leading man in "Elsie in New York," with Gladys McConnell in the title role and Arthur Houseman as the villain. Albert Ray directed. Harold Goodwin, Eugenia Gilbert and Brooks Benedict form the triangle in "Officer of the Day," a seagoing comedy in the Imperial series. It was directed by the new team, Andrew Bennison and Max Gold.

Earle Foxe's next picture in the Van Bibber series will be "The Reporter." Florence Gilbert and Frank Beal have been cast for the principal supporting roles. The two pictures that complete the series of eight have not yet been titled.

EASY TO RECOGNIZE THIS—It gives the title to William Desmond's adventure picture, which Universal will make a drawing card. Yes, the title, too, is "The Ace of Spades."

Four Big Warner Productions for January

WARNER BROS. have set four pictures for release in January. Heading the list for the year is the eagerly-awaited John Barrymore special, "The Sea Beast," whose official release is to be January 9th. Persons who have had previews predict that this big production will prove one of the greatest photoplays of recent years. Barrymore himself has declared that he's "crazy about it," and that it's the only picture he's ever done that he "really liked."

"The Sea Beast" is an adaptation of Herman Melville's thrilling sea story, "Moby Dick," with scenario by Bess Meredyth. Willard Webb directed. Playing opposite the star is the Warner Bros. "find," Dolores Costello, whom Barrymore himself selected for the leading woman's role, and others in the cast are George O'Hara, Mike Donlin, Sam Baker, George Burrell, Sam Allen, Frank Nelson, Mathilde Coment, James Barrows, Vadin Uranoff, Sojan and Frank Hagney.

"The Fighting Edge," from William McLeod Raine's novel of the same name, is to be released January 16th. Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller are starred, and in the cast also are W. A. Carroll, Charles Conklin, Lew Harvey, Pat Hartigan, Eugene Palette, Pat Harmon and David ("Red") Kirby. Henry Lehrman directed this fast-moving Western from the scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

January 23rd is to see the release of the Marie Prevost-Matt Moore starring vehicle, "His Jazz Bride," from Beatrice Burton's novel, "The Flapper Wife." Supporting the principals are John Patrick, Don Alvarado, Mabel Julienne Scott, George Irving, Margaret Seddon, Helen Dunbar and Gayne Whitman. Herman Raymaker directed and Charles Logue was the scenarist.

"The Golden Cocoon," which had a prerelease run at Warners' Theatre, New York, last week, has its official release January 30th. Huntly Gordon and Helene Chadwick are featured, with Richard Tucker, Frank Campeau and Margaret Seddon, Carrie Clarke Ward, Charles McHugh and Violet Kane in the supporting cast. Hope Loring and Louis Lighton adapted "The Golden Cocoon," Ruth Cross' novel, for the screen, Millard Webb was the director.

De Mille Studio Busy Completing Program

RAPIDLY "clearing the decks" in anticipation of next year's doubled production program which contemplates twenty-five pictures, executives of the De Mille studio are now swinging into the last work on the 1925 schedule.

Rod La Rocque is at work in his third starring vehicle for Cecil De Mille. This is "Red Dice," which marks the accession of Jeanie Macpherson to the ranks of the production supervisors. The story was adapted by Miss Macpherson and Douglas Doty from the Octavus Roy Cohen tale, "The Iron Chalice." William K. Howard, who recently completed a highly successful contract with Paramount, is directing.

Leatrice Joy is at the present time in conference with gown designer Adrian as her next starring vehicle "Eve's Leaves," is a tale wherein the dress foibles of modern woman form the nucleus of a strongly dramatic story. "Eve's Leaves" is about ready to go into production under the direction of Paul Sloane.

Cecil De Mille is now in the second month of his second personally directed independent production, "The Volga Boatman," a story in which De Mille is developing the epic qualities of the Russian revolution. He is now engaged in large castle interiors at the studio. In size, the picture is rated among the biggest De Mille has done and it will require another month for its completion.

Sax Pictures to Feature Wm. Fairbanks

ANNOUNCEMENT is made from the New York office of Sam Sax, that with the new year the future pictures featuring the famous stunt star, William Fairbanks, will be produced by Mr. Sax and distributed by the Lumas Film Corporation.

It is stated that a series of eight William Fairbanks productions will be made during the coming season and available for exhibitors early in 1926.

Actual production of the first Fairbanks' picture under the new contract, will begin on or about January 1, and plans are now under way to provide special story material that will give the greatest scope for the exceptional physical capabilities of the athletic actor.

In announcing the acquisition of this popular player Mr. Sax laid special emphasis on the fact that the series of eight William Fairbanks pictures will be handled as an individual unit and not in any way linked up with the Gotham Productions also distributed by Lumas Film Corporation.

Mr. Sax further stated. "In taking over William Fairbanks I am not merely adding eight more pictures to my release schedule but am providing screen material for which there is a positive demand. First hand information from both exhibitor and exchanges has convinced me of the popularity of this rapidly rising star and also the fact that William Fairbanks is as popular in foreign countries as he is in the U. S. I am lining up some great story material for Fairbanks and each picture will carry a real "box-office" title. A lot will be heard about William Fairbanks in 1926."

"Flaming Frontier" Big "U" Western

ANNOUNCEMENT was made at the Universal home office, that the final title of the "super" western picture recently completed for Universal will be "The Flaming Frontier." This is an all-star production with Hoot Gibson and Dustin Farnum in the leading roles. It was written and directed by Edward Sedgwick and is based on the colorful and dramatic incidents surrounding the famous Little Big Horn massacre, better known as Custer's Last Stand.

This is one of the most ambitious pictures ever attempted by Universal and will be released as a special production. It was made on a lavish scale, the battle scenes especially being reproduced in full scale and with remarkable fidelity. Included in the cast are Anne Cornwall, George Fawcett, Noble Johnson, Ward Crane, Kathleen Key, Walter Rodgers, Joe Bonomo, Eddie Gribben, Harry Tod, Harold Goodwin, Charles K. French and William Steele. More than 1,000 Indians were used for the battle scenes.

The picture is expected to be the most striking picturization of western frontier days ever produced. It has been known under several different titles during production, among them being "Heroes of the West," "Custer's Last Stand," "The Indians Are Coming," and "Frontier Days."

Fields Starts Work in "It's the Old Army Game"

W. C. Fields will start his career as a star with Paramount early in the new year it was announced by William Le Baron, associate Paramount producer at the Long Island studio. Construction of Fields' first starring picture is now under way at the Paramount Long Island studio. Clarence Badger, who has just finished making Raymond Griffith's brilliant comedy, "Hands Up!" will direct Fields in his initial stellar venture, which will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Le Baron, and Tom Geraghty, who will serve as supervising editor of the Fields productions.

Books "Broadway Lady"

S. D. Weisbaum, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at San Francisco, has sold "Broadway Lady," starring Evelyn Brent, to the Pantages Theatre, of that city for early showing.

New Pictures Started at F. N. Coast Studios

CHRISTMAS holidays are not allowed to interfere with the regular order of work at the First National studios on the coast where production continues at its height with new companies waiting to occupy the stages as soon as they are vacated. Starting December 21st, or a few days thereafter, shooting will begin on several new pictures and others will go into production within the next few weeks.

At the Schenck studios, the opening scenes are being made for Norma Talmadge's elaborate screen version of "Kiki," the famous Belasco stage play in which Lenore Ulric was starred. Ronald Colman, Marc McDermott, George K. Arthur, Gertrude Astor and Frankie Darrow are among the players in the cast under the direction of Clarence Brown.

Eve Unsell has completed the continuity for "The Second Chance," being made under the direction of Lambert Hillyer with Anna Q. Nilsson, Huntley Gordon and Charles Murray in prominent roles. Actual shooting of scenes at the First National studios started this week.

After several postponements due to the inability of Robert Z. Leonard to leave the picture on which he was engaged, studio work has been started on "Mlle. Modiste" starring Corrine Griffith, who recently returned to California from New York having secured a special wardrobe for the production. Walter Pidgeon is Miss Griffith's leading man in this big feature picture.

Another picture to go into the studio this week is an Edwin Carewe production for which a permanent title has not been selected. Lloyd Hughes, Mary Astor, Alec S. Francis, Dolores Del Rio, Rita Carewe, John T. Murray, Edwards Davis and Charles Sellon are in the cast. Mr. Carewe plans to make this one of the biggest pictures he has turned out for First National.

Shortly after the first of the year, Marion Fairfax will be ready to start shooting on "The Desert Healer" taken from a story by E. M. Hull. Maurice Tourneur has been secured as director for this production in which Lewis Stone and Barbara Bedford will play the leads.

Universal Pushing 1926-27 Productions

WITH four feature companies and two comedy units now in production, and four more units expected to start within the next two weeks, Universal City is starting on its 1926-1927 production program, and making pictures for the "Golden Rule List," the group name of Universal's next season's Jewel product.

In addition to the four features preparing for immediate production, at least four other units will start work within the next two months.

Pictures now in production are:

"Watch Your Wife," a Svend Gade starring Virginia Valli and Pat O'Malley.

"Poker Faces," a Harry Pollard production featuring Edward Everett Horton and Laura La Plante.

"A Desperate Game," starring Jack Hoxie, directed by Albert Rogell.

"The Tuneful Tornado," Starring Art Acord, directed by Arthur Rosson.

William Serter is preparing to start production this week on a screen version of the stage success, "Rolling Home," in which Reginald Denny will play the featured role.

Hoot Gibson will start this week on "Chip of the Flying U," from the popular novel by B. M. Bower, with Lynn Reynolds directing.

Edward Laemmle, having made of "The Still Alarm" one of Universal's best pictures of the season, will direct the stage success by John Emerson and Anita Loos, "The Whole Town's Talking," as one of the big specials of the 1926 program.

Edward Sedgwick is preparing a new feature.

In addition to these productions, Melville Brown and Hames O. Spearing, two well-known scenario writers, have been advanced to positions as directors, and will head their own units on pictures as soon as they can prepare scripts.

King Baggott is preparing to produce "Perch of the Levil," by Gertrude Atherton, as his first picture under his new Universal contract, and Edward Sloman, who also signed a new contract following the tremendous success of "His People," is looking for material.

Herbert Blache will direct a film version of Arthur Somers Roche's "Crimes of the Arm-Chair Club" wtih an all star cast headed by Matt Moore.

Universal also is planning the production of six serials, starring Jack Daugherty, William Desmond and other stars, for the next year's program.

Lasky Defines Function of "Comedy Constructor"

THE "comedy constructor" is the newest important factor in motion picture making and is the answer to the world's demand for humor in all its film fare, Jesse L. Lasky declared in announcing Famous Players Lasky Corporation's prodution plans for the coming year.

Defining a "comedy constructor," the Paramount production chief characterized the position as that of the man who works with the scenarist and director to build humorous situations into either comedies or dramas.

"The world wants to laugh and the comedy constructor is the man who will furnish the fun food," Lasky said. "The logical solution of the problem is to apply the abilities of those men who specialize in furnishing humorous enterainment either in writing or in acting.

"The most tremendous dramatic successes have been such because they contained natural humor to occasionally break the strain of straight drama and also to emphasize and accentuate the big dramatic moments. The story or picture that keeps you on the verge of both laughter and tears is the one that makes the deepest impression.

"The comedy constructor is not a new figure in motion pictures but during the last year he has assumed a far more prominent place. We used to call him a 'gag man'. His rank was low and his salary not particularly high. One of his tribe conceived the idea of someone throw a custard pie at someone else. That was one of first screen comedy situations, or gags.

"This man now has a much higher purpose. Except in rare instances, broad comedy is not acceptable. Nowadays it must be more natural and more subtle. The comedy in 'The Covered Wagon' was one of the most important factors in making it one of the most popular pictures of all time. That is the sort of humor that is wanted. You can't measure out so much drama, so much comedy, so much characterization and so forth, and put them bodily into a production. It isn't done that way.

"The world is favoring melodrama more strongly than for many years but there must be comedy with it and many straight-away comedies, too. That is why Harold Lloyd, Raymond Griffith and Douglas McLean are making pictures expressly for Paramount. That is why W. C. Fields, the Follies' famous comedy star, Ford Sterling and others, have been signed to appear exclusively in Paramount pictures. That is why Bebe Daniels is being made a comedy star and it is also the reason Wallace Beery and Raymond Hatton have been given picture material providing them with an opportunity to exploit their unusual ability as comedians.

"All this makes the comedy constructor a more and more important figure in the studio. He may now accept his salary without apologizing, walk about with his head up and his chest out, and have his name in gold letters on his office door. He's a big man, now."

"Stop, Look and Listen" Listed

"Stop, Look and Listen," Larry Semon's first feature comedy under the Pathe banner, will be released on January 31st according to an announcement issued by the distributing organization. This feature comedy is a picturization of the Broadway musical comedy success of the same name and makes an ideal starring vehicle for Semon, who directed the picture as well as assuming the leading role. Dorothy Dwan appears opposile Semon. Others in the cast are Babe Hardy, Mary Carr, Lionel Belmore, Bull Montana, William Gillespie, Josef Swickard, B. F. Blinn, Frederick Kovert and Curtis McHenry.

A LUNCH-WAGON BANQUET for Swanson fans. In "Stage Struck" Gloria Swanson, with Lawrence Gray playing opposite, dreams a wondrous dream of transition from lunch-wagon waitress to scintillating star. Does it come true? The Paramount production will show that.

Sales Records Being Smashed in Associated's "Oscar Price Drive"

WITH Sales Manager E. J. Smith holding the reins, the entire sales force of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., is on its toes and stepping out at a scorching pace in the "Oscar Price Drive" for contracts and playdates on the Associated product. No better indication of the manner in which the reorganized sales force has taken hold for the big push could be forthcoming than the number of contracts each member is sending in daily.

While under way for only a short time, the "Oscar Price Drive," planned as a tribute to the president of the reborn Associated Exhibitors, already has become a spirited personal contest with the members of the sales force, each trying to outdo the other to show Sales Manager Smith just what they think of Messrs. Price and Smith in particular and the organization in general. Results already in make it a certainty that all records are due to be cracked wide open.

And the men seem to be working not only for the cash and other prizes offered. There is a spirit behind their pep that augurs well for the future of the organization. They are taking at his word Sales Manager Smith, who at the beginning of the drive told them:

"I expect every man in the organization to get on his toes and pile up a record between now and the New Year that will give Mr. Price a real tribute and at the same time concrete evidence of the sort of men who are carrying the Associated banner.

"And to the men who lead the parade I am going to offer real awards.

"So the Oscar Price Drive is on! It is up to every man in the organization to show where he stands and where he is going by results in the weeks right ahead. It is up to every man in the organization to get behind me and show me what you think of me by putting the Oscar Price Drive over the top.

"You know it's a proved fact in business that a Sales Manager controls only manpower. Just how much man-power is in the sales force of Associated is up to you. You can prove to me just how good you are—every one of you.

"Boys, you have my confidence. I am sure that every last one of you is going to show some real results during the Oscar Price Drive. Go to it—now!"

Prizes will be awarded to the exchange manager in each division showing the greatest amount of sales for the period of the contest; to the best salesman in each division, and to the second best salesman in each division. Besides the cash and honor prizes, Mr. Smith has in store several surprises for men who by their results show that they are deserving of special consideration.

Bebe Daniels to Head Own Unit For Production of Big Comedies

BEBE DANIELS will be launched by Paramount as the supreme comedienne of the screen at the head of her own producing unit and with unlimited resources to make big comedy features, according to a long term agreement announced today by Jesse L. Lasky.

Signing of this important stellar document completes plans long entertained by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to provide Miss Daniels with facilities for the full expression of her gift for comedy. Stipulations in the new contract assure the star recognition which she deserves on a plane with a few great male comedy stars of the screen.

A complete producing unit is now being assembled, including special staff of scenarists and comedy constructors. With every other facility placed at her disposal, Miss Daniels is expected to achieve tremendous popularity during the coming year in feature length comedies. "Miss Brewster's Millions" will be the first of the vivacious young star's pictures under the new policy.

"Miss Daniels is the foremost comedienne of the screen," Mr. Lasky declared, "and Paramount is going to take full advantage of her unequalled ability. We are completing plans that will place her comedy productions on a plane with those of the outstanding male stars who have forged to the front ranks in this particular field. She has proven her worth as a dramatic actress as well, but she so easily excels as a comedienne and the demand for comedies with a feminine star is so great that it would be inexcusably poor business not to make this move. Hector Turnbull, associate Paramount producer, will be in charge of the unit."

New Kind of Melodrama Vie With Comedy as Entertainment

MELODRAMA—not the melodrama of the olden days, but a new brand created especially for the screen—will vie with comedy as the principal dish on the motion picture public's menu during the coming year, according to Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

"The public's demand for melodrama is not the shout or the cat call of the old audiences of the 'ten-twenty and thirty,' days," he explains. "Then it was a case of 'mellerdrama,' with action every minute regardless of whether it was logical. Today audiences want action and then more action, but it must be logical, it must be true to life. They want melodrama of a higher dramatic appeal than in the old days, and it must be a good, wholesome comedy relief.

"Comedies, too, particularly those of feature length which depict a connected story crammed with laughs, will be a big feature of motion picture programs of next year."

Mr. Lasky is now in Hollywood completing final details for the coming Paramount product in conjunction with Hector Turnbull and B. P. Schulberg, associate producers at the West Coast studios. Important announcements on the selection of pictures and directors will be made within the next few days.

Fate Steps In and Helps Fox Unit Get Locations for "The Johnstown Flood"

FATE, which oftentimes plays an important and outstanding role in the more or less commonplace activities of life, stepped into prominence through a strange turn of affairs which accompanied the search for an adequate location for the production of Fox Films' picture, "The Johnstown Flood."

When Irving Cummings, who was chosen to direct the picture, sought to find the locations he desired for the filming of the exterior scenes, a trip was made from the Fox studios in Los Angeles to Santa Cruz, California. He knew, from previous experience, that the topography of the country in the vicinity of Santa Cruz was in many respects similar to that of the Conemaugh Valley in Pennsylvania, where the stricken city of Johnstown was located and which was the scene of one of the world's most distressing disasters.

Mr. Cummings and his assistants registered at the St. George Hotel in Santa Cruz and, without making the purpose of their visit known, immediately began their location hunt. After a two-day search, they returned to the hotel considerably discouraged. Mr. Cummings had failed to find just what he wanted. He had practically decided to leave Santa Cruz and seek elsewhere, when Fate stepped in and brought about a meeting with Robert Jones, proprietor of the hotel. Mr. Cummings, in the course of the conversation which followed, told Mr. Jones the nature of his business. After learning just what Mr. Cummings wanted, Mr. Jones calmly said:

Naturally, Mr. Cummings registered genuine surprise over the most unusual coincidence, and because of Mr. Jones' first-hand knowledge of the catastrophe, which he hoped truthfully to reproduce on the screen, he agreed to take advantage of Mr. Jones' suggestion that they visit a number of locations he had in mind. The next day Mr. Jones took Mr. Cummings and his party to several spots hidden away in the mountains not far distant from Santa Cruz, and Mr. Cummings was so well pleased that he decided to look no farther. Returning to Los Angeles, Mr. Cummings assembled his company and a few days later was back in Santa Cruz and "on location."

Gerald K. Rudolph, publicity manager of Fox Films, was on the West Coast at the time and went to Santa Cruz for the purpose of seeing some of the work Mr. Cummings was doing on the picture. He was introduced to "Bob" Jones, and because Rudolph was formerly a newspaper man, the meeting of the two men resulted in a genuinely interesting communion of thought and the recitations of many past experiences. To Rudulph this was the strangest of co-incidences. He was watching the filming of scenes of "The Johnstown Flood" and here was a former brother newspaper man who had actually "covered" the story. It hardly seemed that such a thing could be possible, but Jones, unlike most newspapermen, had retained many of the notes he made. As though to prove the strange tale he had related, he took Rudulph to his home, and, after reading from well-worn sheets of paper and old-fashioned memorandum books, he permitted the latter to examine them himself. Page after page of pencil-written notes, now hardly legible, told of many distressing scenes and incidents. There it was in black and white, revealed thirty-seven years later under most unusual circumstances.

Because of the strange co-incidence, Mr. Cummings called the principals of the company together one evening and had Mr. Jones give them some first-hand information concerning the scenes they were endeavoring to depict. In many other ways, Mr. Jones gave his hearty co-operation to Mr. Cummings, who, first of all, wished to picture the scenes before and following the flood with absolute fidelity in so far as might be possible. Most of the exteriors for the picture were "shot" with Mr. Jones on the ground.

"Fatty" Alexander Marries

Frank ("Fatty") Alexander, weight, 412 pounds, stellar comedian of Standard comedies produced by Joe Rock, was married to Mary Druse, weight 140 pounds, of Red Wing, Wyo., last week. The rotund funster is one of the trio of comedians featured by Rock in a series of fun films released by F. B. O. The wedding ceremony was staged at the Rock Rancho, Las Vegas, Nev., with a number of prominent picture folk in attendance. "Fat" Karr, 375 pounds, and "Kewpie" Ross, 348 pounds, film associates of the plump groom, served jointly as best men. Producer Rock gave the charming bride away. In marrying Alexander, Miss Druse asserts that she has proved the fallacy of the adage—"nobody loves a fat man."

Closes Big Contracts

Sam Sax Announces 100 Per Cent Territorial Sales on Gotham Productions

The smile on the face of Sam Sax is caused by the fact that his organization, the Lumas Film Company, has closed contracts for distribution throughout the entire world for the current series of twelve Gotham Productions.

Thirty exchanges in the United States and Canada are now distributing Gotham Productions and making these successful independent features available for exhibitors everywhere.

Out of the present series of twelve pictures, eight have already been delivered to exchanges, the ninth production is finished and awaiting release and production is now under way for final three. The subjects already contracted for and released in the order named are: "The Overland Limited," "The Police Patrol," "A Little Girl in a Big City," "His Master's Voice," "The Part Time Wife," "One of the Bravest," "The Shadow on the Wall," "The Phantom of the Forest," "The Speed Limit," "Hearts and Spangles," "Racing Blood," and "The Sign of the Claw."

Working on New Play

Back from a vacation of two weeks following the completion of "Man Rustlin'," Bob Custer has begun on another F. B. O. Western. It is called "The Half-Breed Hostler" and is by P. J. Leithead. Jesse Goldburg is the producer.

THINGS AN AUDIENCE LIKES are plentifully incorporated in Paramount's "The Enchanted Hill" with Jack Holt, Florence Vidor, Noah Beery and Mary Brian.

Production Work Begins on "The Bat"

AFTER several weeks of intensive preparation in an atmosphere of great secrecy, Roland West, independent producer, has begun actual production work on "The Bat."

Mr. West, acclaimed generally as the leader in mystery picture production, declares "The Bat" will be the biggest mystery film ever put out.

It is reported that "The Bat" is to be the biggest independent production ever launched. A new record price for independent material was paid for the screen rights by Mr. West to Mary Roberts Reinehart and Avery Hopwood, authors of the sensational stage success.

Mr. West, recognized genius for mystery melodrama, with such thrillers as "The Unknown Purple" and "The Monster" to his credit, is directing as well as producing the screen version of "The Bat," which will be released through United Artists Corporation through arrangements made by Joseph M. Schenck, chairman of the Board of Directors of that organization. The release date has been set for March 15th.

The technical staff announced consists of William Cameron Menzies, art director; Frank Crane, assistant on production; T. Freeland, asistant to Mr. West as director; Fred Stark, production manager; A. M. Brentinger, business manager; Arthur Edeson, chief photographer; Gregg Toland, assistant cameraman; Julien Josephson, continuity work.

Josephson is said to have written the screen story of "The Bat" without changing the general plot, but has added mystery complications calculated to baffle even the hundreds of thousands who have seen the stage play.

Some of the most elaborate sets ever constructed have been built for "The Bat," but no visitors, not even high officials of other producing companies, are permitted to see the sets or witness any part of the actual filming of this forthcoming mystery feature. Mr. West announces that most of the camera work will be done at night in order the better to guard against intrusion.

Tiffany to Make Big Drive During February

TIFFANY PRODUCTIONS and their affiliated franchise holders announce that an intensive drive for the month of February is now being mapped out and "Tiffany Month" will be the signal to acquaint every exhibitor in the United States and Canada that the four productions so far released by the Tiffany organization have led the field in worthwhile pictures.

A four-page broadside is being prepared for mailing to every exhibitor in the United States and Canada and the various exchanges handling Tiffany productions have made preparations with their sales force to broadcast the message of "Tiffany Month" to every exhibitor in their respective territories.

The Tiffany productions that will be played for the month of February are "The Sporting Chance," with Dorothy Phillips, Lou Tellegen, George Fawcett and Theo Von Eltz, hailed as one of the greatest racing dramas ever filmed; "Souls For Sables," featuring Claire Windsor and Eugene O'Brien, selected as one of the best feature productions of the year; "Borrowed Finery," with Gertrude Astor, Lou Tellegen, Taylor Holmes, Hedda Hopper and Ward Crane, an excellent comedy-drama and "Morals For Men," featuring Conway Tearle and Agnes Ayres, a drama of great box office value.

There will also be a drive for the booking of the entire series of the Tiffany "Big Twelve" program as formerly announced. it is expected that "Pleasures of the Rich," suggested by "The Wrong Coat" will also be ready for Tiffany Month.

F. B. O. Planning 1926-27 Product

PLANS for assembling next season's product, embracing about sixty specials and program features, were definitely set in motion this week with the arrival of J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president in charge of production, at the F. B. O. Studios in Hollywood.

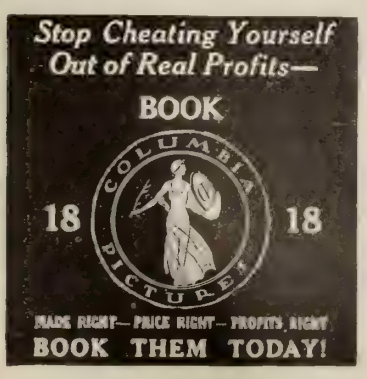
Mr. Schnitzer will spend several weeks on the coast in conferences with F. B. O.'s production executives, headed by B. P. Fineman, general manager of production, and J. G. Hawks, head of the studio scenario department.

Although no official announcement has as yet been made, it is pretty well understood that F. B. O. will adhere closely to its current policy of vigorous and showmanly melodramatic attractions framed directly for their box-office value as to theme and cast and general development.

At least twelve Gold Bond special attractions will be grouped together on the 1926-27 program, it is reported. These will include a number of the biggest exploitation attractions ever released by this fast-stepping independent organization.

There will be star series features starring Fred Thomson, Evelyn Brent, Dick Talmadge, "Lefty" Flynn, Tom Tyler and Bob Custer. It is at present planned to present Alberta Vaughn in at least one more two-reel series, "Fighting Hearts," by Sam Hellman.

Future Fred Thomson attractions, it is reported, will be made on an even more elaborate scale than in the past. Thomson's phenomenal development as a box office attraction throughout the world has impelled F. B. O. executives to increase the size of his production budget considerably and future Thomsons will take rank among the best Western specials ever offered the exhibitor, it is stated.



M-G-M Arranges for Publication of Books Giving Stories of Their Pictures

AN exceptional exploitation tieup has just been effected by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the Jacobson-Hodgkinson Corporation of New York, whereby a series of books to be known as "Popular Plays and Screen Library," will be published. The subject matter of the books will be novelizations of M-G-M pictures.

The books will be placed on sale in all the five and ten cent stores throughout the United States and Canada so the far reaching effect of this tieup can readily be seen. When one considers the wide distribution and selling outlet afforded by the powerful Woolworth, Kresge and McCrory stores such novelization of M-G-M current pictures is almost sensational. Each book will sell at ten cents, still another big factor in getting wide distribution.

The first of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer photoplays to enjoy this tieup is "The Midshipman," the novelized version already being off the press. This will be followed by "Old Clothes," "The Mocking Bird" and others on the M-G-M schedule.

A. H. Sebastian Discusses Screen Plots

A. H. SEBASTIAN, head of Belasco Productions, and a keen student of photodramatics, talked entertainingly in Hollywood last week on plot requirements for the motion picture, and set forth a number of ideas on the subject which should prove of interest to the theatre-going public.

"A superficial discussion of the photodrama as it exists today," said Sebastian, "is sure to include more-or-less heated references to plot, and an insistent demand that more attention shall be paid to this undoubtedly important consideration. To many critics of the photoplay, indeed, the single item of plot-building obscures all other factors, and stand alone as the one crying need of the motion picture.

"Well, yes—and no. Plot is unquestionably of the utmost importance, and in the abstract, at least, must form the backbone of every photoplay production. Indeed, it is the very skeleton on which the incidents of the story are hung—the framework without which the whole structure would fall of its own weight.

"But, like everything else, plot should be administered in decent moderation—and for the same reasons. An excess is worse than not enough, and produces the results which are always an accompaniment to satiation. We are all familiar with the motion picture which is so heavy with plot that the item of entertainment is entirely obscured, and the mind is under the constant necessity of focusing intently on the ramifications of a story which becomes more and more involved, and is finally solved only by the convenient deaths of some few of the characters, or a boiler explosion which blows the villain into the next county, with no compass to guide him back to the old homestead.

"Actually, the type of a story must always regulate the amount of the plot which is necessary to the success of a motion picture —and this is said with a full knowledge of what the statement implies. A farce comedy, if burdened with the story structure which forms a part of a straight dramatic production, would prove a sorry attempt at entertainment. 'Gags' and 'incidental business' must here take the place of logical development—and the picture is immeasureably better for the change.

"A drama, such as our recently completed 'Fifth Avenue,' must of necessity have a well sustained and well formulated plot—but even here the story cannot support the introduction of so much extraneous matter that the principal line of development is obscured. Rather, any available footage should be devoted to inteligent characterization and fully understood motivation, so that the audience may truly feel and live in the very persons of the characters involved, rather than merely gazing at their actions in a detached fashion, and wondering, forsooth, what the story is all about.

"There need be no disposition on the part of the author to "mix up" the characters, or introduce an excess of complications, simply for the sake of finally extricating a set of puppets from a snarl of impossible circumstances. The story that 'builds' — that achieves a sustained interest which constantly ascends to the high point in the drama—is the simple tale of human hearts and human emotions, dramatically developed, perhaps, but shorn of that annoying clutter of complications which merely serve to increase the mystification of the audience.

"There is no disposition to object to the wealth of incident which is found in the motion picture of the present—to the comedy interludes, to the introduction of passages which are purely scenic, or to the many scenes which do nothing more than establish character or motive. Without these, the photoplay would seem barren indeed; and, after all, the item of 'entertainment' must take precedence over every other consideration.

"When the motion picture ceases to entertain, it has completely failed of its purpose, and loses all reason for its existence.

"And so: Give us plot—yes. But give it to us in moderation."

Stromberg Announces Big M-G-M Picture

THREE important productions for early picturization were announced recently by Hunt Stromberg, associate executive of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

One of these is "Money Talks," by Rupert Hughes, a brilliant satire on modern New York life, adapted to the screen by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, and shortly to be directed by Archie Mayo, as his first production under his M-G-M contract.

The story is a satirical comedy centered about the life of two New York families, one of which saves—the other plunges into debt,—and a clever twist brings about a denouement that unseats all maxims of old.

"Monte Carlo," an original story by Carey Wilson, is being scenarized by Alice D. G. Miller for early production under the direction of Christy Cabanne, who directed "The Midshipman" and Mae Murray's "The Masked Bride." It is a satire on the deportment and adventures of American tourists in the European gambling capital of Monte Carlo.

"Flames," by Kate Corbaley, is being adapted by Al Cohn to be produced as the big fire prevention feature to be made with the cooperation of the fire department chiefs of America and Canada, and to be released under their auspices, the fire fighters' association to receive a percentage of the profits to carry on their work of fire prevention.

This feature was arranged through Louis B. Mayer and the fire chiefs' organization as the studio's contribution to the fire prevention movement.

Edwin Carewe Will Make "Twentieth Century Unlimited"

Edwin Carewe, First National producer-director, will make "Twentieth Century Unlimited," as his next First National offering.

This decision was reached by the producer upon his return to Hollywood from New York City.

Lois Leeson is now busily engaged on the script and casting and the erection of sets will take place immediately.

PATRONS ASKING FOR "RAY" mean Raymond Griffith in "Hands Up," in which, for Paramount, Clarence Badger directing, "Ray" is backed up by Marion Nixon, Monty Love, Mack Swain and Virginia Corbin.

"Beau Geste" To Be Brenon's Next; Will Be Filmed Abroad, Says Lasky

"BEAU GESTE," P. C. Wren's novel of the French Foreign Legion, has been selected as the next picture to be made by Herbert Brenon, according to announcement yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky, following conference with William LeBaron, associate producer at the Paramount Long Island studio. The picture wil be filmed in Paris, Marseilles and the Algerian Sahara, where the scenes in the story are laid.

Mr. Brenon will sail January 16 on the steamship Paris, visiting Ireland where he will be accompanied by his mother, Mrs. Frances Brenon, before going to Paris. His production unit, consisting of about thirty persons of the cast and technical staff, will sail January 30 on the the steamship France, and will join Mr. Brenon in Paris.

The cast has not yet been definitely selected.

"We expect to make of 'Beau Geste' one of the greatest and most colorful pictures of its sort ever filmed," Mr. Lasky explained. "For that reason we have considered it imperative that the scenes be made actually in the places visualized by the author, so that both the locale and the atmosphere may be faithfully reproduced."

While the major sequences will be made in the Sahara, a number of very interesting scenes will be made also in Paris and Marseilles. Those in Paris wil be street views and scenes about the Foreign Legion recruiting bureau.

The Marseilles scenes will record the waterfront and panoramas of the harbor of that picturesque port with its bewildering welter of seafaring characters which shipping brings together there.

The African scenes will be made in Sidi Bel Abbes, Foreign Legion headquarters in the Sahara Desert and at one or more Foreign Legion outpost points. Mr. Brenon expects to spend the greater part of two months making these scenes in the Sahara.

Mr. Brenon will begin negotiations at once with the French Government to obtain the use of Foreign Legion troops in the African scenes. The cast will include thousands of natives. There will be regiments of Tuaregs—the veiled men of the Western Sahara—and of Senegalese troops. It is expected to use about 1,000 camels in the picture.

Mr. Brenon's company will include representatives of the Paramount Studio's art department who will design from original sketches the reproductions of such interiors as it may be necessary to use in completing the picture in the studio.

"Beau Geste" was selected for a picture upon recommendation of Mr. Brenon who read the book last winter upon a steamer on which he was returning from a conference with Sir James Barrie regarding the production of his "A Kiss for Cinderella," which Mr. Brenon has just completed.

The story is of the adventures and tests of character of three English brothers who leave England and join the Foreign Legion under the shadow of disgrace not of their own creating.

Novel Premiere for "The Skyrocket"

ONE of the most novel and brilliant premieres ever given a motion picture is that planned for Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket." Through the courtesy of the United States Lines, this big Associated Exhibitors special will be shown to an elite invited audience in the Grand Ball Room of the S. S. Leviathan, as she lies at her pier in the Hudson River, on the evening of Thursday, January 7.

The sponsoring of the premiere by the United States Lines and the placing at Miss Joyce's disposal of the S. S. Leviathan constitute a remarkable tribute to a remarkable picture and an equally remarkable personality. This is the first time in the history of motion pictures that a premiere has been held aboard one of the world's big floating palaces, and the first time also that any motion picture has been given such a send-off as "The Skyrocket" will receive. In addition to the premiere showing in the Grand Ball Room, "The Skyrocket" will be presented as a regular part of the ship's entertainment to passengers.

"The Skyrocket's" debut promises to be a most gala event from every angle. Miss Joyce will journey to New York from the Coast for the first showing of her picture. She leaves Hollywood in the midst of preliminary work on her second starring vehicle, and will be on hand to greet the guests on the Leviathan. Miss Joyce will receive in the beautiful Palm Garden of the great liner, and receiving with her will be the entire staff of officers of the world's largest passenger steamship.

Just one of the many features planned as part of the evening's festivities will be dancing to the music of the world-famed S. S. Leviathan Orchestra. Dancing will be in order before and after the screening of the picture, and will be enjoyed in the great greyhound's palatial Palm Garden—a beautiful setting alive in the memory of everyone who has crossed on the Leviathan.

In addition to the entertainment furnished by the screening of "The Skyrocket," the guests will be offered the talents of some of the best known artists in their respective lines. Music for the picture will be played by an organization of stellar calibre.

The entire affair—the syncopated strains of the Leviathan Orchestra, the songs of various artists, the instrumental novelties and other numbers—will be broadcast from Station WMCA, the high-powered radio station of the Hotel McAlpin, New York.

Many other features than those mentioned are planned for the evening. For instance, the assembled guests and the radio audience will be treated to a reproduction in every detail of the sailing from her pier of a great liner. Then, too, the steamship will be ablaze with light and decorations, and motion pictures will be made.

Associated Exhibitors announce that the date of the premiere on the Leviathan precedes by about a month the general release of "The Skyrocket." This is of considerable interest to the trade in general, inasmuch as speculation has been rife for some time as to just when this big special would be ready for public showing.

Fox Completes Two Big Productions

PRODUCTION rolls swiftly along at the Fox West Coast studios. Two feature pictures have just been finished: "The Outsider" and "My Own Pal." The Outsider," directed by Rowland V. Lee, is from the successful stage play of the same name by Dorothy Brandon. It concerns the charms cast over women by a man who employed hypnotism in his pose as a healer. The cast includes Jacqueline. Logan, Lou Tellegen, Roy Atwill and Walter Pidgeon.

"My Own Pal" is an unusually pretentious production starring Tom Mix. J. C. Blystone directed the picture from a story by the popular magazine writer, Gerald Beaumont. Tony is given a prominent part in the film. The cast is noteworthy, having such people in it as Olive Borden, Tom Santschi, Virginia Marshall and Paul Panzer.

An Imperial Comedy, "A Bankrupt Honeymoon," directed by Lew Seiler and supervised by George Marshall, has just been completed. The cast includes Harold Goodwin, Shirley Palmer and Frank Beal.

The third of the "East Side, West Side" series has just been started under the direction of Ben Stoloff and supervision of George Marshall. It is called "Pawnshop Politics," the story and scenario being written by J. Walter Rubens and Murray Rothe. George Harris and Barbara Luddy have the leading roles, with Vincent Howard, Sidney Franklin and Barney Gilmore in support. The difficulties of being in love, encountered by the youthful pair whose ancestors peopled Palestine and Erin, furnish the laughable situations.

The newest of the Helen and Warren series, "Cheaper to Move," adapted from the current newspaper stories by Mabel Herbert Urner, has just been placed in production under George Marshall's supervision. Albert Ray is the director. Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley play the newlyweds. Arthur Houseman, who played in "Thunder Mountain" and "The Desert's Price," is in support, besides Belva McKay and Jimmy Boudwin. Pal, the dog which had a part in "Teetn," a Tom Mix production last year, will be seen in this comedy.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" Opens at Warner's with Irene Rich Present

WARNER BROS.' long-awaited "Lady Windermere's Fan," the latest Ernst Lubitsch production, has its official release next Saturday, December 26th, when it opens a run at Warners' Theatre, New York.

Interest will be heightened by the additional announcement that during the first few days of the engagement, Irene Rich, the Warner star who plays the role of the captivating Mrs. Erlynne in this photoplay, will be present in person.

Miss Rich will be hostess on the evening of the premiere and at succeeding showings. She is not to make "personal appearances" in the sense that she will make addresses from the stage, but, rather, will meet picture patrons in the lobby and greet her friends and admirers personally.

The official release of "Lady Windermere's Fan" is conceded to be an uncommonly important event in picture circles. The trustees of the late Oscar Wilde's estate refuses to sell the screen rights to the great dramatist's masterpiece until assured by Warner Bros. that Ernst Lubitsch would direct the production. Persons who have seen the finished work declare that, notwithstanding this great director's many past triumphs, in this latest effort he displays a genius and a mastery not evidenced before.

This was the verdict of critics and others who were present at the unofficial world premiere at the Casa Lopez, New York, a few weeks ago. On that occasion Vincent Lopez was host to two hundred representatives of artistic, professional and social life. All these agreed that "Lady Windermere's Fan" was a world-beater.

Readers who are acquainted with the Wilde story and also with the abilities of motion picture players will recognize the actors in "Lady Windermere's Fan" as excellently cast even before viewing the production. Besides Irene Rich as Mrs. Erlynne important roles are filled by Ronald Colman (by arrangement with Samuel Goldwyn) as Lord Darlington, May McAvoy as Lady Windermere, Bert Lytell as Lord Windermere, Edward Martindel as Lord Augustus, and Helen Dunbar, Carrie Daumery and Billy Bennett as the three duchesses.

The scenario was prepared by Julien Josephson. Developments in the unfolding of the plot show remarkable fidelity to the original play, but the director has treated the situations so deftly that a minimum of sub-titles is required.

Associated Lists Five for January

FIVE sterling attractions are on the list for release during the first month of the New Year by Associated Exhibitors, Inc. This quintet of the "Triumphant Thirty" offers extreme variety and box-office certainty, and embraces some of the biggest names that have as yet been placed in electrics in front of motion picture theatres.

The first January release is "Hearts and Fists," a stirring drama of the big timber country, in which Marguerite de la Motte and John Bowers are featured. This is an H. C. Weaver Production directed by Lloyd Ingraham from the story by Clarence Budington Kelland. "Hearts and Fists" may be described as a photoplay of the throbbing pulse of He-man's land; The Big Timber Country. The picture was made in Tacoma, Washington, and its cast includes Alan Hale and Dan Mason.

Next on the January list is "I Do," a Popular Demand Edition of one of Harold Lloyd's biggest successes. Here we see Harold as the blushing groom in a comedy with a high-spot every foot. Snappy new posters and a full line of up-to-the-minute exhibitor aids make doubly certain the success of this one. This is a Hal Roach Production directed by Fred Newmeyer.

"The Lady From Hell," starring Blanche Sweet, is also slated for January release. The picture gets its title from the name given the Scotch Kilties during the War. Here the setting is on a Wyoming Ranch—or rather from a Wyoming Ranch to a British castle. Comedy goes hand in hand with drama, and for the smashing climax a perilous, breath-taking ride to save the life of a condemned man. The cast includes Roy Stewart, Ralph Lewis, Frank Elliot, Margaret Campbell, Ruth King and Mickey Moore. The picture was made from the story by Norton S. Parker under the direction of Stuart Paton.

By way of further variety the month's releases include "The Shadow of the Law," in which Clara Bow is the featured player. Here we see Stuart Holmes as the Master Crook and Clara Bow as the girl he had framed to the doom of prison bars—her release, then tense melodrama that rushes on to a crashing climax. This absorbing crook melodrama was made from the widely-read story, "Two Gates," and was directed by Wallace Worsley.

"White Mice," a picturization of the famous Richard Harding Davis novel in Jacqueline Logan is the principal player, ends the month's list of releases. Jacqueline Logan was never more captivating than in the rapid-fire, blood tingling action of this tale of romance and revolution—a picture whose locale shifts swiftly from New York to a South American revolution. This is a Pinellas Films, Inc., Production, presented by Royal W. Wetherald.

Neilan to Make Specials for Paramount

ON his arrival in New York Jesse L. Lasky announced that one of the last things he did before leaving Hollywood was to sign Marshall Neilan to a long-term contract under the terms of which the famous director will make a series of special productions for Paramount.

"Nothing has pleased me more in a long time than the acquisition of Mr. Neilan to the ranks of Paramount producers," said Mr. Lasky. "Marshall Neilan is essentially the showman's director, and every picture he has ever made has been packed with material which has a big appeal at the box-office. Under this new contract we expect that he will be even more successful, because in the production of his pictures, which will be made at his own studio in Edendale, Calif., he will have back of him all of the resources of the Paramount production department and will have the help of our producing organization in the Lasky studio.

"Mr. Neilan's first picture for Paramount will be a big special production, the story of which is now being worked out. He probably will begin production on this in the middle of February and the picture will be released next fall.

"Following that Mr. Neilan will direct Betty Bronson in a picture of the type that has made him famous as the director of many of the big Mary Pickford successes. The story, which is one of the best ever chosen for Miss Bronson, has already been selected."

"The Traffic Cop" Cast

Harry Garson, producer and director of the Lefty Flynn productions for F. B. O., has announced the following engagements for the cast of Flynn's next attraction, "The Traffic Cop," by Gerald Beaumont: Kathleen Myers, Jerry Murphy, Ray Ripley and Ray Turner. Others have yet to be engaged. The story has been put into continuity by John Gray and James Gruen.

VAN

Zabin in "Ad" Department

James B. Zabin, who for several months has assisted Lem Stewart in the theatres department of Paramount, has been transferred to the Advertising Department of Paramount, where he will work on press books under Russell Holman.

Previous to his connection with the theatres department he was for two years assistant to Glen Allvine.

Hart Ridicules Idea That "Westerns" Have Lost Appeal

"THE recent statement of a well known writer on motion pictures that 'Westerns' have lost their appeal is all absurd tommy-rot," says William S. Hart, whose most recent production, a vivid and big romnace of the West called "Tumbleweeds" is now being released through United Artists Corporation.

"As long as men and women exist, as long as babies are born and grow to childhood and manhood and womanhood, just so long will life in all its forms continue to interest the various sorts of public. There may be fads, temporary preferences, but to say that any form of entertainment is dead is to be silly.

"Western pictures have survived with scarcely a period of lessening appeal. I believe I should be a fairly good authority on this subject, for I have made a good many 'Westerns' and all are still being exhibited somewhere or another.

"It is absurd to say that western pictures are dead. Or that they ever will die. If they are dead, then I am all wrong and my new production 'Tumbleweeds' is a mistake, but neither Joseph M. Schenck nor Hiram Abrams of United Artists Corporation or myself think it a mistake."

Features in Cutting Rooms

The cutting rooms are the center of activity at Universal City this week, with four feature productions in the cutting stage. William Seiter is editing his latest picture "Skinner's Dress Suit," starring Reginald Denny and Laura La Plante; Lynn Reynolds is cutting "Combat," starring House Peters; Jack Hoxie's latest production, "Grinning Guns," is undergoing treatment from the cutter's shears and Edward Laemmle is putting the finishing touches on his all-star production, "The Still Alarm."

Added to Cast

Louise Lorraine and Gertrude Astor have been added to the cast of "Behind the Front," Paramount's comedy of A. E. F., it was announced today by Hector Turnbull, associate producer. Chester Conklin has a comedy role in the picture, in which the heroine is Mary Brian. Edward Sutherland is directing the picture, which is expected to be one of the comedy riots of the year.

Brandt and Cohn Arrange For Production in Europe

WORD has been received from Joe Brandt and Harry Cohn, who left several weeks ago on a trip covering the greater part of Europe, intimating that their plans for production of Columbia Pictures abroad are now well under way.

The recent news and trade paper discussion on the increase of European production, which many of the foreign governments are now subsidizing, makes it necessary in order for American producers to secure fair competition in the European market, to arrange for the production of pictures in these countries, which without question will seriouslv rival the U. S. A. as a center of production in the future.

The executives of Columbia Pictures were among the first to realize the importance now being attached to motion picture production by the many governments in Europe. It could but mean one thing only, i.e., that foreign countries were realizing the medium of the greatest value. England in particular has developed a plan whereby the production of English motion pictures will be materially increased by governmental support.

Messrs. Brandt and Cohn conceived the plan of European production to assure the distribution of Columbia Pictures in these countries where local production will inevitably seriously oppose American product. The Columbia foreign units will be regarded as a national institution and will eliminate all national prejudice and its serious effect on American pictures.

Stories and other material necessary for production abroad is now being gathered, and on the return of Joe Brandt and Harry Cohn an announcement of the Columbia activities in Europe will be issued.

Willat on Vacation

Having completed the cutting and editing of his current production, "The Enchanted Hill," Irvin Willat is on his way to old Mexico for a vacation of three months. The Paramount director is accompanied by his wife, Billie Dove.

"The Enchanted Hill" was picturized from a story by Peter B. Kyne. The featured players are Jack Holt, Florence Vidor, Noah Beery, Mary Brian, George Bancroft and Richard Arlen.

Universal Signs Big Staff of Directors for "White List"

A STAFF of more than a dozen of Hollywood's best known directors have been signed by Universal Pictures Corporation to make the "White List" of 54 pictures for the 1926 program.

Believing the director to be the most important unit in the production of pictures, Carl Laemmle, Universal president, has gathered together what he believes to be one of the best directorial staffs in the industry. Directors now under contract are: William Seiter, Svend Gade, Edward Sloman, King Baggot, Harry Pollard, Edward Sedgwick, Edward Laemmle, Herbert Blache, Lynn Reynolds, Clifford Smith, Albert Rogell, Arthur Rosson and James O. Spearing.

All are either in actual production now, or are preparing to start work within the next three weeks.

Appointed Editor-in-Chief

Verne Porter has been appointed editor-in-chief of the editorial department of Paramount, according to Walter Wanger, general manager of production.

Mr. Porter comes to Paramount after several years association with William Randolph Hearst as magazine editor and as scenario editor of International. He was with the latter organization at the time William Le Baron, associate producer at the Long Island studio of Paramount was director general of International. No changes will be made in the personnel of the editorial department.

Boston Acclaims "The Road to Yesterday"

Shown simultaneously at three first-run Boston theatres, The Modern, The Beacon, and The Fenway, Cecil B. De Mille's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday" scored a decided hit with the public and the Boston newspaper critics.

The newspaper reports of the triple premiere, record the audience's reception as "enthusiastic" with rounds of applause for the train wreck scene which they describe as being the "most spectacular and realistic thing of its kind, ever seen on the screen."

The criticisms were unanimously laudatory, saying in part:

"In many ways is far superior as a feature than the now famous 'The Ten Commandments'—Is lavish with the things that this great director is noted for—gorgeous scenic effects, fine detail, star casts and a good story." . . . Boston Evening American.

"There is no one who can point a moral and adorn a tale with the ardor and consistency of Cecil B. De Mille. . . . And 'The Road to Yesterday' follows the good old De Mille tradition." . . . Boston Herald.

"It has all that is expected of the lordly Cecil. . . . There is a train wreck that is a 'wiz'" . . . Boston Traveler.

Schenck Signs Pickford On Long Time Contract

Joseph M. Schenck has long considered Jack Pickford one of the best of the younger actors on the screen and as usual he has backed his judgment with definite action. Word comes from headquarters that Jack his put his name to a Schenck contract that calls for his services for a long time to come, and at a price that makes us sure he will only be used in very important productions.

When Jack Pickford was making pictures like Tom Sawyer, Huckleberry Finn, Great Expectations, In Wrong, Garrison's Finish and the Hill Billy, there were many who predicted that some day he would be a big factor among male stars as a box-office attraction and it seems that Joseph Schenck is convinced that the time has come for Jack to claim this place.

The name of his first starring vehicle has not been announced but it is understood that it has already been selected.

"Pawnshop Politics" Goes Into Production

"Pawnshop Politics," third of the Fox Films "East Side, West Side" comedies, has gone into production at the Fox Studios under the direction of Benjamin Stoloff.

Georgie Harris and Barbara Luddy will again appear in the leading roles. The cast includes Sidney Franklin, Barney Gilmore and Vincent Howard. "Pawnshop Politics" is being screened under the personal supervision of the Fox comedy director general George E. Marshall.

To Make "Pleasures of the Rich"

"The Wrong Coat" announced as one of the Tiffany "Big Twelve" has been changed to "Pleasures of the Rich" and it is quite probable according to M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Tiffany Productions, that it will be the next Tiffany production to be released instead of "The Lodge in the Wilderness," suggested from the story by Sir Gilbert Parker.

WILLIAM K. HOWARD, new director for Cecil B. DeMille.

A NAME WORTH SAYING—Constance Darling—say it with various inflections!—the new Universal star, in the two-reel Century Comedy, "Too Much Mother-in-Law."

Herrick Completes His First Feature for Independent Field

HIS first feature production completed and ready for release, F. Herrick Herrick, independent producer-director, is preparing to embark on a production schedule for 1926 that will establish him as one of the leading film directors on the East Coast.

Herrick's first picture for the new year will be "The Legacy," one of the "Fragments of Life" series for Davis Distributing Division. It will star Eleanor King, and Herrick intends to make it the very best of this fine series of short reelers.

The second Herrick production of the new year will be a feature length, to be filmed almost entirely in Florida. The story deals with the motor races at Fulford-by-the-Sea, Florida, and actual scenes of the race will be incorporated in the picture. To produce this film, Herrick, together with his associate, George Harry Eggleston, will transport a complete and large cast of stars to Florida.

Returning from Florida in the spring, Herrick will make "The Black Joker," a best selling novel, by Isabel Ostrander. The cast, which wil be announced later, includes one of the foremost film stars in the world.

Other plans for the year include the picturization of a celebrated mystery play, and two current magazine serials. These films will be released by a large distributing corporation.

Fox Adds "The Holy Terror" To List of Golden Plays

William Fox has added another John Golden play, "The Holy Terror" to his list of stage productions to be presented as photoplays next season. The three other Golden plays on the list are "Pigs," "Going Crooked" and "Seventh Heaven."

"The Holy Terror," which was produced this season by Golden, is a play of the West Virginia coal mines written by Winchell Smith and George Abbott.

Marguerite De La Motte Is Signed to Support La Rocque

Marguerite De La Motte, just from her triumphs in "Fifth Avenue," and "The People vs. Nancy Preston," has been signed by Cecil B. DeMille for the feminine lead of "Red Dice," Rod La Rocque's next starring vehicle, which William K. Howard will direct.

The signing of an actress of Miss De La Motte's prominence to support La Rocque indicates DeMille's intention to make "Red Dice" an outstanding production.

Selling the Picture to the Public

This Department Was Established September 23, 1911 by its Present Editor

Epes Winthrop Sargent

Here's the Advertisement That Went From Coast to Coast in the Dailies

WITH no idea that he was creating a theatrical sensation, C. J. Latta, of the Empress Theatre, Shenandoah, Iowa, paid for a two tens in which to warn prospective patrons that a picture shown the day before was not up to standard, and to apologize to those who had witnessed it the first day.

Some local correspondent of a news service evidently sent out the story, and it was put on the service wire. The idea of a manager advertising to keep his patrons away caught the fancy of the news editors and even in New York the big metropolitan dailies picked up the idea, the Herald-Tribune giving it more than a quarter column of editorial comment.

Through the courtesy of Mr. Latta we are able to reproduce the original advertisement, though he has eliminated the name of the picture for the reasons explained in his letter. His letter tells the story better than we can. Here it is:

Mr. Latta's Story

I am enclosing newspaper clippings and complete story of advertising campaign which has caused so much comment and publicity throughout the entire country.

This article along with clippings should give you sufficient material for a story and I am pleased to pass it along to you to be used in whatever form you may select. The thought to be gained from this story is not one criticizing a certain production, but, on the other hand, that honest advertising pays at all times.

You will note that I have blotted out all evidence of production referred to. Under ordinary circumstances I would not hesitate to pan a picture through the trade journals, but because of all this national publicity I do not wish to cause a production company any unnecessary grief. I think the picture very weak, but on the other hand, some may feel that it is O. K.

Clean Advertising

Good, clean, honest advertising backed with the goods prompted me to denounce the film.

Not having seen the production but basing my judgment of same on the facts that it had a splendid cast, a good director backed by a capable producing company and a story which was listed as one of the best sellers of 1925 I felt I had a splendid offering and launched my advertising campaign. After the first day's showing I was convinced the picture was very weak and that I had over-advertised.

This should have been a splendid production turned out to be a story which did not lend itself well to picturization.

Without any malice at heart toward the producing company, but with a firm determination to follow my plans of honest advertising, I issued through local paper and a bulletin in front of my theatre, an apology to those who had seen the picture and a fair warning to those who contemplated seeing same.

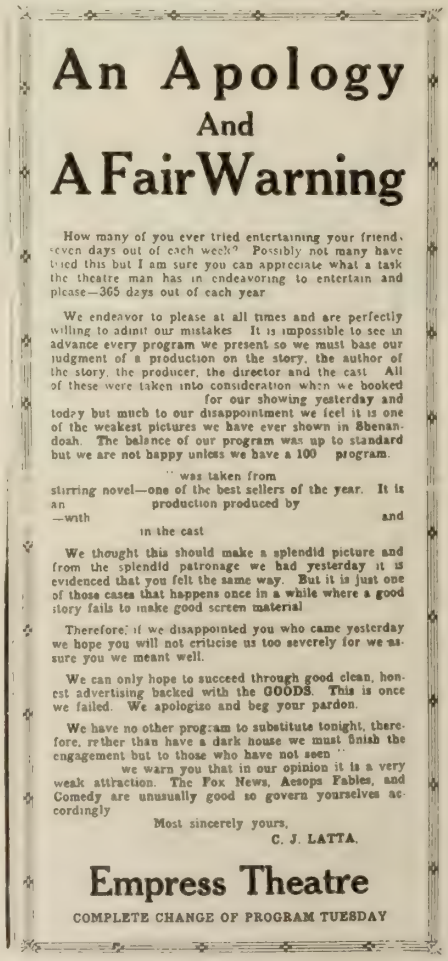
Through no thought of obtaining this publicity did I take the action I did, but, on the other hand, with an honest, sincere feeling at heart to be fair and square with my patrons. No man can hope to succeed or last very long in the business world practicing unfair methods of obtaining business. You can fool some of the people some of the time but you can't fool all the people all of the time. I want the good will of all the people all of the time.

Reputation Counts

I have been working hard to convince my patrons that I am a square shooter and that when I say a thing they can bank on it. Rather than destroy confidence I would far rather loose a few dollars on a picture for in the end it will all come back and more too.

Patronage was cut considerable after issuing warning but the few dollars lost has been more than offset by the confidence gained. Many have complimented me on my fairness and say I am a good sport. With a change of program the following day business was above average in the face of considerable opposition.

As stated before I had no thought of launching a campaign against the producers of the picture which I was showing. I did not advertise in this manner to arouse curiosity, with but one thought in mind, to instill in the minds of my patrons confidence.



An Apology
And
A Fair Warning

How many of you ever tried entertaining your friends seven days out of each week? Possibly not many have tried this but I am sure you can appreciate what a task the theatre man has in endeavoring to entertain and please—365 days out of each year.

We endeavor to please at all times and are perfectly willing to admit our mistakes. It is impossible to see in advance every program we present so we must base our judgment of a production on the story, the author of the story, the producer, the director and the cast. All of these were taken into consideration when we booked for our showing yesterday and today but much to our disappointment we feel it is one of the weakest pictures we have ever shown in Shenandoah. The balance of our program was up to standard but we are not happy unless we have a 100 program.

" was taken from a stirring novel—one of the best sellers of the year. It is an production produced by —with and in the cast.

We thought this should make a splendid picture and from the splendid patronage we had yesterday it is evidenced that you felt the same way. But it is just one of those cases that happens once in a while where a good story fails to make good screen material.

Therefore, if we disappointed you who came yesterday we hope you will not criticise us too severely for we assure you we meant well.

We can only hope to succeed through good clean, honest advertising backed with the GOODS. This is once we failed. We apologize and beg your pardon.

We have no other program to substitute tonight, therefore, rather than have a dark house we must finish the engagement but to those who have not seen " we warn you that in our opinion it is a very weak attraction. The Fox News, Aesops Fables, and Comedy are unusually good so govern yourselves accordingly.

Most sincerely yours,
C. J. LATTA.

COMPLETE CHANGE OF PROGRAM TUESDAY

Mr. Latta's Ad

Probably no one was more surprised than Mr. Latta at the country-wide publicity his action gained. His single idea was to square himself with his public for an overboomed picture. He found that it did not come up to his promises and was willing to risk a loss of immediate rather than risk a complete loss of patron-confidence. It's a fine example of clean business methods. He lost considerable business on the second day of the run, but he is better able to sell coming pictures through his advertising because his patrons have confidence in that advertising.

It is not the first instance, for ten years ago the late George Bleich, of Owensboro, Ky., printed an apology for a picture that got by him and he also originated the classic line on Caruso in "My Cousin," when he wrote: "It's a pretty poor picture, they tell me, but you have his phonograph records. Come and see what he looks like."

Many managers ride soft on a weak sister, but Mr. Latta came out with a frankness that has put Shenandoah on the map along with himself.

Merry Widow Waltz is Stressed in Chicago

One of the most intensive musical campaigns ever made on a picture was planned in Chicago for The Merry Widow.

At the Roosevelt, where the picture was to play, it was made an organ solo for the five weeks preceding the opening. At the Chicago theatre selections from the operetta was a program feature for a week and is estimated to have been heard there by at least 100,000 persons while as many more heard it at the Uptown theatre. Paul Ash, at McVickers, brought in 65,000 more and six Balaban and Katz theatres and 19 Lubliner and Trinz theatres backed up five radio programs.

Copies of the score were given all theatre conductors and leaders of dance orchestras, and of course the phonograph stores were swung into line. Everyone heard it and most persons were whistling it.

To back this up there were drives on the popular priced novel, 125 billboards, 360 elevated station cards, 100,000 Balaban and Katz magazines, which is a real, readable magazine and of course the usual newspaper ads.

Naturally the picture got off to a good start.

A Window Teaser

Window teasers are less usual than ads and tack cards, and it helped C. H. Amos put over Graustark at the Carolina Theatre, Greenville, S. C.

He arranged with a jeweler to put his best diamonds and pearls into the window with a sign reading merely "These are the crown jewels of Graustark." People mildly wondered what the Graustarkian crown jewels were doing in Greenville, to be enlightened a few days later when the sign was amplifid by "As worn by Norma Talmadge in Graustark at the Carolina Theatre, Monday."

This is a good stunt where the same people pass a window daily.

Mr. Amos also hired a portable electric sign forty feet high which flashed "Norma," "Talmadge" and "Graustark" alternately.

Phantom of the Opera Was a Saratoga Cleanup

Phantom Sold Well in a Saratoga Run

Up in Saratoga, N. Y., the Phantom of the Opera came within $120 of The Hunchback of Notre Dame. But there was an important difference. Notre Dame was played during the racing season, and the Phantom had to get all its money from the natives. It is a vastly different proposition to sell in the off season as against a time when the Springs are crowded with visitors who have nothing to do when the ponies are not breaking hearts, pocket books and records at the track, but exploitation did it.

Ben Strauss, who runs the Palace Theatre for Harrington and Goldsmith, had the assistance of Sidney Davidson, of the home office of Universal.

Stored Fake Cans

The big break came with the supposed arrival of the film. The day before a set of cans had been planted with the baggagemaster, and for several days it had been announced that each boy to escort the film to the theatre would be given a bag of candy.

A local confectioner not only supplied the candy at half the cost, but he made a window display of Phantom Red candies with plenty of advertising. There were ten other windows.

The film was taken to the theatre on a truck on which was a ten-foot box covered with red bunting and lettered with the title. A large painting of Chaney was shown. It took two police to keep the boys in order as they made their progress to the theatre.

A lobby display showed a devil clutching at the Paris Opera House. Green tissue eyes were given the devil and the windows of the building were illuminated, while behind the display a phonograph ground out Faust records.

Much use was made of the stills on the picture and the display provided by Grosset & Dunlap.

Effective Window Cost Very Little

Green crepe paper, a pack of playing cards and a few yards of cheap ribbon were the inexpensive materials used for a striking window display on the Ace of Spades when it came to the Olympia Theatre, Cleveland.

A. J. Sharick, Universal exploiteer, borrowed the window of an empty store next door to the theatre. He made a frame of green crepe paper, carpeted the window floor with the same material and ran a drape across the top. The light bulbs were covered with the same material.

With a pack of cheap playing cards he formed a horseshoe on the window with the ace of spades in the centre and a royal flush and a full house on the sides.

Streamers of orange baby ribbon led from the cards to the large ace of spades on which the selling talk was lettered.

The cost was slight, but the effect was a big splash that helped to put over the chapter play. It cost less than a 24-sheet and made a much better impression.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Despite the objection of certain showmen to atmospheric prologues, this theatre continues to pack them to the door through the means of prologues that are in a class by themselves. The fact that these presentations are built on a basis of entertainment is probably the answer, as there is no attempt to lift scenes give information about the photoplay. With the Colleen Moore productions. "We Moderns," a 20-minute atmospheric prologue was staged, which was equally as successful as "The Campus Frolics" for Harold Lloyd, or "Annie Rooney's Gang" for Mary Pickford.

This entire performance took up 1 hour and 54 minutes, of which time the feature film itself required 1 hour and 10 minutes. The musical presentations ran for 36 minutes and the only other film subject on the show, the Topical Review, took its accustomed 8 minutes.

Each de luxe performance was started off by the "William Tell" overture of Rossini, interpreted in scenic and lighting effects and played by the Famed Mark Strand Orchestra, with Harold Stern and Emil Bierman conducting. The lights: Deep blue Mestrum floods on the orchestra from the dome, with foots and borders of the orchestra stage in blue; 4 steel blue spots on the purple spangled draw-curtains, which were closed across the production stage. Following the tempo of the music, these lights dimmed off and lightning and rain effects were used for the storm episode. After the storm came the rainbow effects and the lights dimmed up to all white for the close. This overture took 8 minutes.

Harry Breuer, xylophonist of the orchestra, followed with a special arrngement of "Some of These Days," playing from his place in the orchestra.

After the Topical Review came a piano solo, "Hungarian Fantasie" (Liszt) by Lilly Kovacs, also in the orchestra.

The "Atmospheric Prologue," with 11 people, and taking up 20 minutes, ran as follows: "Sometime," sung by soprano with interpolated dance by 2 girls and 1 man; "Laughing Rag," an octachord solo by Roy Smeck; an eccentric dance by a male dancer; "Valse Elegante," a saxophone solo by Merle Johnston; specialty dance by male dancer; 6 girl dncers to the tune of "Then I'll Be Happy;" "I Never Knew," sung by tenor; "Hayseed Rag," by Roy Smeck, playing a harmonica and guitar at the same time; "Hugo I Go Where You Go," by the Ensemble. The set consisted of an especially constructed chandelier hung center stage; a black draped leg drop, antique gold curtains through which could be seen a neutral sky drop. This latter drop was lighted by Mestrum blue box lamps. A green hedge row ran across just back of the gold curtains, the height of this being about 10 feet to give depth and balance to the scene. This hedge was flooded by light green. A tasselled valance border was used to top off the scene. Two gold settees were placed at either side with 3 side tables in various positions. The 11 people were costumed in the modern vogue to grasp as nearly as possible the atmosphere of the story.

HYMAN'S MODERN PROLOGUE FOR WE MODERNS IN BROOKLYN

Jazz bands and Jazz dancers are eminently typical of the new Colleen Moore play, so the prologue at the Mark-Strand, Brooklyn, included these two features in one of Hyman's charactertistically happy arrangements.

H. B. Sobottka Makes His Semi-Annual Report

Sobottka Stunts Pull for Tacoma

Waiting until he had a lot to write about, H. B. Sobottka of the Colonial theatre, Tacoma, Wash., shoots in a batch of stunts.

One of the best deals with a popularity contest for the most popular policeman in connection with The Making of O'Malley. Charles Roediger, advertising manager for the Moore Amusement Company helped with this, as he did with most of the stunts. The Times was sold the idea and gave from one to three column breaks on the front page every day. To help along the house staged a free performance for institutional children which was sponsored by the police. As a by-product the police loaned equipment to dress the ushers for the run of the play and a policeman-organist played the prelude to the picture as a spotlighted feature, the paper contributing another front page three column cut. A truck carried a miniature truck loaded with votes for a ballyhoo. Mounted police escorted the turnout.

For Not So Long Ago anyone who had lived in Tacoma for thirty-five years went in free. An 1898 Oldsmobile was driven around the streets by a very pretty girl accompanied by a 1925 model. Having used the automobile on that, he staged a push-mobile race for boys on The Lucky Devil, the police giving him a cleared street in appreciation of the popularity stunt.

For The Ten Commandments, he borrowed a pair of the original chariots and kept them on the streets. As there was a Knights Templar conclave he took the chariots over to the Hotel Winthrop to be photographed, getting in the hotel's conclave decorations as a good backing. It not only helped the photograph, but the hotel appreciated the publicity when the papers printed the picture.

For Adventure he used a wild man for a couple of days, but the wild man quit because it got too cold to work, but two days was enough to get the business. On The Night Club he located a man who is nearly a double for Griffith, though a little older. Immaculately dressed he went around town with a blanketed bull terrier. The terrier was a trick dog and whenever he did his stuff he played to a large crowd. He is using the same man on later pictures; a sort of trade mark idea.

For The Air Mail the post office put an actual air mail box in front of the theatre and made regular collections. Cards were used in the post office and branches and all postal employees were guests at one evening performance.

New Lives for Old gave a hook-in to all Fleischmann's yeast trucks on the vitamin appeal, and for Isn't Life Wonderful he put his usherettes into bathing suits and sent them down to the beach in a borrowed car, which got him a good play-up on the automobile pages of all the papers through the agency loaning the car. Don't think he was cruel to the girls. He pulled the stunt last June. We told you he was a bit deliberate in reporting. The idea was that the girls had to hustle so seating the crowds that they needed their morning tonic.

All of the features were aided with window tie-ups and the usual standard program. Mr. Sobottka was assistant to J. W. Sayre, of Seattle, and he learned to put them over thoroughly over one of the best hustlers in the business.

NOTHING IS SAID ABOUT THE MAKING OF O'MALLEY

All of the banner goes to a newspaper contest for the most popular policeman in Tacoma, but everyone knew that the contest was an offshoot of the Sills' picture, and it was not necessary to add the title and theatre name. Everyone knew.

Treated Vets

Playing to the title, Carl McLean, of the Columbia Theatre, St. Thomas, Ont., staged an Old Timers' Night, when all who had lived in St. Thomas for fifty years were the guests of the management. It made talk about the play, and people came.

A loan exhibit of old time views made a fine window display and he even managed to swing a co-op page, hooked to the older establishments.

Chaplin Race Gold Rush Idea

Figuring that the Chaplin impersonation contest is a little too old, C. T. Perrin figured a new angle for The Gold Rush at the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col.

He held to the impersonation, but the boys had to take it on the run. The boys had to be under twelve and to come dressed as Chaplin in the baggy trousers and overlarge shoes. They gathered at the theatre at half past four the opening day.

Permission had been gained to stop traffic for a moment, and after it had been explained to the boys that the first one around the block got a five dollar gold piece, they were started off. A policeman at each corner held the traffic in check to make it safe and the boys had only to watch their speed.

In addition to the first prize, the second boy home got a pass for his father and mother and the next four got a single apiece. Of course all of the boys went in to see the swing show.

It got more newspaper notice because it was novel, and it drew a larger crowd. It had been advertised the previous week when The Freshman had them packed in. With The Freshman and The Gold Rush on successive weeks Greeley must be suffering from sore sides.

Took a Chance

Because the West End section of Toledo has been terrorized by a maniac with a penchant for clubbing women, the East Lynne balley for the Temple theatre capitalized the news sensation.

The balley was the usual old fashioned rig with women in equally old fashioned dresses, which toured the downtown section. The kick came from the sign on the side of the vehicle which announced that "Lady Isabel defies the slugger. She will visit the West End tonight."

Two of the slugger's victims were fatally beaten, but he never got a crack at "Lady Isabel." She carried too much of a gallery along with her.

Stenciled 3,000

When Seven Chances was offered at the American theatre, Evansville, Ind., a stencil was made of a three-foot figure seven with another to letter in "Take a chance and see Seven Chances."

These were used at very street corner and on the roads well out of town, the total running close to three thousand. All hotel guests whose room numbers ended in seven were given tickets to see Keaton and a clown perambulator with the seven on his back and chest do his daily promenade for the run of the picture.

The management did not have to dip into the red ink.

Finds a New One For Classifieds

Pat McGee got a bright idea for classified ad hooks. He wanted to help along The Midshipman at the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, and he tied to the want ads.

Each day the News printed a group of dashes on the front page and offered a double pass to The Midshipman to those who picked from the want ads words corresponding to the dashes and forming a perfect sentence.

If there were three dashes, you picked out a three letter word for that space and ten dashes probably stood for "Midshipman.'" A sentence of several words was offered each day, and for the time being it was even more popular than the cross word puzzles.

The beauty of the idea is that it can be worked on any title and can be run for several weeks on end without tiring the more presistent thought it may be necessary to add one to give the title.

A side line was an invitation to the recruiting service of the Navy to attend the performance, but it does not appear that the recruits were tied to any other stunts.

Paintings, Too

When Romola was played by Loew's State Theatre, Memphis, the Public Library not only made a card announcement, but permitted a display of the oil paintings, which helped to run up a demand that required the purchase of additional copies of the book. It also helped the circulation of other books of the same period.

As this was the library's first adventure in cooperation, the results are important.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

A STUNT THAT GETS BOTH MEN AND WOMEN INTERESTED

C. C. Deardouff, Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer, has developed the woman who models Merry Widow slippers in shoe store windows in his district. This is how it looked in Toledo where it was worked for Loew's Valentine Theatre. It's a sure fire.

West Coast Campaigns That Cleaned Up Phantom

Western Campaigns Put Over Phantom

About the strongest campaign on The Phantom of the Opera yet to be recorded comes in from Seattle where the A. J. Kennedy, of Universal, used the entire press book and rolled a few of his own. Much of it was duplicated later for the Clemmer theatre, Spokane.

One of the most effective stunts was the illuminated shirt front, originated thirty-five years ago for Hoffman House cigars. That was worked with a dickey, or false shirt front, of three ply cloth. The two lower were pulled from the upper and the letters forming "The Phantom of the Opera, Columbia, Now," were cut from the fabric, which was again sewed to the top layer. The effect can be worked more easily by cutting the letters in stiff cardboard and pasting down a layer of fine linen. This is worn over a shallow box with three small electric globes fed from a battery carried in the pocket, and the shirt is worn with evening dress. A push contact permits the letters to be flashed on and off. It's venerable, but it still works well. It can be worked daytimes in stores and restaurants and on the street at night.

A balloon with a lifting capacity of seven pounds was painted red and lettered in silver. This soared over the theatre for a week in advance. Coincident with the opening, a thirty foot figure of the Phantom, made from Phantom Red china silk over a framework of light wire was attached. This time the balloon was sent higher up so that the figure appeared to be floating in the air. The same stunt can be worked with box kites.

A local company put out a Phantom Chocolates that yielded 47 windows and more were had through the home office hookups.

Ten cutouts from the 24-sheet were placed on top of one story buildings though the business district, and another was given a dance hall that staged a Phantom of the Opera masquerade ball on Halloween Night with costume prizes and special prizes for the best Phantom make-up.

But the biggest stunt was putting the music rehearsal on the radio. The employees of the Universal exchange augmented the theatre staff as "audience" and the announcer would tell of the thrilling scenes which caused the supposed spectators to gasp with horror or amazement. When the chandelier fell a glass crash augmented the screams of the crowd, and the announcer had to tell all about that. All of this was incidental to the orchestral rehearsal and the singing of the Faust numbers which formed part of the presentation.

More than thirty stores were tied to the beauty preparations, a package of which was presented every woman patron.

MAKING A DARK HOUSE HELP THE MERRY WIDOW

The Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., being closed, Charles H. Amos used the desirable location for a 24-sheet cutout for the Carolina. He used a prologue from a dancing school and the familiar age table with the query, How Old is the Merry Widow?

Improving Edgar

You'll probably recall Edgar Hart's broken record showcard in which a smashed phonograph record formed a part of the sign to visualize the idea. W. G. Bishop, a Metro-Goldwyn exploiteer has built up on this for The Unholy Three.

He uses a number of records, each lettered with the name of some house where The Unholy Three had been a cleanup, using only the large cities.

In Dubuque, Iowa, these were placed in a phonograph store with a card telling that "The Unholy Three will break all records in Dubuque, at the Majestic, as it has all over the country, but you can't break our new unbreakable records." A supply of the new indesrtuctible records gave point to the display.

Snappy Cards About Take-a-Chance Week

Here is copy for a couple of throwaway cards gotten out by George E. Planck who ran Take-Chance Week at the Sedalaia Theatre, Sedalia, Mo. He used two cards on light pasteboard stock printing both sides. One card has: "Jesse James took a chance and other things," with "Solomon took a chance with 1,000 wives and was known as a learned man." The other shows "Everyone takes a chance when he eats hash," while "Salome took a chance with only seven veils."

On one side the "Take a chance" runs across the face in an outline 18 point, and runs the width of the 3½ by 2 inch card. The other side has the type running the narrow way with "Take a chance" in a twelve point bold with a one point rule underline.

The copy runs at the top with considerable white space between that and "Next week is take a chance week at, etc."

It's an effective way to put over the idea the first time, and Planck writes that it drew him a nice increase.

Makes Seers of Regum Patrons

David J. Lustig, who is manager of the Regum Theatre, here in town, is the author of a number of books on various phases of vaudeville instruction and also issues a booklet on fortune telling with cards.

The latter was recently distributed to his Regum patrons with the compliments of the house. It not only forms an acceptable souvenir to most women, but it stresses the fact that the Regum is conducted by a veteran showman, and backs up the back page display which reads in part, "Regum programs are built by showmen for your entertainment."

The book is twelve pages, with a colored cover, and makes a nice appearance. Most of them will be retained until they are worn out, and each use will remind of the theatre.

Souvenirs such as this have a practical value beyond the moment and do the house a permanent good.

Mr. Lustig has sent in a number of good ideas, including the "paste this to your mirror" fidelity test, but we do not think that he has done anything better than this.

Identification Idea Worked by Newspaper

Just before Thanksgiving the Chronicle, of Houston, Texas, worked an identification stunt apparently on its own initiative since four houses were involved, one of them being opposition to the other three, which are Paramount houses, the Queen, Capitol and Isis, with the Rialto in the lone position.

It ran a "Thanksgiving Movie Contest" in the shape of a hook-up page dealing with holiday supplies, and in each space was part of a cut of some star. These sections had to be assembled and named, just as in the usual co-op style, with prizes for accuracy and novelty. The only difference was that no particular picture was exploited, the idea being put over by the newspaper instead of by some theatre.

The prizes were passes donated by the theatres and presumably the publicity was pro rated according to the number of tickets supplied.

The major point of interest is found in the fact that the newspaper knew a good thing and used it.

A China Program

One of the most elaborate programs now being published comes from Shanghai, China, where the Apollo Theatre gets out a 24-page weekly that carries heavy advertising patronage. It is well handled and in two colors gives a big smash. One of its best features is a preview of the following picture. Three issues have been sent in to show that it is not a flash in the pan.

Would It Make a Dog Mad to Miss a Tom Mix Play?

Card Handouts Get Reader's Interest

The manager of the Elm Theatre, Danvers, Mass., sends in what he modestly styles "circulars," though they are more elaborate than the usual throwaway and are apt to be treated with greater respect.

The stock is fairly heavy card, often colored, and is designed for house to house distribution. Ordinarily it would not pay to use such stock, but we take it that this is about the only advertising the house can do, and figures that it pays to do it right.

The stock will not permit reproduction, but the essential idea is that the house seeks to sell the picture and not merely announce it. Time is taken to prepare effective copy, to tell about the picture attractively, and to bring out all its good points. Rule work is sparingly used to panel, and the typographical display is a credit to the printer. The shop has the type faces and knows how to use them, producing an inviting appeal.

But it's not just type. It's the talk. This is earnest and effective and probably sells more tickets than would a score of hastily prepared throwaways.

It pays to take the time to do it right, if you have the ability to talk interestingly in type. If you haven't, it's a waste of good stock to go on cards. It must pay the Elm.

A Fox Release

A WINDOW DISPLAY THAT SELLS THE LUCKY HORSESHOE

A compo board horseshoe and some gay mufflers and a Stetson give life to the display of stills and a supposed letter from Mix, urging the citizens of Stratford, Ont., to see his picture at the Classic Theatre. It makes a whale of a display.

This Dog Was Mad to Visit Tom Mix

Changing around the blind man stunt, the Temple theatre, Toledo, balleyed Tom Mix in The Everlasting Whisper with a dog in a faked animal den. The banner explained that he was "Dangerous—and mad" because he was caged and unable to see Tom.

On the back of the den was a sign stating that this was one of the wolves used in the Fox production, and a dog was selected who could both look and act the part.

The stunt was heightened by feeding the animal at good pitches. The outfit would be stopped and an attendant would cautiously thrust in a strip of meat on the end of a long iron rod. The dog had been on short rations in preparation for the event, and he soon learned that stops meant food and he tore around the cage until he got his steak tartare.

Small photos of Mix carrying copy for the picture and the local basketball schedules were distributed at all games.

All women who had entertained, according to the society notes for three weeks back, received a letter suggesting that their next entertainment include a visit to the Temple and offering to reserve a block of seats for the party.

A three weeks file of newspapers gave 5,500 names for this very effective circularization.

Gets Much Space With Suspenders

Knowing what the editors like got Barry Burke an extra lot of publicity for Gloria Swanson in The Coast of Folly when he offered that at the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

He remembered that in this picture Miss Swanson uses suspenders to hold up her sport skirt. He found a girl who was willing to follow the star's example, bought her the prettiest pair of suspenders he could find, had her photographed in a number of poses and turned her loose on the streets.

She was one of the sights of the town in no time at all, and attracted no end of attention. As soon as the reports of her progress got around, Burke hustled over to the newspaper offices with his supply of pictures, knowing that editors like pictures of pretty girls when there is any excuse for using them.

They all took one of the stills and ran a caption that told how the idea had been lifted from The Coast of Folly. Then other girls took up the idea and gave it a lot of free advertising, the furnishing stores got a number of unexpected sales, and The Coast of Folly receipts went up like a balloon.

You can always find some well connected girl who is not averse to a little publicity.

Bangor Manager Makes Strong Drive on Air Mail

Good Stunts from a Bangor Theatre

New England, as a unit, shows less hustle than any part of the country, but when they do hustle, they work hard. The trouble is that the hustlers are pretty widely spaced.

A. M. De Haven, of the Opera House, Bangor, Maine, sends in a batch of ideas, including some special half sheets for Flower of the Night, with a red rose as background for the title. Done in a strong black and fairly good red, this is a smashing eye-catcher. It looks as though the color had been put in from a wooden tint block or an oilcloth cut, but it gets over and makes the paper many times more attractive than the straight block letter that most home printed sheets offer.

THE POST OFFICE HOOKUP CARD

For The Pony Express he made a deal with the postmaster to placard all lamp posts carrying mail boxes, the copy contrasting The Pony Express with the present speedy air facilities. The photograph is not strong enough to show up in a cut, but he used two cards, back to back, tied to each post. The copy is in red and blue and the diagonal lines are in the same colors, giving the effect of a red, white and blue ribbon. It is very effective; the strongest mail hook up we have seen yet.

The Postal Telegraph hook to this picture also was used, and the Postal supplied envelopes for card heralds which were slipped into the mail boxes of all hotel guests. Hotel cooperation is a regular stunt with Mr. De Haven, who gets an imprint on the menus of the two leading hotels.

He landed the serial publication of Winds of Chance on the local paper, the picture running on Thanksgiving Day, about the time the publication ended the run. It assured a good business on a day when most of New England stays home.

His prologues seem to be a feature, for he sends in no fewer than three clippings in which the newspaper makes special mention of the productions, and he seems to stand well with the editor on general press notes.

He is pretty nearly as far "Down East" as he can get, but he shows a Western hustle for all that. More depends upon the man than his geographical location.

Bob Style Show is Newest in Pullers

Now it's the bobbed hair style show.

When Warner Brothers offered Bobbed Hair at their New York house, six girls trimmed by one of the leading hair specialists to show the six leading styles of haircut were used as a prologue feature to the Marie Prevost picture. Each style was lectured and the girls slowly revolved to give the audience the effect from every angle.

Putting it over, Randall White put out 30,000 throwaways announcing a free matinee for bobbed girls, and the house was packed. This was good, but he came back with a second matinee for girls with long hair, and he again packed the house in spite of the prevailing belief that there ain't no such animal.

You can land some hair cutter in your town to help you put over the stunt, and with proper advance exploitation you can make this a real puller.

How Doc Clemmer Put Over Rex With Little Cut

Panel Backing is Little Too Weak

In this four eights from the Orpheum Theatre, Paducah, Ky., we think that Harold H. Bailey would have gained a little better effect had he made the line backing stronger. The idea of a backing is to throw the rest

A Paramount Release

TOO LITTLE CONTRAST

into relief. Here the lightly dotted strips are too nearly the color of the display panels to afford contrast, and the effect is not as good as it would have been had the design been made heavier. If you balance a pound against a pound you get an even scale. It's the same way with a display. If your backing has the same display value as the panel it is intended to make prominent, then the result is a failure. A solid black line should have given good result, or a plain white space would have helped, but here the color values are too evenly divided. The panel should have been so black that the rest appeared white through contrast, or else the white ground should have been used for the announcements. It's one of those things you are apt to discover from experience. The only thing in this display to get the fullest emphasis is the signature. You see that the moment your glance hits the space, but you must pick the announcements from the background. Probably Mr. Bailey figured that a darker ground would be too pronounced, but that was precisely what he needed. It is the contrast that counts rather than the artistic effect. He uses type insert in the circle for the feature, but letters in the announcement for the local production by the Elks. This, too, should have been in type. It's a big stunt to have the Elks, and the fullest prominence should have been given this angle of the announcement. The fullest display can come only from properly selected type faces. You cannot do it even with good hand lettering, and this hand work is not good. We do not think this measures up to Mr Bailey's standard other than in the proportioning, which is very good. The wider than deep space is particularly indicated where two items are to be presented with equal prominence. Mr. Bailey writes that he is handicapped in the carrying out of his ideas through lack of a reliable artist. It might be better to trust to type and press book material. He shows what can be done along these lines with his three tens from the Arcade Theatre. Here he uses a press book cut and gets a portrait and title that give a much better result. Even where the plan book offers what seems to be excessive cut material, it is almost always possible to cut away a portion of the cut and use only what is desired. First National often gives too much cut in its mats, but that does not mean that all of the cut face must be used in the local display. Generally a portion can be eliminated to give what is wanted. Paramount cuts are even more flexible in this way, for the cuts are made with the realization that they may be used in sections. If Mr. Bailey will get away from the idea that he cannot do without an artist, we think he will save money and at the same time get better results. The Arcade is easily the better of these two, barring the signature. A slug signature should be devised.

A First National Release

PRESS BOOK WORK

Gets a Big Smash With Bold Strokes

This large space (about four elevens), from the Clemmer Theatre, Spokane, is not as finished as some of the Black Cyclone drawings, but it is about as effective, and the big point is that it involved less nicety in art work. The only real drawing was the horse's head, and there is comparatively little detail in this. Most of the Black Cyclone spaces have depended upon the spirited drawings of the horses to get over. Here some jazz lightning and the horse's head carry about the same effect with something like one tenth of the work. The end of the display is to sell tickets, and if less work will sell as many seats, it is foolish to spend too much time on a design to be used but once. This is not decrying fine art work in ad illustration, but it is intended to bring comfort—and suggestion—to the man who feels that he cannot attain the grade of artistic excellence and yet who wishes to sell thoroughly. This seems to be a back date example, for the snow letters are not typical of the present season and this announcement speaks of the premier showing in the Northwest, but the idea is still there. You can give a finished drawing, or you can make force take the place of style. The Clemmer puts over the picture well with a minimum of work, but it does it with a maximum of idea. Everything had been done to give the fullest display to the title and the idea of the horse, even to the utilization of the conspicuous circle. The entire space stands out, and gets just as much attention as the better illustration. Even the hand lettering is excusable here since ruggedness is desired. The same effect might have been gained through the use of rugged bold, but probably the office did not stock this face It is not usual in newspaper offices, and so the house played safe and made its own. Cutting down to column width is going to cramp the display decidedly, but you can get the idea, and the big idea is that bold strokes will carry over a design such as any average high school pupil can achieve under careful direction.

CRUDE BUT STRONG

Uses Little Talk For Large Space

Alhtough the Ritz Theatre, Mansfield, Ohio, took a four fours for Denny in California Straight Ahead, it did not pack the space with words. They seemed to feel that if they put it over that Denny was to be seen in another comedy they would be able to achieve sales without much additional argument, but in another issue the house takes a single nine to adapt Fred E. Meyers "Banana Oil" copy. It may interest Mr. Meyers to know that he started something when he wrote that copy and sent us one of the ads. It has been used in many sections of the country and on a variety of comedy titles. It seemed to hit a lot of managers as being just what they needed, and they tied it to whatever title they had. Mr. Meyers has sold a lot of tickets in about half the states of the Union. It's pat talk and it is framed to space well, and managers have been quick to see its usefulness. Probably the most rudely copied advertisement was R. B. Wilby's "phonograph record" copy of a dozen years back. We do not recall any other single piece of copy that has been so widely used, but Mr. Meyers has a pretty good record on the Banana Oil. Probably this was one of the reasons the Ritz felt that it would not be necessary to argue strenuously over in the four fours. For that matter Denny has a good string of hits at his back and his name and the new title will sell in most places. It paid Universal to put him over in a string of real hits. It put him firmly on the map.

Lewis Adopts a Los Angeles Ad

Cliff Lewis sends in a Lost World ad from the Strand theatre, Syracuse, that seems to have been adapted from the Los Angeles display reproduced in these pages. It may be that it is a stock cut and not a Los Angeles idea in the first place, for the general display seems to be the same. Anyhow Cliff saw that it was a good idea, and it made a nice two fours. A two fours is almost an extravagance for Cliff. Often he keeps the display down to a double two. But he probably figured that this was good enough to deserve an extra display, and he got lavish. If he can sell them on six or eight inches, he would be foolish to take more.

A GOOD WAY TO SELL

Serial Rights Sell Phantom

Laying off the serial publication rights to The Phantom of the Opera to the Milwaukee Leader saved the Alhambra Theatre a pretty space bill. The newspaper gave a

"The Prima Donna Has Vanished"
INVISIBLY snatched from the stage—in the midst of a brilliant performance!
Where had she gone? How had she vanished? And the whisper ran around the Paris Opera House—
"She has been kidnaped by the Phantom!"
Her disappearance is one of many baffling mysteries in "The Phantom of the Opera," by Gaston Leroux. It is the most romantic and bewildering mystery story ever written.
The Leader will publish this extraordinary novel as a daily serial beginning Saturday, Oct 10, in the Magazine Section
This is by arrangement with Universal Pictures, who have made a spectacular production of the story. Watch for the picture, and read the story in The Leader.

THE COMBINATION

better than three sixes to announce the publication and the Alhambra chimed in with a three twos, getting the value of a three eights at a quarter of the cost. The newspaper had to sell the thrills and mystery to get interest in its publication of the story, and every line automatically worked for the theatre, as well. Of course this also gave the posted delivery wagon and the other trimmings.

Parking Space a Theatre Appeal

Realizing the parking problem, the Mozart Theatre, Canton, Ohio, has arranged for parking space for a fee of fifteen cents, and considers the matter of sufficient importance to give it an extra panel in this space for the announcement of the move. California Straight Ahead is a play to make especial appeal to motorists, and the feature fits in nicely with the new departure. The idea seems to be that you park your car and get a rebate ticket when you purchase your seats. In the old days free parking was often an inducement, but the open lots have been taken over for parking stations and now the best that can be done seems to be a rebate scheme. We do not care for the cut used in this display. It does not carry any suggestion of comedy, and unless a cut contributes something to the sales, we think it would be better to omit the cut and trust more to the type. The compositor, too, has done what he could to muss things up. The words "Denny" and "Mozart" are set in the same type and cut off only by a very fine rule, the "Denny" being still further hampered by a "Reginald" rising too close on the top. The copy should have been arranged to let the signature go to the top. As it is the two words are too close together and the compositor has not even taken the trouble to correct the condition by using two type faces. This would have helped a little. The main trouble is that there is nothing in the display to suggest a rousing comedy. Denny's portrait might be that of the local undertaker and yet it crowds the real selling lines into a narrow width to the right. Leaving out the cut and hitting up the matter below the house name would have done more to get the idea over. It's largely space wasted.

Local Scandals The Trouble With Wives

When The Trouble with Wives was booked to Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., he got some back newspapers and a pair of shears and clipped all the recent domestic scandals.

These he pasted on a board in the lobby with the heading "Is This the Trouble with Wives?"

Some of the stories were about well known people and the idea attracted no little attention, the people dropping into the lobby to look the board over and remaining to read all of the headlines at least. When you can get the crowd to halt before your advertising, you are certain you are geting the story over.

The only trouble with the idea on this title is that the picture is a zippy comedy instead of a problem play, and efforts should be made to explain to the spectator that this is not another of the jazz-mad stories of which there have been far too many.

A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

In the Year of Our Good Luck

HERE we stand on the threshold. We have progressed down the corridor of the year and have come to the next door. Before we place our hands upon the latch to open it, it will not be amiss to look back in the direction we have taken and note the high spots which have dominated our progress.

When this department was first instituted, shortly after the beginning of the year, we submitted a platform which was in the form of an introduction. We submitted it with the hope that it would be a creed, and now as we recall it we find that it has borne fruit, that it has acted as a beacon. This creed was that

"We believe in the Prologue and the Presentation as an aid to the feature motion picture, as a means of exploitation and mark of distinction to the motion picture theatre.

"We believe in the ability of such features to attract at the box office, to link themselves with the picture as a 'co-earner.'

"We believe in the advancement of good music in the theatre, in the development of themes, the introduction of valued compositions, enabling the particular theatre to more effectively combat mediocre competition.

"We believe in the frank and constant interchange of ideas among producers, that by a dissemination of "all the truth," whether grief or achievement, progression will be more rapid.

"We believe in the maintenance of individuality, of giving credit where credit is due, of assisting our co-workers with authoritative information when we possess it, and not fearing to say, 'I don't know,' and at all times operating on the plane of sincerity where criticism is constructive, and praise is genuine."

The advancement made in the quality and quantity of presentations and prologues in the leading motion picture theatres the world over has demonstrated the increasing popularity of such attractions. Since this season has opened we have been struggling to define our work on a definite basis. We have been striving to analyze our production programs and to find a normal base of operation upon which we could build profitably. The New Year finds us almost in a hectic condition. We are torn between individual production work and vaudeville. We are casting about to locate some means of successfully routing attractions so that by group producing and booking we can secure better productions and pro rate the cost.

There are systems galore in the attempt to solve this problem and it seems that the only way out will be that presentations of a general or all-embracing nature will be the proper form to produce and route. It is difficult to book a specific prologue, especially in first run houses. Experience has taught us that if this is attempted, by the time the prologue has reached its fourth week of playing the picture is already old. Therefore prologues will of necessity be left to the individual theatre producers. There has been an influx of directors and producers from the other branches of the theatrical profession who have seen the gold glistening on the surface, and realize that the presentation field offers the best production in the show business today.

Naturally with this advent come new ideas, but we must be sure that the new ideas do not engulf us to the extent of eliminating and discarding the basic principles of presentation and prologue work which have characterized such stages, and which have raised the motion picture program to the de luxe position. It is so easy to make our programs savor of vaudeville and of musical comedy. The presentation must carry with it originality, it must be artistic and with the combination of the two, produce a punch.

What the New Year holds for us is problematical, but we will be able to set our house in order, and it is safe to predict that before this present season ends the major problems which perplex us today will be settled and that the coming year will be the year of our good luck.

In closing our folio for the year I wish to personally thank our army of readers who, by kindly word, encouraging letter, constructive criticism, have enabled us to develop this department. We have tried many forms; we have striven to truly serve; we have been determined that we would give our best efforts to publish only the things that are helpful, and as we conclude this department for the present year we step into a new form which will be more definite, more constructive than anything that has ever been offered in the way of presentation aids. Our work for next year will be characterized by its new features which we feel sure will give to producers and exhibitors the assistance they have been seeking.

To our many friends throughout the wide world, we wish you a New Year that will teem with happiness, prosperity and all good things. Let us look forward to it as being "the year of our good luck."

Beautiful Simplicity

Three Suggestions of Effective Fabric and Set Piece Settings, Which Do Not Entail Large Expense—Prevailing Modes in Stage Dressing Lean Toward Simple Little Touches—Lighting Plays Big Part

Moving Picture World Presentations—Devised By Colby Harriman

THERE are many times when a situation arises demanding an imposing set and ofttimes this same situation it not of sufficient importance to warrant an expensive scenic background. To achieve an imposing, impressive or the suggestion of a massive set, it is not necessary to fill the stage with units realistically carrying out the idea. With a judicious use of plush or velour drapes and limited units a better effect is often secured.

Before we embark upon a better presentation program we are closing this year's work with three suggestions of effective fabric and set piece setting, which are inexpensive and simple to produce.

No. 1 Window—Scrim-Silk Combination.

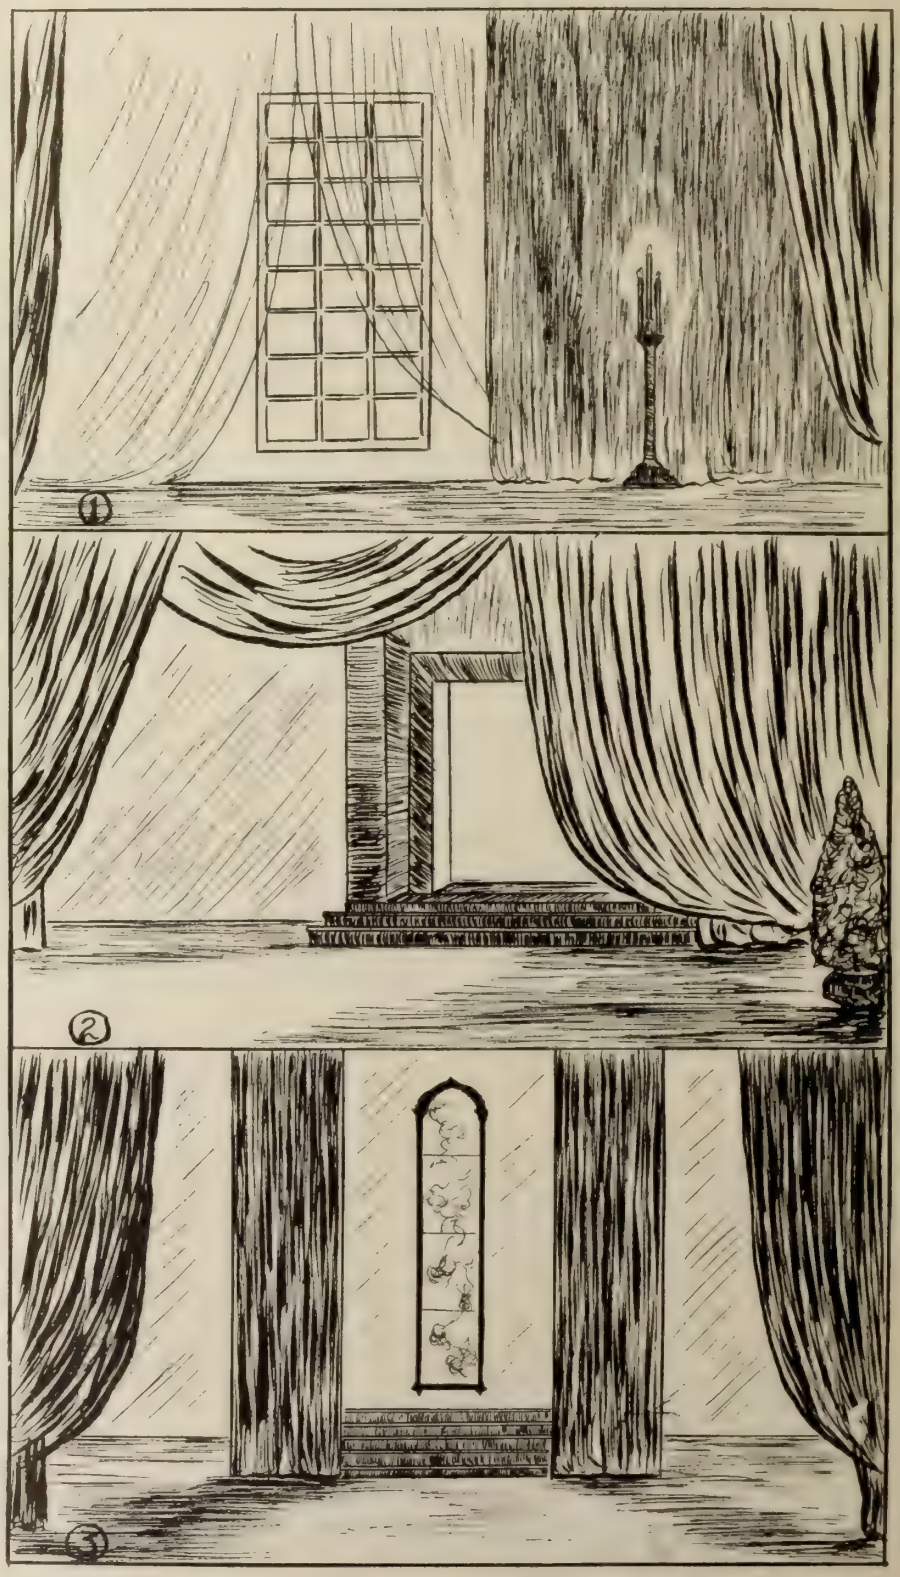
A large window frame placed up right center with a fabric backing. A scrim or pineapple cloth drape hung over the window in long sweeping folds. A silk or metalline tab drop to carry off from left of center, and two plush drapes to act as returns. This is an effective setting for the introduction of operatic singers. A vari-colored tone can be used on the backing of the window; pineapple cloth drapes can be toned a light green; the metalline curtain can be given a canary to rose tone and light purple highlighting the plush drapes. Candelabra up left center with amber dipped lamps will lend sufficient contrast to punctuate the various colors used.

2. Heavy Plush Combination.

A door way placed up center on a platform with steps leading to stage. Jogs can be placed to form thicknesses and a metalline tab drop can be hung back of the opening flooded with canary. The drapes used to dress the set can be units of a plush drop, the one on the left should be hung in a long heavy sweeping fold with the one at center caught in sweeping formation to blend with a leg brought down on an angle. The tapestry or silk tab drop can be used to carry off from the thickness piece of the door up right. In lighting this set the folds of the plush should be highlighted with a color much lighter than the color of the fabric. For instance, amber on red plush, canary on black or green. A boxwood tree can be used to dress the set.

3. Fabrics in Columnar Combinations.

An orange drop or a sky drop hung back with a stained glass window piece hung on the same battan. A platform of steps placed below the window. Two black legs hung in heavy folds to form columns. Heavy plush drapes in sweeping folds to act as return. The back drop should be highlighted from the sides so as to silhouette the columns. The stained glass window should be very colorful in contrast to the orange or blue backing. The folds of the heavy fabric curtain should be highlighted from the sides with the contrasting coloring.



Presentations at First Run Theatres

Super-Presentation at New York "Colony"

ON November 29th, B. S. Moss presented the second of the series of great combination programmes planned for the Colony Theatre when "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Parisian Gaieties" opened.

The success of this double offering as evidenced by the business being done and the public approval met with, has confirmed his judgment that the kind of motion picture theatre entertainment he started with Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman" and the stage presentation "Campus Capers" with 35 artists, is the type of entertainment motion picture theatre-goers are willing to support. This program ran for ten weeks at the Colony, and now with the present double program of "The Phantom of the Opera" starring Lon Chaney, and "Parisian Gaieties" with 75 in the cast, both in their fifth week with the prospect of several weeks more to run, there is still more evidence of such a program's popularity.

This policy of a double offering is original with the Colony Theatre for this beautiful Broadway playhouse has the distinction of being the first theatre to present such offerings in New York City. That this is the coming policy for motion picture theatres, is shown by the plans that other Broadway Movie Houses are making for elaborate stage presentations in conjunction with their photoplays.

In an interview with B. S. Moss, owner of the Colony, speaking of the new policy, he said,

"Prologue consisting of Ballet dances, vocal or instrumental solos, and the like are soon to be things of the past. The public wants something vastly different. To that end we have presented productions that were not merely vaudeville acts tossed hap-hazardly together for review, but miniature musical comedy productions with lyrics and music specially written; costumes specially designed and executed; scenery specially devised; in short, the same care and direction were given these productions as are usually devoted to a three hour musical comedy."

"Parisian Gaieties," produced under the personal supervision of B. S. Moss and presented in conjunction with "The Phantom," is one of the most pretentious presentations ever offered in a first class motion picture house in the East.

The show was staged by Harry Shaw and Jerry De Rosa with musical direction by Andre Dore, the specially written libretto and score, by George Bennett and Jack Glogau, costumes by Charles Le Maire, and the scenery was designed by Irving Eastman.

The story in brief of "Parisian Gaieties" is as follows:

Once a year the Parisian boulevards are closed in order that the students of the Sorbonne and other universities along with the artists of the Latin quarter, may make merry in their annual carnival. Wandering minstrels, clowns, jugglers, acrobats, musicians, singers, and gypsies, come from all parts of France to participate and profit thereby. A replica of this carnival has been put upon the Colony Theatre stage with all the color and vividness seen at the Parisian Mardi-Gras.

Incidentally the Colony Theatre has mechanical provisions sufficient to handle any intricate stage production which might be interpolated into future programs. Every modern facility was provided so that a stage presentation of any size and proportion could be advantageously staged without the necessity of closing and reconstructing the theatre. Newspapers have hailed "Parisian Gaieties" as the most elaborate and colorful stage production ever presented in a motion picture theatre in New York.

Mr. Moss, however, is not content to stop here. In the next picture which will be presented at the Colony at the conclusion of "The Phantom of the Opera" and "Parisian Gaieties" run, a stage production of even greater pretentiousness will be offered with a new libretto, and score, new costumes designed and executed and special scenery and effects devised.

Better Projection Pays

Bing! Take a Rubber at This!

OUR good friend Jack Levine, Projectionist at the Rialto Theatre, Leominster, Massachusetts, has sprung what seems to be a new one. He has yanked a leaf out of the exchange book, and he used it to hand the exchange a nice li'l dose of its own castor oil. The accompanying card is printed on a regulation U. S. postal card, stamp and all, presumably at the expense of Brother Levine, which shows that at least here and there a projectionist is waking up to the fact that a few cents of the weekly stipend invested in propaganda for their profession, or to help it in any way, is not by them considered as any less important than an equal amount expended semi-frequently for various things, you and I wrote of, which get neither them or anyone else anywhere except for the few hours they pay for.

Possibly, however, Brother Levine has a manager with vision, who himself put up the coin for the cards. Either way it speaks well for Levine, since he undoubtedly himself conceived the plan.

The accompanying card shows what this is all about. The writing is his own, except that I was obliged to trace his green ink over with black. McGuire, of the Powers Company, is hereby given official permission to take a rubber at the name of the production Levine has inserted. Apparently our new line at the head of the department is attracting some attention. Here is the card.

Golly! Notice the fact that Mr. Exchange is debarred from making claim for damage unless the claim be made within twenty-four hours, presumably after the exchange has received the films back and that no claim for damage will be considered unless the card shows "Excellent" or "Fair," which is, if you ask this particular editor, GOOD. It is exactly as it should be!

This thing of exchanges sending out junk, or films in bad condition, and then having the cast-iron GALL to claim damage when they fail to pass through the projector, and get some several feet of their length chewed up in the attempt, ought to be a two-sided affair. Either no claim for damage to the films should be considered, or else the theatre should put in a claim for damage to the theatre by reason of one or more stoppages of the show, and the element of fire hazard set up. No claim considered seems the more practical of the two, BUT it presumes a physical and rather careful examination of the films before projection—a thing I have always objected to as NOT any part of the duty of a projectionist.

My position on that has always been that the theatre buys SERVICE, and that SERVICE JUST NATURALLY PRESUMES FILMS IN GOOD MECHANICAL CONDITION—IN CONDITION TO PROJECT WITHOUT ANY EXAMINATION WHATSOEVER. One reason for this contention is that it is RGHT. Another reason is that not infrequently the films arrive at the theatre too late to be submitted to a careful examination before projection, which means that either they MUST be sent out in safe projectable condition, or else a distinct element of danger is entailed.

Well, anyhow, I certainly do admire Levine's nerve. So far as I know it is an original stunt. The exchange has not been at all bashful, in the past, about informing the theatre that it must do thus and so. Now let the projectionist, sticking strictly to right and proper things, tell the exchange where IT gets off at in the matter of poor to junk film service, and claims for damage to films which could hardly, through any possible stretch of imagination, be further damaged.

Exchanges, or some of them at least, have made it their practice to supply the smaller theatres with what amounted to pure, inadulterated JUNK, under the excuse that it was "cheap." Then, because the old, worn-out, decrepit, rainy, butchered-up, forsaken travesty on "service" became still further damaged in a futile endeavor to jump its way through a projector, the exchange put up a terrific squawk, claimed damages and—collected it, too!

As every reader of the department well knows, I am against the projectionist who unnecessarily damages film, either through laziness, carelessness or just plain ignorance. ALSO I AM AGAINST THE EXCHANGE WHICH SENDS OUT JUNK FILMS UNDER THE GUISE OF "SERVICE," UTTERLY REGARDLESS OF HOW "CHEAP" THE RENTAL PRICE MAY BE.

I take the position that when film so old, rainy and damaged that it is no longer possible to put on a really good show with it, then its usefulness to the motion picture industry has entirely ceased, and its further use is distinctly detrimental, nor can any cheapness of the rental price of the service offset that fact. As a matter of fact JUNK IS NOT CHEAP AT ANY PRICE. It would not be really cheap to the theatre if it were supplied absolutely free. It discourages theatre patronage. It disgusts those who would be regular patrons to the little theatre which uses it, unless the admission price be reduced to a point where there is no longer any profit in running the theatre.

My compliments to Jack Levine, Motion Picture Projectionist. I commend his plan to you all, but emulate him all the way through. DON'T be cheap, and just stick a card in the can with the films, where some exchange understrapper will see it, laugh and throw it away. In the mail it reaches the RIGHT PLACE IN THE EXCHANGE.

MANY inquiries have been received by the editor concerning the Powers-Simplex merger. The following letter is typical: E. R. Allen, Philadelphia, Pa., writes:

Dear Richardson: I looked rather eagerly in last week's department to find the particulars of the Powers-Simplex mix-up, but nothing appeared. What the other papers or the other sections of the Moving Picture World says about projection matters don't count. We depend upon your honorable self to give us the real "dope," so get busy. Bluebook School Answers No. 412 to 416

Question No. 412—Assuming the light sent forward by the projection lens to be the same in both instances, if your ten-foot-wide, undistorted picture space on the screen has an illumination equal to two (2) lumens per unit area, what will the illumination be, screen surfaces identical, if the picture size be increased to sixteen feet wide?

Let me remark that answers should be got here on time. Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia, sent in excellent answers to the last series (407-410) but they came just too late for consideration.

Walter Munn, Iron Mountain, Michigan, replies thus:

Neglecting the slight additional loss caused by the necessity for a wider rotating shutter master blade, the brilliancy would be decreased in direct proportion to the increase in screen area. A ten-foot picture would have an area equal to 10x7.5 equals 75 square feet, whereas a 16-foot picture would have an area of 192 square feet, hence the resultant brilliancy of the latter as compared to the former would be as 2x75/192 which is .87 lumens. (It is not. It is .78 plus lumens. Fix up your figerer. It's on the blink. Ed.)

W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, replies amusingly, as follows:

Having no mother to guide me in this matter, it has taken two hours' reading in the Bluebook to bring me to page 245, where I begin to be threatened with intelligence on this question. Am now wading through picture size and light demand and on page 246 bump into table No. 10, and find that increasing the picture width from 10 to 16 feet decreases the brilliancy by 61 per cent., hence, since 61 per cent. of 2 is 1.22, and 2 minus 1.22 equals .78, I arrive at full intelligence, via the Bluebook, and assert that the answer is .78 lumens.

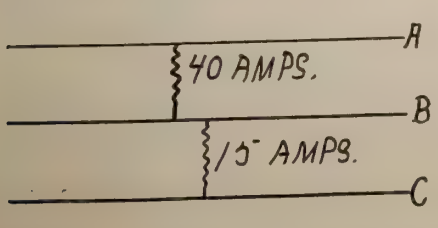
G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota, contents himself with asserting that the illumination would be .78 lumens. So does C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Allan R. Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and George F. Ginsberg, New York City. So I guess that brother Munn had the right figures, but wrote backwards. True he should not be so careless, but accidents just will happen sometimes, darn 'em, and anyhow what's a li'l matter like that between friends!

Question No. 413—Tell us exactly what the effect of the neutral fuse blowing will be when the load is balanced and when it is unbalanced, and why it is thus.

Munn sends in a reply which embodies the generally accepted idea, which he works out in detail. The editor is a bit jammed up on this one, however. The reply sent in by Brother Doe has set me thinking of this matter again and—well, read the two answers!

Friend Munn says:

When the load is balanced the blowing (removal) of the neutral fuse would not affect the flow of current in any way, because of the fact that no current flows through the neutral between the load and the generator under this condition. That is why I suggested substituting "removal" for blowing. It could not "blow" when it carries no load. (Bing! Bing! Ed.)



If the load is unbalanced, the side which has the smallest load will operate under more than 110 volts. Let us assume a case and assign real values. A, B and C are the wires of an Edison 3-wire system. The load from A to B is 40 amperes, but from B to C the load is only 15 amperes. Let us then examine how the voltage will split up when the neutral is removed.

First let us find the resistance, in ohms, between A, B and B, C. The resistance of A, B is equal to E divided by L, or 110 divided by 40 equals 2.75 ohms. Between B and C it is 110 divided by 15 equals 7.33 ohms.

It then follows that the total resistance between A, C is the resistance of A, B plus that of B, C, or 2.75 plus 7.33 equals 10.08 ohms. The next step is to ascertain what number of amperes will flow through the combined resistance under 220 volts pressure, which is, of course, equal to 220 divided by 10.08 equals 21.8 amperes.

The last step is to multiply the amperes flowing by the resistance of A, B and B, C, which will give us the voltage consumed by each side, under the conditions we have set up.

21.8x2.75 equals 59.95 volts, which is the voltage used by A, B.

21.8x7.33 equals 159.8 volts, which is the voltage used by B, C.

Note: 59.95 plus 159.8 equals 119.75, therefore, I have made a one-fourth volt error somewhere in my calculations.

Which is perfectly lovely, and the editor is all fixed to give a couple of those huzzas, when he picks up the reply of Brother Doe and sees this:

If an Edison 3-wire circuit, or system be perfectly balanced (try and find one) and the neutral fuse blows, the operation of the circuit or system will not be in any manner affected. This is because under a condition of perfect balance the neutral fuse carries no current at all, all power using appliances on the circuit or system operating in series under 220 volts pressure. In that last assume it to be a 110-220 volt system.

However, there is nevertheless an effect when the neutral fuse blows, because by its absence the circuit as a whole is denied protection, should a part of the load on one side be switched off, or should the fuse of a branch circuit on one side blow. With the main circuit neutral fuse gone this would set up a condition which would be hard on the apparatus on one side, and might result in its instant and utter ruin, because then the system is unbalanced to the extent of the load thrown off one side, and this lack of balance cannot be compensated for by the natural action of the 3-wire circuit, or system as a whole.

When a circuit or system is unbalanced and the neutral fuse blows, a bad condition results, because then the apparatus on the two "sides" can no longer operate in series perfectly. It then is subject to an arbitrary electrical pressure of 220 volts, but no longer has a resistance, which as a whole, is able to withstand that pressure without partial overload.

A simple way of putting it is to say that while one side still has sufficient resistance to oppose the pressure and hold the load to normal, the other side lacks resistance, as a while, to withstand the pressure, and therefore will be overloaded.

Two hundred and twenty volts will force a certain, definite number of amperes through a certain definite resistance. Presuming the two sides, in its various combined elements of resistance, to have a total of 1,000 ohms, divided into ten "paths"—ten current consuming devices, which when in series offers 100 ohms resistance to 220 volts. Since volts divided by ohms gives amperes, we see that 2.2 amperes will flow through each "path," or through each two of the power consuming devices operating in series. This makes a total of 22 amperes of current flowing through the circuit.

Now let us presume that the fuse on a small, branch circuit blows, thus cutting out 200 ohms of the total resistance. What happens? Remembering that we still have 220 volts, but now have only 1,000 minus 200, equals 800 ohms total resistance. In considering this we must also remember that the full 500 ohms remain on one "side," whereas only 300 is on the other, and that other is now subjected to what amounts to 110 volts pressure. The answer is, of course, overload of the apparatus on that side.

And now here is the thing which no explanation I have ever seen, up to this date, has made clear to me. It seems to be the fact that whereas the candle power of the lamps on the side which becomes overloaded rises above normal, the lamps on the other side dim down. This I am unable to "see," because of the fact that since the total resistance is reduced, the total amperage must rise, which should, it seems to me, merely as a matter of common sense, to some extent overload the heavy side also, hence lamps on BOTH sides should become brighter.

I am well acquainted with the "split voltage" argument, but it don't seem to gibe with common sense.

I don't know, friend Doe. I have myself thought of that phase of the matter. The only explanation I have ever given serious consideration to is the fact that whereas theoretically the resistance, as a whole, is reduced, I am not certain that it is where incandescent lamps be concerned, since with overload the filament resistance rises rapidly, so that it is possible that, while technically the amperage, as a whole, has increased, it has in fact, due to the before named cause, actually decreased, so that the side with the normal number of power consuming elements is actually underloaded.

I know that, as Brother Munn has very ably shown, the voltage element works out very sanely, and all that, still it does seem to me that the resistance must work as a whole in this matter. Would some of you like to see what you can do to show just wherein my reasoning, and the reasoning of Brother Doe, is in error?

Question No. 414—Suppose a wire of good size which was attached to a water pipe at one end, came into contact with the neutral of your Edison 3-wire circuit just ahead (on the theatre side) of the main theatre fuse block. Explain what would happen.

Bennewitz says:

Since the neutral itself is grounded, nothing at all would happen, that is providing you do not have a ground on one of the outside wires between which and the neutral ground at the transformer there is such high resistance that no current will flow.

If this condition obtained and there was low resistance between the water pipe and the point at which the outside wire is grounded, you would get an arc when the wire touched, and a blown fuse somewhere, if any there be and between the point the wire touched and the transformer. If not, then the transformer fuse would probably go. That would depend upon how long the contact continued and the resistance of the ground thus formed. It is for this reason that in many instances the neutral is grounded inside the buildings supplied by the system.

Question No. 415—You connect a 2-wire circuit to each side of a 3-wire circuit, and to each circuit so connected you connect one 60 watt incandescent lamp. Explain the resultant electrical action. How much current will flow in the neutral?

Munn says:

The load is in perfect balance, hence no current will flow in the neutral, except that portion of it between the point at which the load on each side is connected to it. The lamps are burning in series under 220 volts pressure.

And so say they all, hence that's that.

Question No. 416—If you connect a ten-ampere motor on one side of a 3-wire circuit, that the Simplex is going out of business. Others hold that the Powers is to be wiped out. One projectionist I talked with, claimed to have inside dope to the effect that the good points of both projectors (The correspondent said "machines." How does he get that way?—Ed.) were to be put into one new projector, which would be a humdinger.

Now, Richardson, shoot the works. This is an important matter, from our end of things, so what's doing? Get busy!"

The statement published in the Moving Picture World, page 533, December 12 issue, was prepared by the Precision and Powers Companies. It is absolutely authentic and thoroughly reliable.

The manufacture of both the Powers and Simplex projectors will not be in the least degree affected. Both will retain their entirely separate business offices, engineering, selling and distribution forces, etc., just as they now are. What the thing really amounts to is that both projectors will be made in one factory, which will operate to effect an enormous saving in many ways; also the "holding corporation" has purchased the huge building at No. 90 Gold street, and by the center of January both the organizations will have their offices there.

Really, men, there is nothing at all to get fussed up about from our viewpoint. Insofar as any immediate effect upon projection matters be concerned, there is none. Whether or not the time will come when one or the other of the projectors will be discontinued, no living man may say. That, in any event, is a matter which only the rather distant future can decide.

H. L. Clarke is president of the International Projector Corporation and we hope to get better acquainted with him, as well as with B. A. Squire and George H. Trout who are also officers of the corporation. The other officers of the International Projector Corporation are Mr. Burns of the Nicholas Power Company and Mr. Michel and Mr. Greene of the Precision Machine Company, but these gentlemen we have been well acquainted with for many years. They and others in the new organization I count among my valued personal friends and it is pleasant to note that the passing of the Nicholas Power Company and the Precision Machine Company has made no change in the personnel attached to the Powers and Simplex divisions of the International Projector Corporation.

All the gentlemen I have mentioned are high grade men of sterling quality and business ability and mark you, gentlemen that last is no bouquet of idle words either. This department wishes all success to the International Projector Corporation.

Van Does Very Good Work Indeed

VAN POWELL is doing excellent work in the "Your Equipment" section, though of course I hate (jealousy) to say so.

My good friend Van Powell, who arrogates unto himself the title Allyouwishus Van Buren Powell, besides being one darned fine chap personally, is a mighty able gent when it comes to putting something worth while over.

I desire to compliment him on the effort he is making to stop at least some of the enormous, utterly idiotic and entirely needless abuses of film. His article, page 709, December 19 issue, should be carefully read by all theatre managers and projectionists. It might also be PRAYERFULLY read by a lot of them.

I was especially amused at his reference to dupe projector parts, which he styles "genuine fake parts." He also aptly describes the run-down projectors all too often found in theatres MISmanaged by MIS managers who save a few cents on projector repairs by refusing to purchase replacement parts, and lose a few dollars at the box office in the process. Van makes the projector tell its own tale of abuse thusly:

When I come from the factory and set myself up in this place to shoot perfect pictures onto the screen, I had every part machined to the thousandth of an inch; experts had gone over every one of my parts, like a dentist hunts cavities, and said I was "The cats."

Then what has made me go to the dogs!

This is it!

My owner let me run and run and run—for years. Never thought of overhauling me. Never figured that there has got to be wear and tear, even with the finest of fine starts, the best of metal and the most perfect of machine work.

Then, one day, the feller what sits up here with me and sees about keepin' the picture on the whitewashed square, goes to my owner—

"That projector is sure on the blink," he sings out. And, bein' a hard workin' guy that done conscientiously the best he knowed how with what he had to do it with, he shows the boss how he had went over me and tightened up where it was needed and put oil where it was useful—AND NOT WHERE IT WOULD BE ALL OVER THE POOR, HARD WORKIN' PRINT, NEITHER—and he laid out a list of what had to be got for me.

So my owner sets down and looks over the catalogue of what parts my manufacturer has listed as genuine and real.

"Huh!" he monologs, "real parts cost like Helen Summer."

Then he lays back in his old, squeakin' swivel chair and lams the desk with a pencil: then he hops up.

"Ham!" he bursts out, "I know where I kin git them same kind of parts—only maybe not STAMPED genuine! But they LOOK all right and they're a whole lot cheaper!"

So he does get them genuine fake parts—and no matter how he bellyaches, the guy tendin' me has to jam 'em and dam 'em and get 'em in somehow.

And my insides rattles and squeals and my gizzard grinds and then, all of a sudden—look back at the pitcher.

If it's my last gasp, lemme gasp—
To protect the Print—
Protect the Projector!

And believe you me, brother, that is good dope. It's cold FACT put in very entertaining form—and cold fact put in entertaining form is the snake's hips in written argument. Van asked, before he started this, if I had any objection to his taking the matter up, it being in one way a projection matter. Knowing Van's ability, and knowing him to be a "square shooter," I promptly told him to go as far as he liked. If he or any one else can benefit projection, or benefit anything directly or indirectly allied thereto, believe you me I'm mighty glad to see it done.

The chap I object to is the one who tries to "help projection" by "making a living" doing something he don't know how to do, in the process usually working great harm. That sort of thing I seriously object to, no matter whether he be on the Moving Picture World or some other paper. Thanks be we have none of that brand on the World. Go to it, Van, and more power to you!

That's What Counts

RAY A. GNAEGY, Projectionist Orpheum Theatre, Paducah, Kentucky, who is a new, but valuable Bluebook School member, has had some letter heads printed, and now I know how his name is spelled, though Heaven only knows how he pronounces it. Well, anyhow what's a mere name between friendly friends? Gnaegy is a progressive, and that's what really counts. On the new letter paper, which bears the union label, announce him to be a member of the I. A. and a non-resident member of the American Projection Society, he says: "Please excuse me for having skipped last week's session of the Bluebook School. It was pretty well unavoidable as I was moving into the Orpheum, here, for the winter, and have been putting things into shape. It is with real pride that I find myself able to say my work improves all the time. The manager called me into the office this morning and said: "Gnaegy, your projection is excellent. The picture stands out wonderfully well."

That may not seem very wonderful to you, but inasmuch as I am getting those results at less expense than an inferior result has cost the theatre heretofore, I feel that I am making progress in the art of better projection.

What that manager did was a thing which counts heavily. One of the most utterly discouraging things I know of is for a man to work hard, and strive to excell, only to meet cool indifference on the part of those over him. I really believe one of the things which started me out on the right path when I took up projection, was the fact that I landed a job with C. R. Cozart, in the village of Chicago, and Cozart was a real crank. He not only wanted a good picture on his screen, but he demanded it. BUT, when he got it he was not at all slow to speak an encouraging word to the man who gave it to him.

and incandescent lamps using seven amperes on the other side, tell us what amount of current the neutral will carry, and why that is the amount.

Bennewitz says:

This gives us an unbalanced load. The amperes of current will pass through the motor. Seven amperes of this amount will pass through the lamps, to the true negative and back to the true negative pole of the generator combination, the three remaining amperes returning to the negative pole of the one generator over the neutral, OR if the load be connected so that the motor is between the neutral and true negative, then the amperes the lamps use will come out on the true positive, through the lamps to the neutral wire, where they will be joined by three amperes which have come out on the neutral from the positive pole of the generator connected between the neutral and true ngative of the system. The combined amperage will then operate the motor and return to the true negative generator pole over the true negative of the system.

Not so bad, Brother Doe. In fact I think you win the rubber transformer and porcelain wires on this one. Station Bluebook School signing off until next week.

Your Equipment

Service for You—Theatre Owner—Builder—Studio—Laboratory—Exchange Executive—From Your Angle

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

Where Will the Laugh Come In?

LAUGH MONTH! It's right in front of you! And what's behind every laugh? The projector. The screen. The reels. The shipping cases. The measuring machine, patching block, rewinder.

They're going to put the laugh in laugh month and the "Mon" in your box office.

That is—if you treat them right.

This is shooting straight at you, Mr. Exhibitor—

It's up to your equipment whether the laugh is going to be on your screen!—or ON YOU!

This is shooting right at YOU, Mr. Exchange Manager—

Is your inspection and equipment going to contribute to laugh month? And what?—LAUGHS—

Or GROANS?

Bray Studios have put the laugh into the prints. Educational has jammed the guffaws onto their film. Pathe has crammed their giggle-reels with the essence of the humorous. Universal has filled Century comedies with the spirit of amuse-the-folks. Film Booking Offices have hit the ha-ha high spots with their comedies. Red Seal has sealed up many an uproaring moment ready to be released from bondage in its films. Yes, and others, too—all the makers of entertainment have put their best into the product that the exchange is going to send to the exhibitor who will stand in the semi-darkness in the back of the house and—

Will the patches break?

Or are the exchanges going to jack up inspection to the very apex of perfection, guarding the laughs from THEIR end of the line?

Will the projector rip half a hundred feet of film to junk?

Or is the exhibitor—right after laying down YOUR EQUIPMENT!—going up to talk it over with the projectionist, find out what is needed to guarantee perfect projection—if anything IS needed?

Brains, high class studio equipment, perfect laboratory machinery and expert film handling—they're all centered in that narrow ribbon of film.

They've scoured the gray matter of the world for fun: they've secured the best of players, lavish sets, craftsmen of the camera, to register the laughs: they've developed and printed and finished and polished and waxed that film to bring out the best there is in it and to preserve the base.

It as lackadaisical inspectress going to ruin all that?

Is a run-down projector going to smash the laugh in the jaw?

Is a reel, that ought to have been thrown away before Noah drew plans for his famous floating zoo, going to crab the whole thing?

The theatre is at the mercy of the exchange—and the exchange is at the mercy of the theatre.

Together, working for the best and the most that can be got out of laugh month, they can build the giggles into a roar that will be heard all over the world.

Working in opposition, carelessly letting the print go to the royal bow-wows, they can turn Laugh Month into a joke and the only sad thing about it will be that the joke will be on the exchange and the exhibitor who IS working with the best of equipment and playing fair with the other fellow!

Protect the Print, fellows!

Quit beefing about how much harm the other fellow does!

Start right now to do YOUR best to protect the print—and let it be the other chap who turns the theatre into a morgue and the laughter into a lament.

Behind the laugh stands the projector, the reel, the shipping case, the inspectress, the projectionist, the whole personnel and equipment of exchange and theatre.

If everybody and everything helps to protect the print, the industry will be proud to look back on Laugh Month.

If not—

Where does the LAUGH COME IN?

ARE you getting in on that Protect-the-Print Award? They are shooting in their lists and letters on what they're doing to protect the print.

LOUIS B. MAYER
Ready to chat for a few minutes about Studio Equipment.

Studio Equipment Plays Big Part In Upholding M-G-M's High Quality

Louis B. Mayer Gives You An Exclusive Chat About Studio Mechanism and Mechanics—It's Bound to Interest Every Studio Executive in the High-Power Class

YOU NEED to be told who Mr. Louis B. Mayer is and what he means to the motion picture industry just exactly as much as an elephant needs a suit-case. So, when a man of Mr. Mayer's ability and activity takes the time to give you, through YOUR EQUIPMENT, an informal talk on his idea of the importance of studio equipment in making the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions the ace-high quality output that they are, it signalizes the recognition by the biggest folks in the industry of the importance of Equipment and emphasizes the broad scope of interests that this department has set itself to attain.—The Editor.

"BENEVENUTO CELLINI, in his memoirs, relates how he started carving gold with the crudest of tools—and then explains in his naive way his joy when he finally saved enough for the purchase of the finest tools obtainable—not because they merely gave him pride of ownership and saved him time—but because they actually enabled him to do greater things."

Louis B. Mayer puffed meditatively at his cigar and glanced from his window at the great Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, humming with activity, that stretched before his office. A chugging tractor, hauling a big dynamo and gas-engine, passed.

"There's something that is to the studio a good deal of what his fine tools were to Cellini," he remarked to the Moving Picture World representative. "After all—the same law that guided Cellini centuries ago guides us today. In anything creative, of course, the prime essential is brains—but brains can reach their fullest efficiency only when backed up by the proper tools.

"Our tools are machinery—equipment—electricity—and trained men. The story of an author and the art of an actor are the brains—the idea—the creation—but the process of putting it on the screen means almost every branch of mechanical effort, and the employment of almost every mechanical and decorative art. Engineers and artists, electricians and sculptors, craftsmen and laborers—all do their share. And—the best tools make the best workers—especially in a business like this, where, after all, our greatest asset is time."

"The picture industry," he continued, "is a constant business of devising new means of getting results; of emergency calls on technicians; of doing the almost impossible. The result is that this studio has developed independence in practically every craft known to mankind. We had to!

"For instance, we may need furniture of a certain period. It would appear that the obvious thing would be to rent it—but consider we might have to send to New York or Europe for it—and imagine what the cost would be if a high-salaried cast had to wait several weeks for its furniture!

"So we have a furniture factory—so completely equipped that it would make Grand Rapids jealous. All our period furniture is turned out there; carved hardwood pieces that cost us several hundred dollars to make, and that could not be bought in the open market for many times that—and often could not be rented for love nor money.

"The same applies to statuary—so we have our own statuary shop, where anything can be obtained, at shortest notice, from the most delicate statuette to heroic figures thirty feet high such as grace the 'Ben-Hur' sets. It would cost much to rent and pay freight on such statues—but the principal item is time.

"You see, in the business of production, the technician usually has about a week's notice to supply anything under the sun—and so every department must be equipped to do the seemingly impossible at all times. In fact, in the office of C. F. Wilhelm, our construction chief, there is a sign that reads:

"'It can't be done—but here it is!'

"The construction department has never fallen down yet.

"Experience has shown us, to sum it all up, that it is the cheapest course to save money by spending it—and that the better the equipment the surer and better the results. On a production like 'His Secretary', for instance, with elaborate modern settings, gold leaf and tinsel, speed can only be made with the most modern machinery—and slow work would mean waits—dissatisfaction, as a result, on the part of cast and directors, and a general loosening up of morale. With the best of equipment, everybody from the actor to the laborer is on his toes; and the producer does not have to worry about makeshifts to obtain effects—he knows that all the resources of this big organization are at his disposal—the last word in equipment.

"This doesn't mean that pictures are made in a spendthrift manner, however. Picture making is costly, but we have it down to a point where every cent spent gets results. Just as much care for economy is used as in any big factory. For instance, our salvage department saves a big sum yearly by recutting and reclaiming lumber from used sets.

"Another thing that is a very valuable aid is stage space. We have nineteen huge stages—equipped so that sets can be erected at a day's notice. Any sudden change in a script—and the next day sees the scene ready in accord with it. Again—the time element. Again, a saving. Again—the most important—that speedy service which allows directors and actors to use their brains on what they were intended for—the story—the creation. You can't expect a director to turn out a great picture if he's worried all the time about mechanical troubles.

"To show what this means in the way of equipment, let us look at each department. First—the construction department.

"They have the best equipped lumber mill on the West coast, with planers, handsaws of every possible type, lathes ranging from the smallest to the huge turntables on which huge pillars are fashioned; joiners, a big sanding machine, and a complete furniture shop, where the finest hardwood furniture is made.

"When plans are made for a setting, the lumber is assembled, sawed and fashioned according to plan—and leaves the mill for the set ready to be put together by the carpenter without delay — in effect, a knocked-down structure. The saving in time is unbelievable. For instance, the big New York street used by Marion Davies in "Lights of Old Broadway," was erected, including cobbled pavement—in seven working days.

"The organization of the workers is as important here as the equipment. The basic force in the construction department is more than a hundred men—sometimes under pressure eight hundred are employed. The reserve workers are listed so that they may be called on an instant's notice—a body of men as well drilled as an army.

"Rolling stock of every kind is always available for hauling material—our transportation department is one of the biggest in the country.

"Then there is the paint shop, where 125 men are classified as plain painters, decorators, grainers, marblers, sign writers, and scenic artists. They are called upon in a moment's notice to duplicate old stone castle walls or marble panels—old statues or ultra modern polished hardwood. Their work is immensely important.

"The latest pressure spraying apparatus, air brushes, vaporizing equipment are always at the call of these men—and make work certain and positive. They get results—because they have every possible mechanical aid. This department paints about fifty sets a week. Yearly it uses 100,000 pounds of dry colors; 10,000 gallons of shellac, fifteen to twenty thousand gallons of paint, and a thousand gallons of oils and varnishes. They are always under the same pressure of time—and the necessity of doing absolutely perfect work, despite the rush.

(The rest of Mr. Mayer's very informative chat will come to you next week.)

Levine Company Does a Triple

PATRONS don't see the effects of engineering and architectural specialization in the theatre—but they sense the results.

And when patrons find convenience and comfort surrounding them, they make their approval felt at the box office.

They did this at three different spots in one week as the result of the activities of R. Levine & Co., Inc., who had the novel experience of having three theatres in which they had been active, throw their lobbies into brilliance for opening night—all in the same week.

Fischer's Fond du Lac, in that Wisconsin city was one, and the management had no trouble filling the 2,100 seats.

The Mid-West Theatre went the other house some better on seating—2,200—but Chicago was interested enough in that new house to see that none of these comfortable chairs remained vacant.

The Windy City did the same for the Milo Theatre and because this new and attractive theatre had only 1,200 seats, Chicagoans had to wait around for a chance to get in—which it is credibly reported that they did.

Opens Three

An item comes through to the effect that Freedom Film Corporation has opened three exchanges—"equipped with the best there is for giving good print service." The quotes justify giving it room. When Norton L. Connor goes after business in the Rochester, N. Y., exchange with that slogan, backed up by Frank C. Moynahan in Syracuse and Joseph Cantor in Albany it's good news.

Says It's You

Because the builders and owners of theatres are realizing to the fullest extent the importance of the best equipment, business is better than for many years, is the opinion of C. H. Badger, of Stebbins Picture Supply Company, Kansas City.

NAME THE OBJECTS in, on and around the Christmas Tree, in t he picture yonder, that are going to make this such a happy season for the hard working Print. All are in plain view. Every one of you who handles prints should know all of them.

Write a letter telling what you are doing to protect the print and send the list and letter together, with your name, address and theatre, exchange or other motion picture connection, to VAN, MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S YOUR EQUIPMENT DEPARTMENT, 516 FIFTH AVENUE, NEW YORK, N. Y.

For the most accurately named list of Protect-the-Print objects with the best letter on what its writer is doing to protect the print, Moving Picture World will award the sum of TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS ($25.00), allotted to YOUR EQUIPMENT department by the Chalmers Publishing Company in the effort to stimulate better prints.

For the second most accurate list with a letter as above, will be awarded a DUPLEX FILM PATCHING BLOCK, donated by DUPLEX FILM LABORATORIES in the interest of the campaign for protection of the print—to make more perfect patching possible.

For the third most accurate list with letter as above, will be awarded a REWINDER SET, donated by Independent Movie Supply Company of New York, in the interest of this campaign for print protection—an important item in the rewinding of prints safely and quickly.

In the event of a tie in any of the three award classes, a similar award will be made to each of the tying contributors. .Noon, January sixteenth, will be the closing time for the acceptance for consideration of letters and lists.

You Can't Have Good Pictures Without It

THE success of a house often depends upon a thing comparatively insignificant in cost—a good projection system. For only with a fine lens and scientifically related parts can you have good pictures.

The Bausch & Lomb Cinephor Optical System gives strong illumination, evenly distributed over the whole screen. It defines the images with strong contrasts of black and white. It makes pictures convincingly real and helps to bring crowds back again. Ask your projection man.

ONE RESOLUTION YOU'LL BE GLAD TO KEEP!

Zip! How the resolutions go.

You smoke again in February and forget Prohibition in March.

And April showers drown a lot of other good resolves.

You should worry.

There's one resolution you'll be glad to keep.

All year 'round in 1926 you'll be glad you resolved to play Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Why?

Because 1926 is positively another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer year.

Which means you get the kind of receipts you've accustomed your box-office to.

Only more so.

Frankly, we are planning ambitious things that will make this industry sit up and talk about M-G-M enterprise more than ever.

A lot of new exhibitors are signing up for The Quality Fifty-Two.

We want to tell them and also our old customers the following:

Forget your other New Year resolutions if you will.

There's one resolution you'll keep.

And every time you count up the gate on a M-G-M attraction.

You'll say it was the best resolution you ever made in your life!

1926 IS ANOTHER METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER YEAR

No Prophecies—Just a Few Thoughts

SUCCESSFUL big league baseball teams do not sit down and WAIT for talent to come to them. They SCOUT for players—thoroughly and scientifically. They ZONE the country, and mark off the various classes of baseball to be covered within those zones by men qualified for that PARTICULAR kind of research. Scouting MILEAGE and MONEY run into big figures. Waves of "talent" beat upon the doors of the picture studios every day. When the WHEAT is separated from the CHAFF, there does not seem to be ENOUGH to go around. Why not ORGANIZED scouting for picture players?

New York City department stores did EIGHT per cent more business during December 1925 than they did in December 1924, the previous HIGH WATER MARK in sales. What is your expectation of increase for December 1926 over the same month in 1925? You've got to LOOK ahead to GET ahead.

Exploitation during 1926 will be more dazzling, more TICKET-SELLING than ever. Throw your thinking gear into HIGH. The air will be loaded with more SALES ideas than amateur night at a prize fight with boxing gloves.

You are entering upon the Golden Age of PICTURES. Golden from the PRODUCTION point of view. And Golden from the MONEY point of view. The season of 1925-26 marks the era. Keep your POWDER dry and your TWENTY-FOUR SHEETS wet.

The GROCERY trade presents a wide open field to the TIE-UP experts of the moving picture industry. Grocery PRODUCTS can stand a lot of exploitation. And grocery store windows, which number thousands, are sitting up, begging for MERCHANDISE-MOVING ideas. Here's a trade, as a whole, to which our exploitation sharks can devote a LOT of real thought.

The Associated Press, open to MORE motion picture news through the good offices of Will Hays, puts tremendous POWER behind the business of informing the public on pictures and picture people. Used properly this new weapon will be a most HELPFUL instrument in 1926. Misused, and it will be a BOOMERANG.

Yes, 1926 will see the picture business reaping the reward of past GOOD effort. And the pennant race will not be ONE SIDED. Which makes it healthy for the picture LEAGUE. And healthy for all TURNSTILES that clock picture admissions.

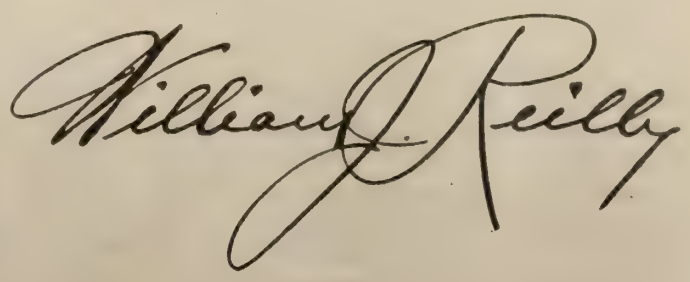
Firpo, Carpentier, the British Polo Four, Papyrus, Epinard helped build up the biggest GATES in their respective fields in sporting history. Tex Richard opened the hockey season at his new Madison Square Garden with an INTERNATIONAL match—between the New York Americans and the Canadiens. He might have opened it with a game between the New York and Pittsburgh teams. But he knew the BOX-OFFICE value of international FLAVOR, particularly in promoting a sport new to the average New York citizen. When picture producers abroad realize that this country can be sold backward on good FOREIGN attractions in any field, they will stop making "Kontingents" and make PICTURES.



Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

"Take Up Thy Bedroom Scene and Walk"

WILLIAM PHILLIPS of the Strand Theatre Company of Newport, Ky., writes us a letter signed, "With best regards and hopes for CLEANER and more WHOLESOME Pictures."

Before he got down to that WIND-UP, however, Mr. Phillips delivered himself of this: "Give the people entertainment with a plenty of action. NO BEDROOMS! Most people have bedrooms at HOME. They don't want to see them in PICTURES."

Our dope is that people like to see BOTH the things they have at home, and the things they haven't. They will like, for instance, "Little Annie Rooney" with the things they HAVE. And "Little Lord Fauntleroy" with the things they HAVEN'T. Pictures with the same star.

Anyhow, we do not blame Mr. Phillips for being OFF bedrooms. We have no quarrel with bedrooms as household properties. In fact, we LIKE 'em. Reckon Mr. Phillips does, too.

But the bedroom seems to have some dramatic MAGNETISM about it for a certain type of continuity writer. And a certain type of director.

The magnetism is the same kind that draws the cockroach to the KITCHEN and the ham fighter to the CANVAS.

It isn't that there is not LIFE in the old scene yet. Plenty of it. But the production minds that just NATURALLY gravitate toward the bedroom set have nothing on the scene but a MEGAPHONE. Like the PITCHER who has nothing on the BALL but a PRAYER.

It's just the old problem of having a thousand little IDIOT sisters and brothers of an original "SURE-FIRE" idea running around the country.

A MORATORIUM on bedroom scenes for six months would help a lot. Instructions should be issued to the mediocre copyists, "Take up thy bedroom scene and WALK. And keep on walking."

That's about the only thing that will keep the "NIGHTWEAR of the nation" from becoming the NIGHTMARE of the industry.

Don't forget:—If it's a BEDROOM picture you're selling, lay off MR. PHILLIPS!

Lucky Devil—Mr. Holman

L. R. MARKUM runs the Dream Theatre, a NEIGHBORHOOD house of 700 seats in Indianapolis. He sends Russell Holman's Paramount ADVERTISING department a wish for a happy New Year in the following form:

"I would like to see WINDOW CARDS as well as OTHER advertising matter improved by not putting on Director, Art Director, Cameraman—and ten others in addition to Producer and Distributor. On SLIDES, the title should be bolder and small reading matter left off.

"A window card such as Paramount used on 'Lucky Devil' would make a first-class MODEL for others to be FASHIONED AFTER."

An Honor to the Field

JACK BACHMANN is BACK. All his friends KNEW he would be. Here is one of the most INTELLIGENT and most CONSTRUCTIVE men in the whole picture business, one who will make a shining mark for himself. Because he has the brains to know what it's all about. And he has the CONFIDENCE of all men with whom he does business.

Preferred Pictures will continue under Mr. Bachmann's PERSONAL and SOLE jurisdiction. That is a GUARANTEE which honors the independent field. You are on your way, Mr. Bachmann. Keep on it for a big, SUCCESSFUL 1926!

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

"The Fountain"

PERHAPS some eminent moving picture director with the touch of Ariel in his heart and hand may be able to transmute into a worthy picture for the masses this exquisite fantasy of Eugene O'Neill's, "The Fountain," which Macgowan, Jones and O'Neill are presenting at the Greenwich Village Theatre under the management of A. L. Jones and Morris Green.

But I don't know. Its beauty is too unearthly; its theme too sad. It would have to be changed in its first essential—for it's too true, too wretchedly true.

The romantic figure, Juan Ponce de Leon, wars and governs, kills and fascinates. His heart is never touched until after his fortieth year is passed. And then in an insanity of desperation he goes through the world searching for the famed fountain of youth. He finds only desolation and death. His beloved confesses her love for his own nephew—and Ponce de Leon is left to die alone while his Beatriz sings with her lover outside the monastery wall: "God is a fountain forever flowing upward into the azure sky."

Some of us go to Mary Arden or Catherine Gray to delay the arrival of old age; others follow Henry Kamp, or Patrick Fadden, in their endeavors to compress the waist line and retain the figure. But age whitens our hair and mars our faces and no Arden or Gray or Kamp or Fadden can withhold us permanently from the lovelessness which old age brings.

A great director could make a great picture from this setting for all the necessary requirements are there: Christopher Columbus, Ponce de Leon, Indians, courtiers, semi-tropical climate, wars, torture chambers, beautiful women, dances, wine, monks and monasteries. But it would have to be changed. Why sadden the world? "There is no God but love, no Heaven but youth" Ponce de Leon pitifully realizes, and dying sighs; "Cruel is the heart of youth which pities not the wounds and sorrows of the aged."

The settings by Robert Edmond Jones are inexpressibly lovely and Macklin Marrow's music greatly enhances the beauty of the entire production.

The Taming of The Shrew

IT'S not such a far cry from Maggie and Jiggs to Katharina and Petruchio in Shakespeare's "The Taming of The Shrew" which J. Fletcher is presenting at the Klaw Theatre. And if this stupendous comedy is put on the screen every henpecked husband from Coney Island to Hollywood—and to hear them tell it they must be about ninety percent of the entire male population—will come to learn how to put over some of Petruchio's successful tactics.

From the first word of the play until Katharina is brought home a chastened, modest woman, the entire production reeks with comedy and, buffoonery, with no dull soliloquies or opaque stage business to distract the audience. While many of Shakespear's plays are guaranteed to bore any movie goer almost to the point of suicide, I prophecy that "The Taming of the Shrew"; if carried to the screen, will prove a big New Year's success.

"I Will Be God!"

TO THE children, it will seem a glorified "Alice in Wonderland," the wives will drop thoughts of facials and permanents and ponder if after all they may not improve the marital deals they are giving their husbands; and the men will mutter a fervent "Thank God" that at last woman, in all her complex, forever-dissatisfied moods is thrown upon the screen.

"I Will Be God" (Ilsebill) is a dramatic symphony or opera in five parts, written by Friedrich Klose. The story is taken from the fairy tale of "The Fisher and His Wife" fro mthe brothers Grimm.

This work has never been heard in America and in but few cities of Germany. The music is a combination of Wagner, Tschaikowsky and Strauss, and is unpeakably magnificent.

Act one shows Ilsebill and her husband, a fisherman. They live in unbelievable poverty in a hollow tree. He starts out for a day's fishing cast down because of his wife's perpetual nagging. If he doesn't catch anything —they don't eat.

When nearly the wholeday has gone by, the Fisher feels a tremendously heavy catch in his net and joyfully pulls it out of the water. To his consternation it contains only one huge grotesque fish. He is about to crush in its head with a stone when the Fish speaks. He promises the Fisherman any request of his heart if only he spare the life of a poor fish who is in reality a bewitched fairy. With the sympathy of one poor devil for another, the Fisherman lets the amphibian slide back into the water.

When the Fisher returns home he receives only blows and insults for his kind deed. In despair he tells his wife of the fairy promise. She laughs at his simplicity. She rails and jeers until the Fisher returns to the water's edge and miserably calls for the Fish.

To their surprise, the enormous Fish comes out of the water and asks the Fisher's wish. The dejected man asks that he be made a wealthy farmer so that his wife may have all of her heart's desires. Before a second passes, the Fisher's poor dwelling has glided away and he finds himself before a beautiful farm house, surrounded by male and female servants, all eating white bread and drinking strong beer, while his wife stands on the veranda clad in clothe beyond her dreams.

But even this doesn't satisfy Ilsebill. For, just then, a princess rides by at the head of her hunting party, and the Fisher's wife, unable to see anything or anybody without envy, picks at her husband until he asks the Fish to make her a queen.

Not the blink of an eye before we see the Fisher and his wife changed into King and Queen, descending the marble steps of a shining palace, followed by resplendent attendants. As Ilsebill reaches the bottom a weary traveling priest comes along. He exhorts the court to forsake its pagan ways and to adopt christianity. Overcome by the Father's sincere piety, the entourage falls on its knees and accepts the cross. But Ilsebill remains standing—a horrible, clamoring, jealous red figure. Terrible envy wrecks her features and she screams that she is not satisfied to be a queen. She must be a spiritual queen also. She must be the POPE.

Theh usband is clotted with fear. But being the weak tool of a woman's love, he tremblingly calls up the Fish and begs that his wife be made the Pope of all the World.

Darkness falls. Lightning glares. Thunder roars. Priests, Bishop, Archibishops and Cardinals ascend and descend the steps of a gorgeous cathedral. There stands the poor Fisher's wife in thes glorious robes of the Pope. The organs play. The choir boys sing. Ilsebill is about to rise to the High Altar. Suddenly she becomes intolerant of the storm. She commands it to be still. But the elements devour each other and more blinding darkness envelops the Temple. Crazy with rage, Ilsebill draws herself to her impressive height and shrieks: "I WILL BE GOD!"

An earth-rending crash!

And then we find Ilsebill and the Fisher back in the hollow tree, back in their abject poverty of one meal or no meals a day, back to the tormenting, monotonous, never-ending misery, caused solely by one woman's inordinate ambition.

Pola Negri has the background, the understanding, the intelligence and the beauty to give a lustrous interpretation of Ilsebill.

Adolph Zukor has the wisdom and the strength to present this dramatic symphony as a picture which will charm the children with its gloriou fairy tale, enchant the women with its earnest beauty and satisfy the men with its bitter truth.

MR. AND MRS. REILLY ENTERTAIN

On Wednesday afternoon, December 23, from 4:00 to 6:30 p. m., William J. Reilly, editor of Moving Picture World, and Mrs. Reilly were the hosts at a delightful party tendered at their home to a number of business friends and the staff of the Chalmers publications.

This happy occasion was in the nature of a dual celebration, being a combination birthday and Christmas eve party. Delightful refreshments, a thoroughly congenial crowd of guests and the hospitable atmosphere of the cozy and attractive Reilly home all contributed to make it a thoroughly enjoyable afternoon and one destined to occupy a niche in the storehouse of pleasant memories.

MARY THURMAN DIES

Mary Thurman died on December 22 at the Flower Hospital, New York, after two weeks' illness of pneumonia. She was well known for her work in films, among her best parts being in Fox's "The Fool." She was born in Richfield, Utah, educated in the University of Utah and maintained a residence in Los Angeles.

Revolutionary Exhibition Changes Foreseen in St. Louis This Year

Observer Sees Surface Indications of Panicky Nature—Koplar-Skouras Dominate—Goldman a Big Factor

By David F. Barrett

THE year 1926 will witness the most revolutionary changes in the exhibition branch of the motion picture industry in St. Louis and elsewhere throughout this trade territory that has ever transpired. In many aspects present conditions and future prospects are the most astonishing in history. In many quarters there are surface indications of a panicky nature. All this is due to the growing tendency toward chains, block-booking combinations and a closer relationship between the producers and distribution branches of the business with theatres.

While the daily press has been filled with columns and columns of news about the Federal Trade Commission's investigation and with high-sounding predictions of what is going to happen in that quarter, the independent exhibitors and producers have been wondering what it is all about, as they see on every hand further steps toward centralization.

In St. Louis the days of the strictly independent exhibitor is fast passing. Week after week new houses are taken over by the various local chains and other deals are pending that will cut into the present ranks of the independents. And close students of local conditions predict that the survivors will have to form new chains or block-booking combinations for their own protection.

In the St. Louis film world the dominant factor is the Koplar-Skouras combination, as represented by Skouras Brothers Enterprises and the St. Louis Amusement Company.

Skouras Brothers, in addition to owning and operating four first-run theatres, the First National franchise for the territory, the local Educational branch and the St. Louis Film Exchange, with Harry Koplar control the St. Louis Amusement Company, which now has twenty-four theatres in St. Louis and suburbs with approximately 34,500 seats. In addition, they have announced plans or are constructing two other houses and are considering the purchase or erection of many others. This company also has seventeen ainrdomes with 27,500 seats.

Another big factor in the local exhibition world is William Goldman. He is now independently operating five houses with 5,511 seats, has three airdomes with 3,661 seats and has announced that he will build three theatres with a total of 4,300 seats and a 1,500-seat airdome. He also is known to be dickering with some of the biggest producers and distributors in the country, and the St. Louis film world would not be surprised to hear that he had definitely closed a deal whereby he would take over a big new first-run house for some big gun, throwing his second-run houses into a new national chain.

Then there is the Laventhal string of houses which now includes the Union, Mikado, Ashland, Newstead, O'Fallon, Embassy and Plaza. This company is in the market for other houses and plans the erection of two new theatres.

Other chains include that of Fred Wehrenberg, the Rex Amusement Company, Joe Mogler and John Karzin.

A number of other houses, including those in minor chains, also are planning to book their film in blocks in the future to combat the larger chains.

So far as the strictly independent houses are concerned there are now only about forty-one or so out of the total of 108 booking films in St. Louis and St. Louis County.

In view of these conditions it is not at all surprising that the small fellows are trying very hard to figure out what is going to happen to them. Many are on the fence. They don't know whether to sell out to the bigger groups or to carry on.

From the viewpoint of the patrons of the theatres it is very questionable as to whether it would not be desirable for the houses to be controlled by larger corporations. It is certain that such groups as Skouras Brothers and the St. Louis Amusement Company have not lowered exhibition standards in this vicinity.

The advantages of centralized control are manifest. And the dangers of such a system are equally not hard to foresee.

But at any rate it is certain that much film history will be made in 1926. The books are open and Father Time has his pen in hand.

BRASS TACKS MAKES ITS BOW

A snappy, newsy, interesting and neatly designed little magazine is Brass Tacks, the new Warner Brothers house organ which first saw the light of day in the form of a Christmas number. There are other good publications of a similar nature but we don't recall one which exceeds Brass Tacks in all-around attractiveness. The pages offer film news, dope on pictures, chattering personals and light humor. It will be read by the Warner Brothers organization everywhere—that is certain. Lou Marangella is editor. Brass Tacks is published on the tenth and twenty-fifth day of each month.—Sumner Smith.

A Warning

EXPERIENCE gained by the result of fire in the Elite Theatre, Humbolt, Kas., the other day has caused the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri to issue a general warning to exhibitors to examine more closely their insurance contracts.

After having paid for his insurance steadily, Oscar Reinhart, owner of the theatre, today is unable to recover one cent on his house, which virtually was destroyed. In Mr. Reinhart's contract, which was with the Newark Fire Insurance Company of Newark, N. J., there was no clause to cover the fire which started in the projection booth or the damage done to the film. He did not know this until he actually needed it.

George Simpson, Founder Of Regorson Corp., Dies

George E. Simpson, founder of the Regorson Corporation, one of the big theatre companies of Rochester, N. Y., is dead. He died at his home in the Flower City after a long illness.

Mr. Simpson built and opened the Hippodrome in Rochester in 1907 and conducted it for many years as the city's most pretentious picture house. In 1914 he opened the Regent Theatre, at which time he organized the Regorson Corporation which eventually operated the Gordon, Regent and Piccadilly.

He was born in Linwood, N. Y., in 1862, but went to Rochester early in life. He continued in active management of the Regorson houses until failing health forced him to give up active work.

OMAHA EXHIBITOR ROBBED

Joe F. Bredin, proprietor of the Boulevard Theatre, Omaha, was held up and robbed on returning from the theatre after midnight recently. The two holdup men were negroes. They took $200 in theatre receipts from Mr. Bredin and then ran away with his automobile, leaving him standing near his garage. Before taking the car, they struck him with a gun over the head several times, knocking him down. Apparently they thought they had "put him out" so he would not give the alarm, but as soon as they had swung out of the alley he began to run after them shouting for help. At five blocks from the house they abandoned the car.

JOINT LUNCHEON

The A. M. P. A. and Cheese Club gave a joint luncheon at the Hofbrau-Haus, New York, on December 23. The meeting was presided over by the presidents of each organization, Harry Hershfield of the Cheese Club and Glenn Allvine of the A. M. P. A. The meeting was well attended.

"We Face Complete Annihilation," Small St. Louis Theatre Men Cry

Ask National President Woodhull to Confer With William Fox on Proposed New Theatre —Producer to Meet Committee

By Sumner Smith

IS St. Louis over-seated? Many St. Louis exhibitors think so and in a telegram to President R. F. Woodhull of the M. P. T. O. A. they declare that the situation "has reached a critical point" and charge that if William Fox "builds another theatre it will mean that everyone here will sustain losses from now on or either be forced to close their doors." In a reply addressed to Joseph Mogler, Mr. Fox makes known his intention to visit St. Louis about January 15 and offers to meet the signers of the telegram to Mr. Woodhull.

The exhibitor telegram follows:

"We the undersigned are members of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League representing fifty-one theatres in City of St. Louis. The majority of us own one or two theatres and not one individual in the group owns more than five. We feel overseating situation in St. Louis has reached critical point and that if Mr. Fox builds another theatre it will mean that everyone here will sustain losses from now on or either be forced to close their doors.

"Since the opening of Loew's Theatre downtown a year ago our business has suffered and especially since the St. Louis Theatre was opened at Grand and Morgan all our theatres have felt an alarming reduction in receipts. On top of this Skouras Brothers will open still another large theatre in August and we anticipate the loss of more patronage.

"Going further, Mr. Fox now contemplates building a theatre at Grand and Washington and St. Louis will then have eleven first run theatres including his house, Loew's Capital, Missouri Grand Central, St. Louis West End Lyric, Kings Grand Opera House, Delmonte and Skouras Ambassador. Therefore, we small theatre men face complete annihilation.

"This wire was not inspired by any first run circuit but is authorized by our own organization in hope of protecting our interests. Each of us has worked and struggled for years, built and maintain our small enterprises and now we are face to face with the proposition of losing everything because of the fact that St. Louis is already overseated not counting Skouras Ambassador which is now under construction.

"Consequently we ask you to see Mr. Fox personally and present our case and if he wants a committee of the undersigned we will be only too glad to meet him in New York.

"In the event he is apprehensive regarding the first run situation we will guarantee to see that his pictures are placed on a par with those of First National, Famous Players and Metro as long as he gives equal quality. There certainly is room enough for Fox pictures in a city that has ten first run theatres and we will see that Mr. Fox gets representation. We will appreciate your endeavors and request that you wire us after your conference with Mr. Fox."

The signers of the telegram are:

Joseph Mogler, Harry Warack, Fred Wehrenberg, Oscar C. Lehr, Frank Speros, Wm. Reeves, Chas. Goldman, Thomas James, Maury Stahl, Clarence Kaiman, John Karzin, Robinson Wellston, Charles Kalbfeld, Christ Efthim, Calhoun Robin, Joseph Blowitz, George Pleakas, Lueken, Sam Horwich, Christ Zotos, Sam Komm, Maury Reichmann, Sam Spwack, James Drake, Lueken Macklind, George Tompras, Frank Tompras, Frank Tabler, Joseph Kotnick.

Mr. Fox replied:

"I have read your wire of December seventeenth signed by yourself and several others. It is my intentio nto visit your city about January 15 at which time I will consider it a privilege to meet with the undersigned of your telegram. Regards."

Commenting on the exchange of telegrams, Joseph M. Seider, business manager of the M. P. T. O. A., in the January 1 issue of the Official Bulletin writes:

"Here is a real picture of what has been going on, on a small scale. Here is an insight into the future and the magnitudinal proportions that this situation will assume. There can be no doubt as to the sincerity of the signers of the foregoing telegram, but how can they guarantee that the Fox Film Corporation pictures will receive a showing in the first run theatres—which none of these gentlemen control? Who instigated this telegram? What is meant by equal quality with First National, Famous Players and Metro? Every producer must and does consider his product of higher quality than that of his competitors. How can the individual theatre owners be saved from annihilation?

"One thing we can state with certainty. That is we have seen a copy of a telegram sent by Mr. William Fox in response to a copy of the above telegram, which we furnished him.

"We hope that as a result of the intended meeting between the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and Mr. Fox, a true exponent of independence in the motion picture industry, there will be established a solution to this problem which will be protective to both producers and the Independent Theatre Owners."

Chicago Theatre Men Indicted

THIRTEEN members of the Consolidated Theatre Corporation have been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Chicago in connection with receivership proceedings of the company and 500 Chicago investors have formed a protective committee to look after their holdings. A hearing will be held next week before Federal Judge Wilkerson.

The men indicted are: President Frederick Gruneberg, Secretary Roy Martin, Sales Manager Oscar Olson, A. F. Brentlinger, James Rohr, A. H. Kester, P. R. Leach, F. S. Fenn, C. M. Ortner, E. B. Harange, John Fenn, Frederick Gruneberg, Jr., and J. S. Leach.

Carl Hoffman heads the Chicago investors' committee, which claims that those it represents invested over $750,000. Indiana investors claim investments totalling $3,000,000. The company had offices in Chicago and Indianapolis. Postal inspectors say that there are 6,000 on the company's list of bondholders, including many schoolteachers.

Third New Theatre Soon to Appear In Hartford

A NEW theatre, the third promised in the last few weeks, will soon be built in Hartford. This one is to be built in the heart of the business district, between a bank building and a large variety store. The builder will be David Weinstock, proprietor of the Grand Theatre in Hartford, and who is also interested in a number of theatres in other cities.

Final plans have not been completed. Present plans call for a two-story building which will run from State Street through to Kinsley Street. The site is quite narrow, being only slightly over forty feet, and its depth is about 220. It is not suitable at present for theatre purposes inasmuch as the building code requires a theatre to be surrounded by a court, but the code is soon to be changed and Mr. Weinstock has arranged whereby means of egress will be provided on either side of the building. Work of razing the present structure is to start about February 1.

No estimate of the cost of the projected theatre is available, but the total estimated cost of the three theatres promised Hartford in the near future will be between $300,000 and $400,000.

McElroy and Fitzpatrick in New Company; Branching Out

A NEW organization has been formed by Blair McElroy and Kenneth V. Fitzpatrick to handle the theatres of the Fitzpatrick-McElroy circuit under the name of the Fitzpatrick-McElroy Company, with offices at 202 South State stret, Chicago. The new company has a capital of 50,000 shares of no par value and has been organized to engage in the operation of theatres and to manufacture and deal in all kinds of merchandise. Fred C. Brinken is associated with them in the venture. Senator Charles S. Deneen handled the legal details. Blair McElroy is president and Kenneth Fitzpatrick, secretary. Another company called the Caledonia Company has been formed with the same officers and headquarters in the Century Building, and this company will handle the non-theatrical business of the organization. The Fitzpatrick and McElroy circuit has been branching out and now operates in Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Indiana.

H. Schoenstadt and Sons, who are building the new Piccadilly at the southeast corner of Hyde Park boulevard and Blackstone avenue in the heart of the Hyde Park district on the South Side, have made a first mortgage loan of $2,700,000 to finance the construction of the Piccadilly Theatre and a twelve-story apartment hotel with seven shops. C. W. and George L. Rapp are the architects of the buildings and Leidermand and Hein the engineers. The Schoenstadt circuit also operates the Archer, Brighton and Atlantic theatres.

Another new theatre for South Chicago territory was announced last week by John Eberson, the architect. The new house will occupy the triangular block bounded by Exchange avenue, Saginaw street from 75th to 76th street. The syndicate to build the house is headed by Frank Ragen and his associates, and the new structure will represent an investment of about $2,000,000. Mr. Eberson says the architecture will be of the Hindu type and that work will start in about three months, with the completion date set for a year later.

Incorporations

A $1,000,000 motion picture company, the first in many months, incorporated in New York State during the past week when a charter was granted the Dragon Pictures, Inc., with J. Hart, C. J. Loman and H. B. Walmsley of New York City as the stockholders and directors. It told, there were ten motion picture companies formed during the week, these including the Motion Picture Consultants, Inc., $5,000, with H. P. Blumenthal, B. K. Blake, Rachel Marmer, of New York City; Camera Pictures Corporation, capitalization not specified, A. E. Bryan, Brooklyn; Serena Klein, T. A. Schickling, New York City; Two Treys Amusement Corporation, $50,000, J. J. Hahn, Agnes McNamara, O. S. Moran, New York City; The Kid Himself, Inc., $20,000, G. D. Murphy, K. A. McGuire, S. Frank, New York City; Strahan Theatre Corporation, $350,000, Lewis M. Scheuer, New York City; William T. Powers, Brooklyn; A. D. Ghersan, Queens; H. & K. Pictures Corporation, capitalization not specified, Harry Lewis, Grant Hoerner, Walter Herzbrun, New York City; Telafilm News Service, Inc., capitalization not stated, Hazel M. Lindsay, New York; Edith M. Kent, Floral Park; Anna Zeitler, Brooklyn; Limited Productions, Inc., $525,000, Arthur Smith, Bronxville; Viola I. Mathews, Joseph F. Perdue, New York City; F. G. & K. Amusement Corporation, $6,000, Sam Kirschenbaum, Max Greenberg, Bert Frank, Brooklyn.

WARN AGAINST MISHAPS

A circular letter has been sent by the Quebec Provincial Government to all theatre managers in Quebec asking them to take all possible precautions to protect the public against mishaps during the winter season, keeping the exits cleared of snow or other obstructions and the aisles open. The government has also asked that the theatre managers keep the roofs of theatres swept of snow to offset possible collapse.

Unusual Theatre Boom Seen In Kansas City Territory

THERE appear to be no elements in the weather or holiday spirit which can retard the unusual theatre construction boom the Kansas City territory is experiencing. Topping the announcements of the week comes word from St. Joseph, Mo., of a new $500,000 theatre to be built by the St. Joseph Electric Amusement Company, according to Rice McDonald, an official of the company. The new theatre will be a first run downtown house.

Work on the theatre will begin early in the spring and will be a part of the city's centennial celebration for 1926. The site has not been decided but will be soon. The seating capacity and other details are not yet worked out. The company, which also owns and operates the Electric Theatre of St. Joseph, will spend $100,000 in remodelling that house, increasing the seating capacity to about 2,000. F. O. Williams will be retained as manager of both houses. Grubel Brothers of Kansas City, Kas., who operate a string of houses, are connected with the St. Joseph company.

Then there was the Christmas Day opening of the new Oak Park Theatre, Thirty-ninth street and Prospect avenue, Kansas City, which Jay Means, vice-president of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, operates. The house, a modern suburban theatre seating about 1,100 contains virtually every convenience found in the larger theatres. Its equipment includes Simplex projectors, Peerless low intensity reflector arc lamps, Raven Halftone screen and special automatic rewinding equipment.

At Baxter Springs, Kas., work has started on a new theatre being built by John I. Cooper, well known Kansas exhibitor, which will be managed by E. A. Rehn. The house, although small in capacity—seating only about 1,000—will be as modern as any theatre in the state. Contracts for Simplex projectors and incandesent lamp equipment have been let.

At Richmond, Mo., H. McClelland has opened the Gayety Theatre, and thus far, he says, business has been good, although the weather has ben extremely cold.

German Contingent System Explained by U. S. Expert

THE following report from Douglas Miller, assistant commercial attache of the Department of Commerce in Berlin, embodies the proposals made by the Central Association of the German film industry for the new contingent system to be put into effect after March 31, 1926. These have not yet been put into force by the government.

All films, censored during 1924 and 1925, which are to be used as compensation films, have to be reported to the Export and Import Commissioner before December 31, 1925. All foreign films which are to be imported against these films, must have passed censorship before March 31, 1926.

Film censored in the period between August 1 and December 31, 1925, and which may be used as compensation films, do not forfeit this right if the producer of the film has proved to the German Central Association of Film Renters before December 31, 1925, that he has not been able to rent his film in Germany. Should such a film be rented after December 31, 1925, the renter may receive a compensation film according to the foregoing paragraph, prior to March 31, 1926.

Permits for censorship of foreign films will only be issued during 1926 if the firm in question can prove—by means of contracts or other documents—that for every foreign film for which they desire a permit, they have a compensation film of approximately the same length which has passed censorship during 1926 and which has not previously been rented. (This includes sport and cultural films insofar as the latter are suitable for exhibition in picture theatres in general.)

In regard to all other educational and cultural films which have passed censorship in 1926, for every two German films one foreign film of approximately the same length.

Such films which, owing to method of production or for other reasons, have apparently only been produced as compensation for a foreign film, may not be used for this purpose.

Only such renting firms which are registered in Germany are entitled to ask for permits.

The firm asking for such permits may only use the film for their own company and may not, either directly or indirectly, turn it over to other firms.

District renting concerns which rent German films only for single districts may only receive one-quarter of a film per film and per district. Parts of films belonging to district renters may be added to part-films of other renters; however, these films may only be distributed by district renters.

Foreign comedies and grotesques of less than 500 meters may be imported without compensation.

German films of this class may not be used as compensation films.

All investigations will be carried on by a committee composed of six representatives of different groups of the film industry, four of which are sufficient to pass on films.

Every firm applying for a compensation film must first be given a hearing before refusal.

Sam Morris Not Leaving Warner Bros.

RUMORS on the street concerning the personnel of Warner Brothers, and particularly affecting Sam E. Morris who, report had it, was preparing to leave the Warners to head the sales force of another producing company, are absolutely untrue, acording to Albert Warner, who took occasion this week to deny that any important changes in the business management were contemplated.

"So far as Mr. Morris is concerned," said Mr. Warner, "he has been with us a long time, is with us now and will continue to be with us as general manager of distribution. Reports affecting him are rumors only, and I know that at no time has he had any idea of leaving the company where he is highly regarded.

"Warner Brothers have had the most important year since we have been in business, with big problems to solve, particularly affecting the internal organization, getting our new distribution policy aranged and doubling our product. It has been no easy task, but we are now fairly set with our output ahead of schedule and the decks cleared for 1926-27.

"I want to add that in the next few months, with "Lady Windermere's Fan," John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast," "Syd" Chaplin's new picture, Barrymore's "Don Juan," a new Lubitsch production, and others of equal magnitude, exhibitors playing our pictures are going to have something to talk about.

H. M. Warner is now at the western studio preparing the production schedule for the next year, and wil probably remain there until it is completed. We have already started work on next season's schedule, and with our entire organization now functioning at top speed, our forty for the coming season will have more attention frm eevry angle than has been possible in the past.

"It looks to me like a big picture year just ahead for eevryone in the industry, and from al lindications the most prosperous in eevry line that this country ever has known. With money plentiful and everyone working, motion pictures will get a big share of the prosperity, and Warner Brothers' output is most emphatically going to play a considerably large part in making motion picture history for 1926-27.

"We never had a brighter outlook for our company."

Hiram Abrams Calls Foreign Managers for Conference

HIRAM ABRAMS, president of United Artists' Corporation, has called to America his three most important foreign managers for conferences upon sales policy and the product that is to be distributed by the corporation in foreign countries during 1926.

The three foreign heads are Maurice Silverstone, general manager of the Allied Artists' Corporation, Ltd., of London, in charge of distribution in the British Isles; Guy Crosswell Smith, director general of the Les Artistes Associes, of Paris, in charge of distribution throughout Continental Europe, and Ralph Doyle, general manager of the United Artists (Australasia) Ltd., of Sydney, Australia, in charge of distribution in Australia.

Mr. Silverstone arrived on the Majestic on Tuesday, Mr. Smith will arrive early next week and Mr. Doyle shortly thereafter.

WOOLDRIDGE NAMED

Major Ward P. Wooldridge of Rye, N. Y., former director of the Liberty theatres in the United States Army and more recently developer and director of the Saturday Morning Movies for boys and girls in the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc., Will H. Hays, president, has been appointed director of public relations of the Playhouse Operating Company which conducts the Rye Playhouse, Rye, N. Y., the Mamaroneck Playhouse, Mamaroneck, N. Y., the Capitol, Riverhead, N. Y., and the New Canaan Playhouse, New Canaan, Conn. Major Wooldridge will devote his time to the further cementing of the relationship which exists between the theatre patrons and these theatres.

ANOTHER BRANCH OFFICE

The Liberty Film Company will establish a branch office and exchange at Oklahoma City on January 1, 1926, occupying a part of the Metro-Goldwyn Building at Robinson and Pottowatomie Avenues. Eighteen other film exchanges have already located in Oklahoma City.

Chicago Bonuses

THE Christmas spirit was in the air among the theatre managements in the Chicago territory last week. The Ascher circuit pulled off a large party for the theatre managers and their wives and others identified with the organization at the Sherman Hotel Crystal Ballroom last Tuesday evening, the festivities starting about 11.30 p. m. and ending up in the small hours of the morning. Nate Ascher was the host for the circuit and the evening was one long to be remembered.

The Orpheum circuit remembered its staff with gifts of merchandise and in some instances there were other gifts given. Jones, Linick & Schaefer gave everyone a cash gift. Lubliner & Trinz gave their staff suitable gifts while the employes of Balaban & Katz received their annual bonuses. The year has been a prosperous one for most of the managers and owners, so the employes shared with many of them in the prosperity of the theatres.

ESTHER RALSTON MARRIES

Esther Ralston became Mrs. George W. Frey at a Christmas wedding performed at high noon at the Riverside Mission Inn. Mary Brian was the maid of honor and Neil Hamilton the best man. The groom is associated with motion picture activities. The wedding breakfast was served to a small group of friends, including Neil Hamilton, Mary Brian and her mother, Mrs. Louise Brian; Mrs. L. M. Frey, mother of the groom; Mrs. H. W. Ralston, mother of the bride; William Wisbeck, Mrs. Neil Hamilton and Mrs. C. L. Swope.

THEATRE DEEDS FILED

Deeds to the new $1,500,000 Texas Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, have been filed. The building will be financed by L. J. Nart and managed by W. J. Lytle, general manager of the San Antonio Amusement Company, and Famous Players-Lasky will operate the theatre when ready for opening. It will be built and completed by the opening of the show season next fall.

New Theatre Censors Refuse to Serve In Des Moines

ALL of the three members of the recently-appointed board of theatre censors in Des Moines, Ia., have forthwith refused to serve on the board. Des Moines city council tried to make a drive for cleaner shows and pictures, by voting an ordinance creating a board of censors. Mayor M. Garver appointed the board but it never got into action.

Meantime, the case against N. S. Barger, manager of the Garrick Theatre, Des Moines, on charge following the arrest of the manager, twenty-four chorus girls and male members of the troupe, has been ignored by the grand jury. This arrest of the troupe and the charges of obscenity, was the case that resulted in the new ordinance and the appointment of a board of censors.

Mrs. Max Mayer, one of the appointed members, in refusing to serve, said publicly: "There is doubt as to whether the commission can ever do any good. Its powers are limited and have never been defined. Neither can any good come from strict censorship. The commission might be valuable as a go-between to act as a buffer between the properly authorized persons to enforce the law and those who desire to break it."

REAL IMAGINATION

The movies have been blamed for many strange reactions, but the latest one, which will probably head the list for some time to come, was sprung at Cleveland, Ohio, recently. Long after the final performance at the United States Theatre one evening just before Christmas, the night watchman discovered a man tampering with the combination of the office safe and accordingly called the police. At headquarters he claimed that he went to sleep during the performance in which a safe robbery was depicted with much realism. The idea of carrying out the plot struck him when he awoke and found the theatre dark. The robber in the picture escaped. Police discredited the prisoner's alibi when they found a number of safe-breaking tools in his possession.

Motion Picture Relief Fund To Establish Temporary Home

ESTABLISHMENT of a temporary home for worthy indigent and incapacitated members of the motion picture profession and plans for increasing the building fund for a permanent home, were definitely decided upon at a meeting of the board of trustees of the Motion Picture Relief Fund of America, called by Jesse L. Lasky, president.

The session was the semi-annual meeting of the board and was held in the Hollywood offices of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, Fred W. Beetson, secretary, to discuss ways and means for raising the necessary funds.

It was agreed to resume the campaign for life memberships, the proceeds to go into the building fund. A special committee was authorized for this purpose, the appointment of the members being held under advisement by Mr. Lasky with the intention of forming the committee of prominent players.

The committee will carry out plans started last fall by Mary Pickford when she was chairman of the building fund and disposed of a number of life memberships with remarkable success. The movement was discontinued at that time because of possible interference with the Community Chest campaign.

The board of trustees at its meeting also adopted a resolution authorizing the executive committee to establish a temporary home, and for this purpose it is planned to acquire a lease on suitable property. The fund for a permanent home already totals $13,000.

During the year now ending the Motion Picture Relief Fund dispensed approximately $31,000 to needy and invalid members of the picture colony.

"The growth of the motion picture industry and its permanency," said Mr. Lasky, "make the establishment of a home for needy or invalid members of the motion picture colony not only a desirable project but virtually a necessity. The motion picture colony now numbers in excess of 20,000 persons and an institution for the care of those who have met with misfortune will serve the interests of the entire industry in a splendid human spirit."

The Motion Picture Relief Fund is representative of every phase of the film business, including in its membership producers, players, directors, and writers.

The officers are: Jesse L. Lasky, president; Joseph M. Schenck, first vice-president; Mary Pickford, second vice-president; William S. Hart, third vice-president; Harold Lloyd, fourth vice-president; Victor H. Clarke, treasurer; The Rev. Neal Dodd, secretary.

The executive committee consists of Frank E. Woods, chairman; Fred W. Beetson, vice-chairman; The Rev. Neal Dodd, secretary; Ewell D. Moore, counsel; Donald Crisp, Joseph De Grasse, Mitchell Lewis, Arthur F. Statter and William T. Wyatt.

On the board of trustees are: Adolph Zukor, Charles H. Christie, Donald Crisp, Douglas Fairbanks, Glenn Harper, Sol Lesser, Mitchell Lewis, Marcus Loew, Louis B. Mayer, Ewell D. Moore, Mary Pickford, Frank E. Woods, Fred W. Beetson, Charles Chaplin, Victor H. Clarke, The Rev. Neal Dodd, William S. Hart, Rupert Hughes, Jesse L. Lasky, Tom Mix, Hal E. Roach, H. M. Warner, John W. Considine, Jr., Cecil B. De Mille, William Fox, William R. Hearst, Carl Laemmle, Harold Lloyd, Mae Murray, John McCormick and Joseph M. Schenck.

Will H. Hays is chairman of the advisory board, which includes 75 of the foremost names in motion pictures, among them; S. R. Kent, James Cruze, Marion Davies, Thomas Meighan, Pola Negri, Hector Turnbull, Harry Rapf, Will Rogers, Colleen Moore, Charles Eyton, Bebe Daniels, Mack Sennett, D. W. Griffith, Norma Talmadge, Rudolph Valentino, Ernest Lubitsch and Richard Barthelmess.

New Omaha Theatre Seating 2,500 Is Rumored

ACCORDING to Mayer H. Monsky, manager of the Liberty Film Company, in Omaha, plans are being made for a new Omaha picture theatre to cost $1,500,000 and seat 2,500. Mr. Monsky said he was not at liberty to discuss the project except that he knew eastern capital would build the theatre. It will be at the southwest corner of Twentieth and Dodge streets, according to Mr. Monsky. This would put it into an advantageous position to attract all the high school pupils, as Twentieth and Dodge abuts the corner of the Central High School campus.

The building will have six stories, accordingto the advance information given out, with provision for stores on the first floor and a great many apartments on the upper floors.

ALBANY DANCES SOON

The first annual dance of the Associated Film Clubs of Albany, N. Y., will be held at the Hotel Ten Eyck in that city on the evening of January 15. J. H. MacIntyre, manager of the Paramount exchange, will act as chairman of the entertainment committee. The Associated Film Clubs consists of the Albany Film Board of Trade and the Motion Picture Film Salesmen's Association. All exhibitors and all persons connected with the film industry are invited to the affair.

JUNIOR MOVIES A SUCCESS

Junior Movies are proving this winter to be the biggest hits in Albany, Troy and Schenectady, N. Y. Theatres in these three cities adopting the idea of Saturday morning shows for the children will cash in to the extent of thousands of dollars before the winter is over. The shows are costing but very little and have the wholehearted supsupport of Parent-Teachers' and Mothers' Clubs.

JESSE LASKY DINES THE PRESS on occasion of the twelfth anniversary of the Lasky Studio in Los Angeles. The guests were, besides the writers, contract players, directors and important executives

Loew and Hearst Honored at Striking Los Angeles Dinner

WHAT was conceded to be the most brilliant occasion of its kind yet presented in Los Angeles took place at the Ambassador Hotel, Los Angeles, on Tuesday evening, December 15, when Louis B. Mayer and studio associates tendered a get-together Dinner-Dance in honor of Marcus Loew and William Randolph Hearst.

Executives, artists and department heads of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer attended the affair, which was graced by many of the foremost men in and out of filmdom in Los Angeles.

Among the speakers were Marcus Loew, William R. Hearst, Louis B. Mayer, Joseph M. Schenck, Supreme Court Justice Thomas J. Lennon, Sid Grauman, Sol Lesser, Irving Thalberg, Hunt Stromberg, Conrad Nagel, Motley Flint, Marco Hellman, Fred Beetson, Donald Ogden Stewart and Joseph W. Farnham. Fred Niblo acted as master of ceremonies.

An elaborate program of entertainment through courtesy of West Coast Theatres, Fanchon & Marco, H. Singer, B. Piazza, Sid Graumann and "Wrasty" Wright, and staged under the direction of the last named, together with dancing to four orchestras, helped make the evening a great success. Special tableaux acts presented "The Spirit of M-G-M" and "The Book of M-G-M Achievements" and they were enthusiastically applauded.

The big features of the evening were the talks by Marcus Loew, William R. Hearst, and Louis B. Mayer, which were along constructive lines from the standpoint of organization and efficiency and which proved indicative of the unusual spirit of good-fellowship which premeates the M. G. M. organization.

The prolonged applause which greeted the heads of the M. G. M. organization proved a striking indication of the popularity of these executives among their co-workers at the studio. The most prominent members of Los Angeles' theatrical fraternity entertained from a specially constructed stage and many colored spot-lights together with other decorations added to the general brilliancy of the occasion, which was under the general management of Pete Smith.

SCHENCK TO RENT STUDIO

During the absence in Europe of Doug and Mary, their studio will be taken over by Joseph M. Schenck, according to an announcement from the Pickford-Fairbanks Studio. Just which of the Schenck units are to work there has not been decided but indications are now that it will be the Norma Talmadge company and the Constance Talmadge company. Plans are now being considered for enlargement of facilities at the Pickford-Fairbanks Studio.

A New Trick

QUICK thinking on the part of Miss Florence Kinney, cashier at the Broadway Strand, a Detroit downtown theatre, saved James Carrier, the manager, $150 one day last week when some bright mind conceived an unusual confidence game.

Miss Kinney answered the phone during the evening and a voice said: "This is Mr. Carrier speaking. I am over at a jewelry store and have purchased a present for Mr. Lively, our assistant manager. I am sending it over by messenger with a C. O. D. for $150. Please give the money to the jewelry store messenger and charge it to my account."

Miss Kinney was suspicious and called the police. They waited in the lobby until the messenger arrived with a small package containing a lump of soap. The messenger, however, said he had been approached down the street by a man he couldn't identify and had been paid 50 cents to perform the errand.

Brockliss Managing Director Of English First National

E. BRUCE JOHNSON, foreign manager for First National Pictures, has named J. Frank Brockliss as managing director of the English branch of that organization to succeed Ralph J. Pugh, who recently resigned to take up experimental work in another branch of the industry.

Mr. Brookliss is by no means a stranger to the British film world. His prominence in it dates back to the early days when a 200-foot reel was a big production, when titles were unheard of and the top price per picture was scaled at 8 cents a foot. In 1909 he opened his first office at a rental of one pound a week.

At about this time the present-day method of "exclusive" renting came to the fore, and in this connection Mr. Brookliss made his first venture into production.

In 1913 Mr. Brockliss was proprietor of no fewer than five different business enterprises, including the Brockliss Cinema-machinery, Ltd., and Brockliss, Inc., of New York.

In 1922 Mr. Brockliss was invited by Marcus Loew to organize the distribution of Metro pictures in Continental Europe. His excellent work in this capacity was drawn to the attention of Mr. Johnson and was to a large degree responsible for his appointment with First National.

More Stars Than Ever Before To Gleam At Naked Truth Fete

WORK fast and furious is the keynote among the members of the A. M. P. A. now perfecting the plans for this year's Naked Truth Dinner to be held at the Astor Hotel, New York, on Saturday evening, February 6. The committees are as follows:

Chief announcer for the evening, Nat Rothstein of F. B. O.; hotel arangements, Tom Wiley, chairman, Walter Eberhardt, A. S. Rittenberg; tickets, Charles Einfeld, chairman, Charles Cohen, Arthur Selig; advertising and publicity, Nat Rothstein, chairman, King Fisher, E. L. Finney; celebrities, King Fisher, Bert Adler; news reel, Victor Shapiro, chairman, Gordon White, Russell Holman; printed program and seating list, Russell Holman, chairman, Mort Blumenstock; window cards, posters and display matter, Vincent Trotta, chairman, C. L. (Bill) Yearsley, H.' Lewis.

Besides the twelve immortals of the motion picture industry there will be the greatest gathering of stars ever known in the entire history of the business. An indicator of the interest this year's party has aroused may be judged by the unprecedented number of requests for tables and tickets already received by the ticket committee.

Two famous jazz orchestras will play continually during the evening. Duke Yollman and his great assemblage of artists and Carouso's famous orchestra will dispense the music.

In describing the number of stars to be present at this year's affair, the A. M. P. A. can go Metro-Goldwyn's famous phrase, "More stars than there are in heaven," one better, by stating that at this dinner there will be more stars than there are in heaven and on earth. (Note: We've always questioned the number of stars there are in heaven!)

An "Eye and Hoof" affair tells the whole story of the coming party, and if the enthusiasm displayed by the various committees and members of the A. M. P. A. means anything, this dinner and dance can be looked forward to as the biggest of its kind ever attempted either in or out of the industry.

Requests for reservations will be given attention in order of their receipt. All requests should be directed to Charles Einfeld, 365 Madison avenue, New York City.

ST. LOUIS STOCKS DOWN

St. Louis Amusement Company and Skouras Brothers Enterprises stocks were quoted at slightly lower levels on the St. Louis Stock Exchange the past week. Skouras A closed at 52½ bid and St. Louis Amusement at 53½.

An Ultimatum

FIRE COMMISSIONER CONNERY has given Chicago theatre owners twenty-four hours in which to comply with the fire prevention laws. These say that there can be no crowds in the lobbies and no inflammable theatre draperies, among other things.

The theatre owners are trying to have the Council amend laws passed twenty-one years ago after Iroquois Theatre fire when 600 lives were lost. It is impossible, they say, for this disaster to be duplicated nowadays.

SOLD AT PUBLIC AUCTION

On December 29 the property of the People's Amusement Company, owners of the Community Theatre, New Athens, Ill., was sold at public auction. The house seats 500 persons. Included in the sale was the brick building and the complete equipment and fixtures of the theatre.

First National Branch Managers to Visit Key Cities and Home Office

A NEW plan designed to bring the branch managers of First National Pictures closer together and to enable each to profit by the ideas of the others, has been instituted by A. W. Smith, Jr., sales manager for First National in the Eastern territory.

According to Mr. Smith's plan, notifications of which have just been sent to the branches, each manager will have an opportunity to visit whichever branch he prefers, also the home office at the close of First National Month. The order of the visits will be governed by the standing of the branches in the record made during the period of the sales drive now under way. The manager heading the list will be given precedence and others will follow in the order of their standing.

The branches included in this plan are New York, S. W. Hand, manager; New Jersey, J. C. Vergesslich, manager; Buffalo, F. J. A. McCarthy, manager; Albany, A. J. Herman, manager; Boston, T. B. Spry, manager; New Haven, M. H. Keleber, manager; Washington, Robert Smeltzer, manager, and Philadelphia, W. J. Heenan, manager.

Mr. Smith believes that these visits will be of great benefit to the entire personnel of the sales organization.

E. W. HAMMONS, president of Educational, is given the Riesenfeld gold medal for the best short subject of 1924-25, "The Voice of the Nightingale." He will forward it to L. Starvitch, who made the picture, in France. Will Hays is making the presentation, while Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld looks on.

National Committee For Better Films Gathers Soon

PLANS for bringing the strongest possible local support to exhibitors throughout the country showing the best in films will be discussed and a program of local cooperation will be formulated at a three-day conference of the National Committee for Better Films, 70 Fifth Avenue, New York, and the organization with which it is affiliated, the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures. The conference, to be held at the Waldorf-Astoria, New York City, on January 28, 29 and 30, will culminate on January 30 in the eleventh annual luncheon of the National Board of Review with Mayor James J. Walker as the chief speaker and guest of honor.

The promotion of local public interest in better pictures, selected and classified by committees that view the films before release, has been the outgrowth of the first Better Films Conference held last winter. The work of better films groups in all parts of the country will be presented and discussed by hundreds of delegates. The conference, according to the announcements of the National Board, is a public opinion clinic. Ways and means of cultivating the motion picture medium by stimulating a healthy growth of the useful and artistic pictures will be presented by the men and women in localities from Maine to Florida and extending to points in the far West, who have adopted as their local standard the slogan of the National Board—"Selection—not censorship—the solution."

David Somers Dies After Operation In St. Louis

DAVID SOMMERS, president of the Metropolitan Theatres Corporation, St. Louis, which constructed the St. Louis Theatre at Grand boulevard and Morgan street, died suddenly on Tuesday, December 22. He had been ill but two days and was taken to the Jewish hospital for an intestinal operation. He did not survive the shock of the operation.

Funeral services were held on December 24 at Temple Israel, Rabbi Leon Harrison officiating. Interment was in Mount Sinai Cemetery.

Sommers was a dominant figure in the Jewish world of St. Louis and a leading philanthropist. During his funeral all activities ceased for one minute at the St. Louis Theatre. The house is operated by the Orpheum Circuit as a combination first-run and vaudeville theatre.

Orpheum Changes Chicago Managers

SEVERAL changes have been made recently among the managers and assistants of the Orpheum Circuit in the Chicago territory. Emmett Hayes, for several years manager of the Majestic in the Loop, who left the circuit some time ago to go with Getchel & Manning at Des Moines, has returned and is now in charge of the big Riveria on the North Side, succeeding Clarence Williams, who was advanced to the management of the new St. Louis theatre of the organization. Henry Sommers, from the Englewood Theatre on the South Side, where he had been acting as assistant to Manager Harry Bryan, has been advanced to assistant manager of the Riveria and is succeeded at the Englewood by Harold Coffman, from the new Wiversey Theatre. Business for the holidays for the Orpheum Circuit houses was among the best in the history of the circuit.

Edward Kribley of the Monogram and Casino Theatres was robbed of $1,200 of the receipts of the houses which he was taking to the bank for deposit by four highwaymen in front of the Franklin Trust and Savings Bank on East 35th street. They made their escape in a car.

Manager Mort Goldberg of the Bryn Mawr is changing the policy of the house and will run three acts of vaudeville with pictures during the week, changing the bill every other day and five acts on Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

A. J. Fish has been made manager of the Illinois and Grand Theatres at Macomb, Ill.

James Drobas has taken over the management of the Plaza at Ackley from C. S. Gross.

The Star at Prairie City is now under the management of the Schwartz and Galloway circuit.

H. B. Fargo has opened the new Fargo Theatre at Sycamore, Ill., seating 800 and will run deluxe picture programs. The Fargo circuit includes theatres in Geneva, Maywood and Melrose Park, Ill., and it is expected that other houses will be added from time to time.

Manager George Burdick reports that business at the American Theatre on Ashland Boulevard is so good that four performances are now given on Sundays and holidays to take care of the crowds.

Word has been received here of the organization of the Chain Theatres, Inc., with a Delaware charter and a capital of $1,000,000.

More than 3,000 orphans were the guests of Health Commissioner Bundeson and the Cooney Brothers at a Christmas celebration at the big Capital Theatre on the South Side. Ten street cars and many buses carried the children to the theatre for the holiday event.

Lubliner & Trinz expect to open the new Belmont Theatre on Belmont near Lincoln avenue early in February and the new Tower Theatre on East 63rd at Blackstone avenue a month later. A change has also been made in the musical activities of the Harding and Senate Theatres, the big deluxe houses of the circuit. Art Kahn and Ben Paley, musical directors, will change places every other week, similar to the plan which has proven successful with Balaban & Katz.

Balaban & Katz plan an innovation in matinee attractions. Beginning January 11 tea matinees will be held at the Uptown Theatre and the ladies will be invited to bring their friends and have tea and wafers with the hostess, who will preside every afternoon from 1:30 to 5:30 on the mezzanine floor, except Sundays and holidays. B. H. Serkowich is in charge of the arrangements for the new community plan. It may be adopted in the other houses of the circuit if it proves successful at the Uptown. It is planned to extend the feature so that the ladies may arrange with the management for help to solve their social affairs and make the Uptown Theatre the center of many social affairs of the ladies of the North Shore.

An announcement is expected the first of the week as to the policy of the huge new theatre that is going up on Howard avenue for Balaban & Katz. A company known as the Clark Howard Theatre Company will handle the management of the new house. The new company has a nominal capitalization of 1,000 shares of no par value. L. Wriss, G. Fried and B. Klass are named as the organizers, but they are used merely for legal purposes of organizing the new theatre corporation.

Ottawa Exhibitor Uses Mystery Angle

MANAGER DON STAPLETON of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, used a mystery angle for the special presentation of First National's "Lost World," starting Christmas Day. Announcement was made by Manager Stapleton that the presentation of the feature, "The Teaser," would end Christmas Eve and that on Christmas Day the special showing of an unusual production would start. He made this announcement without giving the name of the next attraction, to arouse curiosity. The only break in this arrangement came when he conducted a special invitation performance one morning for teachers of the Ottawa Public Schools and officials of the Canadian National Museum when "Lost World" was screened. Mr. Stapleton published an interview with C. M. Sternberg of the Canadian Department of Paleontology in which the scientist declared: "The Triceratops were especially remarkable."

The Laurier Theatre, the leading picture house in Hull, Quebec, was used by the Hull Kiwanis Club on December 23 for a Christmas treat for underprivileged children of the city, the chairman in charge being Joe Mousette, governor of the Hull jail. The theatre was loaned by Donat Paquin, proprietor of the cinema, for the occasion. Mr. Paquin is a prominent local Rotarian.

Cobalt, the mining centre of Northern Ontario, has blossomed forthwith a brand new moving picture palace which has been named the Classic Theatre. The proprietors of the new cinema are Arthur R. and Horace O. Barrett, who promoted the construction of the structure. Arthur R. Barrett is the manager of the Classic.

Two theatres of Ontario have installed large new pipe organs recently. J. C. McCarthy, proprietor of the Belle Theatre, Belleville, Ontario, has purchased a Woodstock pipe organ for this theatre which has bee under course of construction since last summer and which is now opened. The Princess Theatre at Sudbury, Ontario, has also been provided with a similar instrument, this having been purchased by J. R. Bissett, proprietor of the Princess.

Ottawa, Ontario, had no community Christmas Tree this year but the vacancy was filled by Manager J. M. Franklin of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, who set up an unusually large tree for the holidays in the spacious lobby of the theatre. This was handsomely decorated and, on Christmas morning, the tree was loaded with valuable gifts for Mr. Franklin, Roy MacDonald, assistant manager, and members of the staff. A Christmas party was held on the stage of the theatre after midnight and dancing was enjoyed after a dinner.

The second week of "Little Annie Rooney," with Mary Pickford, opened at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, on December 28. It is expected by Manager D. C. Brown of the Regent that this attraction will run through the month of January for its Toronto first run. Coincident with this engagement, announcement has been made in Toronto newspapers that Mary Pickford has consented to permit the use of her name for a new style of silverware for table use which has been brought out by a Toronto jewelry company. This is now being marketed as the Mary Pickford style of cutlery. It is pointed out that this is the first time that Miss Pickford has allowed her name to be used for commercial purposes. The reason for this special privilege is that Mary Pickford was born in Toronto.

New Dundee Opens In Omaha

THE new Dundee Theatre at Dodge and Fiftieth streets, Omaha, opened its doors formally Saturday night, December 19. A capacity house was present. The building is constructed in the Georgian type of architecture. The great pipe organ was almost smothered with roses presented to the organist, and the lobby itself was banked high with flowers. A. R. Hanson, manager, says the Dundee is equipped with the latest types of heating and ventilating equipment. The building represents an investment of about $125,000.

Mr. Hanson's venture into the picture game is a new move for him. He is known as a restaurant man in Omaha. He was formerly proprietor of the Woodmen of the World cafeteria, Lincoln Inn, Hanson's Cafeteria.

Ernest A. Harms, owner of four neighborhood movies, plans to build a new theatre at Forty-fifth and Military avenue. This is to cost about $75,000. It will be exclusively a picture house. Mr. Harms already owns the

San Francisco Features Xmas Parties

THE spirit of Christmas seems to have reached farther this year than ever before and Christmas theatre parties for children have been featured at both down town and suburban houses. The fifth annual Christmas show of Roos Bros. was held as usual at the California Theatre, when more than 3,000 youngsters enjoyed the entertainment arranged by Manager Nat Holt. Chief of Police Daniel J. O'Brien, whose son George has become a screen star in his own right, acted as master of ceremonies. Roos Bros. entertain annually the children whose names appear on their birthday list, making use of the California Theatre at San Francisco, the T. & D. Theatre at Oakland and the California Theatre at Berkeley. Manager H. Ceccarelli, of the latter house, was also called upon to arrange a special children's Christmas party for the Downtown Association and secured "Peter Pan" for the film attraction. The Franklin Theatre, Oakland, featuring Jackie Coogan in "Old Clothes," gave a special matinee performance at which children were admitted on the presentation of a bundle of old clothing, the clothes in turn being handed over to the Volunteers of America. The Castro Theatre, San Francisco, was turned over for a time to the Elks, who gave the children of the neighborhood a Christmas party. A book was the price of admission to the Warfield Theatre for a limited time and several thousand volumes were gathered for the library at San Quentin Penitentiary.

Dorothy Devore, moving picture star, and A. Wylie Mather, who has charge of the interests of the Consolidated Amusement Company at Honolulu, T. H., were married at San Francisco, December 18, the ceremony taking place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Louis R. Greenfield. The theatre man met his bride a few years ago while she was on "location" in Honolulu and since then his visits to the mainland have always included a visit to Hollywood.

The world premiere showing of "Mannequin," the film adaptation of the prize story of Fannie Hurst, took place at the Grenada Theatre, San Francisco, the week before Christmas.

The West Portal Theatre, near Twin Peaks Tunnel, San Francisco, will be opened shortly before the end of the year, with Jesse Levin in charge.

Ward Cox is preparing to start work at once on the erection of a 400-seat picture theatre at Forty-sixth avenue and Irving street, San Francisco.

A change in policy will be made at Santa Rosa, Cal., on January 4, when West Coast Theatres, Inc., will introduce Fanchon & Marco attractions and formally take possession of the two houses recently acquired. Arrangements have also been made whereby Fanchon & Marco acts will be offered at Berkeley.

Jack Brehany, of the San Francisco office of West Coast Theatres, Inc., recently addressed the Exchange Club of Watsonville, Cal., on West Coast Theatres, its aims and ideals, and what it means to California theatre-goers.

Jack Partington, of the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, returned just before Christmas from an Eastern trip and found a great crowd of friends and a band at the Ferry Building to greet him.

So great was the interest shown in Charlie Chaplin's "The Gold Rush," that Manager Charles M. Pincus had the doors opened at 8 o'clock the first morning of the engagement. A crowd was on hand even at this early hour and a house-full of enthusiastic boosters was on the streets before other theatres were open.

Sid Grauman, formerly of San Francisco but now of Los Angeles, paid his old home town a visit just before Christmas.

Schine Reported Purchaser Of Batavia, N. Y., Theatre

BATAVIA'S oldest theatre, the Dellinger, has been sold by William F. Haitz, who held a life lease of the property which was part of the estate of his wife, Mrs. Estelle Dellinger Haitz, to Joseph R. Bosenbloom, who is believed to have acted for the Schine Theatrical Corporation of Gloversville, N. Y. It is reported that the theatre, which was sold for around $75,000, will be razed to make way for a new Schine house in this town. The Dellinger has been showing pictures for several years and during the past summer was closed because it did not conform with the new state building laws.

The new Capitol will open in January in Newark, N. Y., with G. B. DePauw as manager. The Capitol, which cost $200,000, is a link in the Schine chain. The house will offer pictures and vaudeville and an occasional road show. It has a $20,000 organ as one of its features.

Ernest G. Dodds of Rochester has been appointed manager of the Grand and Universal theatres in Auburn. Mr. Dodds has managed several houses for the Schine Corporation in various parts of the state.

Walter Hays, vice-president and Eugene Falk, secretary-treasurer, were the guests of honor at the annual holiday banquet given by the employes of the Victoria Theatre, one of Buffalo's largest community theatres and a link in the Mark-Strand chain. The banquet was held in the lobby of the theatre on the evening of December 30 and dancing followed. There were talks by Manager Arthur L. Skinner, Mr. Hays and Mr. Falk.

The Buffalo office of the Mark-Strand organization will not be moved to New York at present, as reported in Gotham. Three new stenographers and another auditor have arrived in Buffalo to join the local office force in the Iroquois Building. Walter Hays wil continue to make Buffalo his headquarters. Mr. Hays is vice-president of the company.

The employes of the Strand, Cataract and Bellevue Theatres in Niagara Falls were the guests of the managers, A. C. Hayman, Herman Lorence and E. C. Weinberg, at a big Christmas banquet held last Friday night in the Prospect house. Entertainment was furnished by the acts playing the houses.

George T. Cruzen, manager of the Palace, Paramount's Lockport house, gave that town its first midnight show on New Year's Eve when he put on a complete program.

The Regent, Rochester, has changed its policy. A. L. Morris announces that after almost a dozen years of straight pictures the house now will add a feature act each week. Prices in the balcony ad orchestra will be boosted 5 cents at nights. Matinee prices remain unchanged.

A new $200,000 picture theatre will be built in Rochester by Sam Tishkoff and Aaron Merchey, who operate the Plaza. The new theatre will be in Genesee street, between Arnett boulevard and Frost avenue. The house, which will seat 1,800 will be ready by spring. Joseph Nicosia will also build a theatre in Rochester. This neghborhood house also will be in Genesee street, opposite Clifton.

Al Beckerich of Loew's State, Buffalo, took the space in his trolley front cards the past week to wish Buffaloians "A Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year," Al has "sold" the public on his show.

Frankel Acquiring Ohio Circuit

HOWARD FRANKEL is rapidly acquiring a chain of good theatres throughout Ohio, his last purchase being the Zane Theatre at Zanesville, Ohio. Frankel's other houses are located in Columbus, Coshocton, Canton, Sidney and Dover. The Zane was purchased from L. H. Joseph, who after disposing of the house purchased the Ohio Theatre at Shadyside, Ohio, from W. P. James. Frankel has rechristened his latest acquisition, the Rivoli.

Extensive remodeling is being contemplated at the Lyric Theatre, Cincinnati, one of the larger houses in the chain controlled by Ike Libson.

M. C. and I. N. Stone, Cleveland, Ohio, contemplate the erection of a theatre at the rear of 3209 East 93rd street, at an estimated cost of $63,000.

Marcus Loew Visits Kansas City

MARCUS LOEW was in Kansas City recently to confer with Herbert M. Woolf, an official of the Midland Theatre and Realty Company, in reference to the new $2,000,000 Midland Theatre planned for Kansas City. Although Mr. Loew would make no statement concerning the proposed new theatre, it is understood that Mr. Woolf and M. B. Shanberg, another official of the Midland company, will go to New York in a few days to complete negotiations on the theatre with Mr. Loew.

The Main Street and Globe Theatres, Kansas City, continue to reap a harvest of publicity and box office stimulation from Charleston dance exhibitions in which the public furnishes the contestants.

Among the out-of-town visitors along Kansas City's movie row this week were: John Hostettler, head of the Hostettler Circuit, Omaha, Neb.; Fred Osborn, Howard, Kas.; William Parsons, Pershing Theatre, Joplin, Mo.; H. McClelland, Gayety, Richmond, Mo.; F. G. Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; C. L. McVey, Dreamland, Herington, Kas.; S. H. Harvey, Colonial, Pittsburg, Kas.; M. H. Hubble, Hubble, Trenton, Mo.; Mrs. H. Winkler, Mainstreet, Lexington, M.; A. F. Perkins, Schnell Theatre, Harrisonville, Mo.; S. A. Andrews, Olathe, Kas.; Hugh Gardner, Neosho, Mo.

The Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, of which John Schwalm is the controlling spirit, is now resplendent with a new marquis extending across the entire High and Front street sides. A huge electric sign, which can be seen for several blocks, has also been erected atop the building.

The many friends of John Kessler, who looks after the Alhambra Theatre, Canton Ohio, are still apprehensive as to his condition. Kessler was take suddenly ill while attending the M. P. T. O. Ohio convention at Columbus recently, and taken to a hospital in that city.

A Tiny World, Says Farley of Albany

THAT the world is a pretty small place after all is the opinion of W. W. Farley of Albany, owner of picture theatres in Schenectady, Catskill and Yonkers and head of the Farash Theatres Corporation, with four of the largest houses in the Electric City. Mr. Farley also is president of a large real estate company in Miami, Florida, and is planning to go south with his family the fore part of January, to remain until spring. It appears that Mr. Farley received a letter the other day from his partner in Florida, stating that a certain party had been looking over a very valuable corner lot in Miami with the idea of erecting a large picture house on it. The letter to Mr. Farley concluded with a statement that the man was Max Spiegel, former owner of the State Theatre in Schenectady, which is now one of the Farley holdings. A rumor to the effect that Mr. Farley was seeking to acquire other theatres to his present chain, and that he was casting a longing eye on a house in Hudson, was denied by Mr. Farley, with the added statement that he owned a sufficient number of theatres at the present time and had no thought, at least for the immediate future, of increasing his present chain.

Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand group of houses in Troy and Albany, was in New York City the day or so before Christmas and upon returning home was heard to remark that if he could only play to one-tenth of the crowds that jammed Fifth Avenue he would be in seventh heaven.

James Roach, manager of the Farash Theatres in Schenectady, is apparently taking a little flier for himself, for according to all reports he is planning to reopen the Broadway Theatre located in the residential section, which has been closed for some little time.

In letters to friends along Film Row, Ben Apple, a former well known exhibitor of Troy, now located at Fort Lauderdale, Florida, remarks that it is a rather hard matter these days to secure clear titles to property and that such is hampering his efforts in selling real estate. Mr. Apple, who weighs around 250 pounds, adds a postcript to the effect that he has been losing weight and may eventually regain his "girlish figure." He has met a number of former film men in Florida, including Jimmy Sper and William Sherry.

Jack Matthews of Plattsburg gave himself a Christmas present in the shape of a brand new car, but some of the film boys expressed the hope that he will use it a bit more frequently than he did the old one in coming to Albany.

James Rose, with houses in Troy and Rensselaer and one of the finest sort of exhibitors that ever ran a theatre, has the sympathy of his many friends in the recent death of his sister.

Vincent Dailey, who is running the Pember Theatre in Granville, is showing pictures four nights a week, and with business holding up as it is will probably continue on this schedule throughout the winter.

Few exhibitors in Northern and Central New York, were in town during Christmas week. Lew Fischer was down from Fort Edward but was so busy in picking out Christmas presents that he had little time to drop in at many of the exchanges.

Herman Vineberg, manager of the Albany and Regent Theatres in Albany, is sporting a brand new platinum watch which he found in his stocking on Christmas morning, the gift of his wife.

According to reports along Film Row, William Benton of Saratoga Springs, who has several houses in Northern New York and who recently opened a brand new one in Mechanicville, is to take over the Rialto in Glens Falls, which has been running a program of vaudeville and pictures and which recently announced a reduction in admission.

Santa Claus was pretty good to Tone Veiller, manager of the Mark Strand, leaving him, among other things, a handsome pigskin cigarette case, with wife's name attached to the card. Mr. and Mrs. Veiller put out some exceptionally clever Christmas cards among their many friends.

All that Morris Silverman, owner of the Pearl and Happy Hour Theatres in Schenectady, needed was a Santa Claus costume when he made his appearance on Film Row a day or so before Christmas. Morris arrived with cigars and cigarettes for the men and candy for all the girls, and what is more to the point, he didn't miss a single exchange.

A newcomer hit town the other day in the person of Charles Morse of the Atlas Amusement Company of Boston, who does the booking for the Atlas Theatre of Adams, Mass. Tom Martell, who books pictures for the military posts of the United States, was also in town, with the result that the soldier boys along the northern border will soon be seeing some of the latest and best productions from the several producing companies represented in the Capital City.

Her trip a combination shopping one, between Christmas presents and film, Mrs. J. M. Briggs, of the Tyler Theatre in Pittsfield, Mass., was in town during the week and was warmly greeted at several of the exchanges.

Goodman Manager of Standard in Detroit

DUE to the continued illness of Robert J. Rowan, who has been confined to his apartment suffering from high blood pressure for three months, officials of the Standard Film Service have decided to install a new manager in Detroit. Jess Fishman, general manager of the company, was in the city last week to appoint and install A. M. Goodman in the office as manager. It has been decided that Mr. Rowan needs an indefinite vacation and rest in order to completely restore his health.

One of the largest and most effective electric signs in the downtown section has been installed on the Family Theatre, which is situated in the corner facing the City Hall, making it one of the most conspicuously lighted business places in the downtown section.

The John H. Kunsky offices report a record-breaking sale on Christmas booklets of tickets for their downtown theatres, the State, Capitol, Madison and Adams. The tickets are placed on sale several weeks befor Christmas each year and many are purchased as gifts

Kimmell Brothers, who have operated theatres, in several suburban communities surrounding Detroit, enter the city with the erection of a 2,000-seat house for which ground has been broken on West Warren avenue, in the heart of the automobile manufacturing district.

Christmas week was used to celebrate the opening of the new Lancaster Theatre on West Jefferson avenue. The house, which seats close to 2,000 and will play pictures and vaudeville, was opened the day after Christmas.

Kenneth Renaud has been named manager of the new Grand Riviera Theatre by the Munz interests. Renaud has ben exploitation manager of the Paramount local office for 18 months.

W. S. Butterfield and Mrs. Butterfield have returned to Detroit after spending several weeks in Florida. After the holiday season they plan to return to Florida for an extended stay.

Julius Berinstein, owning several houses in Albany and Troy, took a day or so off and spent Christmas with his relatives in Elmira.

Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Milligan of Schuylerville "listened in" on the wide, wide world on Christmas Eve through a radio set made by Mr. Milligan, and which is said to be without an equal in all Schuylerville.

Ben Stern, manager of the Lincoln in Troy, has a pen and pencil with which he is now doing his booking, the gift of the employees of the theatre. "Al" LeMay, projectionist, made the presentation speech.

Jack Rosenthal of the Rose Theatre in Troy must believe in giving full value for the 15-cent admission which he is charging on his amateur nights. The other night there were no less than sixteen amateur acts along with the feature picture. If this keeps up much longer, some of Mr. Rosenthal's patrons will probably bring a midnight lunch with them. On the two nights before Christmas, Mr. Rosenthal presented pearl necklaces to holders of lucky coupons.

Harry M. Brooks was re-elected president of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' union in Troy last Sunday. All other officers were also returned.

Dennis Regan of Greenwich got as far as Troy the other day but failed to show up on Film Row. He called on several old friends at the Troy Theatres, did a bit of shopping and then returned home.

There was no Christmas morning snooze this year for John Doocey, manager of the King Theatre in Troy, for the house opened up at 10 a. m. as usual and ran straight through until 11 p. m. Mr. Doocey managed to take a couple of hours off in the afternoon, however, and enjoyed the fat gobbler that graced his table.

The many friends of Jake Golden, manager of the Griswold Theatre in Troy, are hoping for a speedy recovery from the illness which resulted in Mr. Golden entering a Massachusetts hospital a few days before Christmas. Mr. Golden, who has been ailing for some little time past, went to Boston, his former home, where an examination by a physician revealed a condition that resulted in Mr. Golden going to the hospital.

How English Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, looks these days, puffing away at his Dunhill, the gift of Mrs. Roberts! A tobacco pouch also went with the pipe. Mr. Roberts received a pipe a year or so ago, and being an inveterate smoker he burned out the bowl. Perceiving the fact, Mrs. Roberts said nothing as she scurried away for the present that pleased her husband immensely on Christmas morning.

The nicest gift that could possibly come to any man on Christmas morning was received by Edward Trembly, manager of the American Theatre in Troy, for his aged mother, who had been threatened with pneumonia, has practically recovered.

Sol Manheimer of the Olympic Theatre in Watertown endeared himself to the community on Christmas Day when he gave a special matinee at 10 a. m. for the benefit of several families who lost all their worldly possessions in a fire that swept the little village of Felts Mills a few days before. Mr. Manheimer also entertained the newsboys of the city.

All the men and women along Film Row are thanking Charles Miller, owner of the Bright Spot in Rennselaer, for the boxes of candy that came their way just before Christmas.

Quite a number of exhibitors in these parts are either sick or on the road to recovery from an attack of what appears to be the grippe. The number includes D. J. Harrington of Saratoga Springs, Mrs. Regan of Greenwich and Mrs. Milligan of Schuylerville.

Judging from the outside appearance, the house which is being erected in Utica by W. H. Linton will be one of the most beautiful theatres in Central New York. The front is of tapestry brick and white marble, and Pop Linton promises that the interior will be up to the last minute in elaborate fittings. And those who know Mr. Linton are eagerly awaiting the opening.

"The Still Alarm"—Universal

Story of Fire-Fighters Has Good Human Interest With Exceptional Thrills in the Fire Sequences

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

FAMOUS as a stage melodrama which has delighted audiences for a generation or more, Universal is now offering as a Universal-Jewel production "The Still Alarm" a story of fire-fighting combining the tragedy of a runaway wife, an unscrupulous villain and a deserted husband who found solace in the love of an adopted daughter.

Dick Fay's life is centered in his work as a fireman. His wife Lucy wearying of the drudgery is persuaded by Perry Dunn to elope but leaves him almost immediately. Dick adopts a girl baby rescued from a fire when her mother dies. Seventeen years later find Dick a battalion chief, the girl Drina budding into beautiful womanhood and in love with Tom, a fireman, but desirous of seeing a little more of life. Lucy, the wife, is owner of a swell modiste shop sponsored by Dunn, who is unscrupulous with women. Drina gets a job as a model and attracts his attention. He gives her doped ginger ale and gets rid of the crowd but Lucy calls him away on important business. A fire breaks out in the building and during the thrilling rescues Dick finds Drina. Lucy finally convinces him that Drina is innocent and she and Dick become reconciled while Drina is glad to have Tom slip a ring on her finger.

There are some good fire-fighting scenes and rescues at the beginning, with the old horse-drawn engines. A particularly effective little touch shows Dick's dog going to the rescue of a puppy and jumping with it several stories into a life net. The next few reels are taken up with the development of the heart-interest melodrama and sandwiched in between the fire scenes allow the interest to lag somewhat. This is all revived, however, in fine fire sequences which are exceedingly realistic. There is a whole building in flames and fire bursting out on the different floors trapping the firemen. The climax is a scene which develops terrific suspense and which has been handled in an entirely new and remarkably effective and realistic way. The trapped men are shown edging their way along a narrow ledge from one window to another, each aiding in supporting the men on each side of him, where a slip would mean death to them all. Maybe it doe not sound thrilling, but it will make you hold your breath.

Wliliam Russell as Dick Fay and Helene Chadwick as his eloping wife give a fine performance, and the same is true of Richard Travers in the thankless role of the unscrupulous villain. Edna Marian and Edward Hearn capably portary the younger couple.

"The Still Alarm" offers good entertainment for melodrama fans.

"The Enchanted Hill"—Paramount

High-Class Western Featuring Jack Holt Has Excellent Suspense and Good Dramatic Tension

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

WHAT can be done by individual touches in the development and handling of the situation where the underlying plot follows familiar lines is shown in the Paramount picture, "The Enchanted Hill," made by Director Irvin Willat from a novel by Peter B. Kyne and presenting Jack Holt and Florence Vidor in the leading roles.

"The Enchanted Hill" is the name of a prosperous ranch owned by Holt. George Bancroft is cast as the crooked foreman of a neighboring ranch who used underhand methods, even violence to scare Holt away. Florence Vidor is the real absentee owner of the other ranch who arriving on the scene starts a friendship with Holt which is threatened because she believes Bancroft's stories about Holt being a bad man and a killer. Eventually she becomes convinced of Bancroft's villainy and learns that he is in league with a man who has discovered a rich vein of gold on The Enchanted Hill.

Holt's ranch is certainly a most up-to-date affair, the last word in ranches. An ex-soldier, he has stocked it with not one, but a whole fleet of aeroplanes and even in a ticklish situation brings a machine gun into play. These appurtances may seem far-fetched, but they add zest and novel touches to the action. Instead of the stock fights that usually characterize "westerns," Director Willat uses diplomacy to sidetrack one, the machine gun to break up a threatened lynching and even the one fight in the film occurs behind the barn as a shield and is enlivened by comedy by-play. The almost inevitable chase for the villain occurs and he comes to his end when his auto goes over a cliff, but instead of the hero chasing after him on horseback and using a convenient short-cut he proceeds in an aeroplane and in an effective punch scene sweeps down until he almost touches the machine. Oh yes, there is gun play and a henchman almost gets the hero, in fact there are frequent attempts against his life, which add to the suspense. In fact the excellent suspense and the sustained dramatic tension throughout is one of the striking points of this film. Another noteworthy thing is the excellent and natural comedy, a number of the earlier scenes being handled from this angle and resulting in a lot of smiles and laughs.

Holt gives a good portrayal of the gentleman rancher of the polished up-to-the-minute type; Bancroft is all that could be desired as the villain, and Florence Vidor makes an attractive heroine. Noah Beery is excellent in a character role as the rough uncouth and eccentric foreman and is responsible for a large share of the comedy. In addition Mary Brian, with little to do adds attractiveness as Holt's little sister. The photographic shots are beautiful and the picture has been produced on a high class scale. Altogether it is good entertainment and despite its trite plot should prove pleasing to a greater clientele than the average western.

"The Wives of the Prophet"—Lee-Bradford

Opie Reed Novel Makes a Pleasing Picture With Decidedly Unusual Story and Fine Cast

THERE are three points of especial interest about the Lee-Bradford production, "The Wives of the Prophet," directed by J. A. Fitzgerald, which should appeal to the average theatre patron, an unusual type of story, unhackneyed settings and really remarkable photographic effects.

Mr. Fitzgerald has based his picture on Opie Reed's novel of the same title which deals with a strange sect in the mountains of Virginia who each year choose five beautiful girls to be the wives of a prophet who they expect to come. Bryce, an easy-going outsider, admires the face of Judith, one of the girls, and by having the portraits of the girls tattoed on his body easily poses as the real prophet as this is to be the sign. He has to marry all five, but loving only Judith, seeks to escape with her, but is waylaid by her brother who hears him declare he is not the prophet. He is captured and is to be put to death at dawn, but Judith persuades her brother to free him and they go away together.

This story was filmed in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia and besides having some striking exteriors there are some fine shots of the wierd religious rites and remarkably beautiful shots of the interior of Luray and a new cave.

The picture is somewhat lacking in action before the climax is reached and the processions and wierd rites of these strange people could be shortened but the story certainly gets away from the usual run of picture plots and there is a fascination to the strange theme which holds the interest. It should prove an entertaining picture in the average theatre.

"The Golden Strain"—Fox

Novel Punch in Climax of Pleasing Western Based on Peter Kyne Story of Regeneration

ADAPTED from a novel of the same title by the popular author Peter B. Kyne, William Fox is offering "The Golden Strain," the story of how the inheritance of a golden strain of heroism and valor which long lay dormant in a coward finally found expression.

The story is laid in and around a government fort in Arizona at the time when this border territory was harassed by Indian uprisings. The hero appears as a West Point graduate who shows "yellow" in his baptism of fire. His latent courage descended from a long line of heroes is awakened by the taunts of his half-brother and when an uprising jeopardizes the safety of his father and sweetheart he proves equal to the occasion and leads the soldiers to victory, winning back the love of the girl who threw him over because of his cowardice and regaining his place in the army.

There is good character development and the idea of the story is well brought out. Like the majority of pictures with a regeneration theme, the outcome can be guessed but the story is smoothly handled and well directed by Victor Schertzinger and should prove pleasing entertainment for the majority. Members of the famous Tenth U. S. Cavalry and a large number of Apache Indians take part in the scenes and add to the interest and there is a clever surprise in the climax that lends an additional "punch" where the supposed supply train of covered wagons is found to be loaded with cavalrymen who quickly repel the Indian attack.

"Steel Preferred"—Prod. Dist. Corp.

Melodrama With Steel Industry as Background Has Good Punch and Number of He-Man Thrills

AS explained in a subtitle "Steel Preferred" the Producers Distributing Corporation production is not intended as an epic of the steel industry. Adapted from the magazine stories "The Adventures of Wally Gay" it deals with the adventures of this likeable young chap in the mills of this giant industry and is built solely to entertain.

Wally is a bright young engineer who has been demoted because of the jealousy of Waldron his superior. While working on a train conveying molten metal one car overturns and Wally saves the president's daughter Amy, who is in the path of the fiery liquid. This starts a friendship and Wally convinces Amy's father of the soundness of a furnace project he has designed. Waldron bribes a henchman to persuade the men who refuse to work on Wally's furnace saying it is unsafe, but Wally beats him in a hand-to-hand fight and the men return. A thug tries to shoot Wally and Amy rushes to him and he takes her in his arms.

William Boyd, who scored a success in "The Road to Yesterday," makes Wally Gay a pleasing likeable chap with a particularly winning smile and Vera Reynolds is attractive as the girl. Nigel Barrie makes a capable villain as Waldron, Walter Long gives a good characterization of Wally's tremendously strong but mentally unbalanced friend, Goofy, and Hobart Bosworth is excellent in the minor role of the father. William V. Mong and Charlie Murray contribute effective comedy as two booze-drinking workmen who are always arguing with each other. Boyd also has a good comedy bit at a swell dinner where he chases an elusive olive or cherry all over the table.

The story is pleasing, the atmosphere of the steel mills, in which most of the action takes place, is colorful and effective and there are a number of good punches. There is a real thrill in the rescue of the girl from the molten stream of metal when the car overturns and another good melodramatic scene where Goofy catches the villain in the pincer arms of a huge derrick and suspends

"A Kiss for Cinderella"—Paramount

Barrie's Whimsical Story Made Into Delightful Film by Herbert Brenon, Starring Betty Bronson

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

BARRIE, BRENON, BRONSON! An alliterative combination of three names to conjure with. Responsible for the success of "Peter Pan" released just a year ago, this trio again shines forth in a delightful production of similar type "A Kiss For Cinderella" also produced by Paramount.

Noted for his whimsical stories, nothing written by James M. Barrie, the noted English author, can surpass in sheer delicious fantasy his "Kiss For Cinderella" and in transferring it to the screen Director Herbert Brenon has to an almost uncanny degree preserved the elusive qualities which made this little story so thoroughly enjoyable.

Cinderella, a little slavey, works for a mere pittance for a kindly artist in London during the great war. By having a light during an air raid she incurs the suspicions of a zealous but simple-minded policeman who trails her and finds that somehow she manages to take care of four war babies and do good for her fellow-men. Cinderella, proud of her small feet, is highly imaginative and finally her fancy gets the best of her and she dreams she is at the court ball and is chosen by the prince. This follows the lines of the familiar fairy story of Cinderella with her return to rags at midnight. The kindly policeman finds her in the snow. The elderly artist cares for her tenderly when the doctor says she is starving not only for food but for human affection. When she recovers the policeman appears and proposes and she refuses him, woman-like, after he promises to ask her again. She gets the glass slippers however which he gives her in place of a ring.

"A Kiss For Cinderella" exquisitely combines in its theme a satire on the fear of the populace during war-time, the imaginative fantasy of childhood and sparkling wit that the older heads can enjoy, making it a picture that should not only prove a wonderful treat for the kiddies but a source of real delight for the grown-ups.

There is a touching pathos and rare humor too in the early scenes where she is a little slavey and so naively talks to the big policeman, and tugs at the heart when she explains how she came to do her bit by adopting the four babies, one of them a German.

Naturally the big scene in the picture is the ball in which Director Brenon has outdone his previous efforts. We see this ball not as such affairs really are but as a childish imagination would picture them. First there is the good fairy who transforms the rags into royal raiment. Then by clever trick work the pumpkin and mice "grow" larger until there are a coach and four white steeds. Cinderella enters and literally rides through the clouds to the palace. She sees the familiar faces of her friends as the different characters, the artist as the king, the policeman as the prince etc. They feast on sandwiches and ice cream cones, the babies are watching the grand affair. Here are seen more of Barrie's whimsical touches, a thermometer given Cinderella serves as a test of the goodness of the beautiful would-be brides, hand organs furnish the music. These scenes are imaginative and fascinating almost beyond description and no words can do them justice, and there are delightful and clever humorous touches as for instance the royal family holding on to straps as are used in the subway. The kiddies will just go into raptures over this ball, while the older heads will smile at the cleverness of the imaginative angles and the wonderfully effective humor.

As Cinderella, Betty Bronson shows a surer touch and is ideal both in rags and beautiful gowns. Next comes Tom Moore's superb performance. Especially capable is the perfor- Esther Ralston is beautiful as the fairy godmother. The others in the cast all enter into the spirit of the story and give fine performances. Especially capable is the performance of Henry Vibart as the artist and king.

"A Kiss for Cinderella" should prove an excellent attraction for any type of theatre.

George Walsh Scores in Conventional But Gripping Story of the Ring, With Famous Oldtime Fighters

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

GEORGE WALSH in "The Prince of Broadway," a Chadwick Picture, is good entertainment of the conventional sort. Well produced, well acted and with a coherent and gripping story, it will please audiences. Walsh, Alyce Mills and Alma Bennett excel, though all the artists do well. A really big feature is the introduction toward the end, as a legitimate part of the plot, of many famous characters of the prize ring by James J. Jeffries. Fight fans will consider this part a special treat, as will many other people who know of the famous champions by reputation if not by seeing them in the ring.

In fact, prize-fighting plays a major part in the story. The hero loses the championship by riotous living. The heroine, a childhood sweetheart, undertakes to reform him and enlists the aid of a wealthy admirer. This man sends the hero to his ranch and tries to frame him. The heroine herself goes west and uncovers the plot. The hero proves his reformation by re-entering the ring and defeating the champion.

Director John Gorman and Supervisor Hampton Del Ruth have turned out a neat piece of work in "The Prince of Broadway." The plot development is smooth and the acting above average. The ring scenes are very well staged.

Among the famous fighters shown are Jeffries, Capt. Bob Roper, Frankie Genaro, Ad Wolgast, Tommy Ryan, Billy Papke and Leach Cross.

F. B. O.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet), Star, Yakima Canutt. Very good western that was enjoyed by all. Canutt fastly coming as box office bet. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkins, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SMOOTH AS SATIN. (6,043 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. A good crook story with plenty of action for Saturday night. Good moral. Tone and special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

WHITE FANG. (5,600 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). Dog is fine but story is a little disconnected. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Conservative class city of 23,500. Admission 25-35. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

First National

CLASSIFIED. Star, Corinne Griffith. This is in my estimation the best thing that Miss Griffith has done up to date and gave immense satisfaction. Did not draw as well as usual owing to heavy competition, but did very well under all the conditions. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre, Yankton, South Dakota.

ENTICEMENT. (6,234 feet). Star cast. Pleased Wednesday and Thursday crowds. Farming class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

FINE CLOTHES. (6,971 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Not up to the usual Stone standard. Business good as Stone is a favorite here. Farming class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre, (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

HALF WAY GIRL. (7,570 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Nothing remarkable and that's what the attendance was. Okay if bought right. That should enter in the proposition on the exhibit of this picture. Weather good. Strictly a program offering. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HALF WAY GIRL. Star cast. Plenty of action in this one. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

HEART SIREN. Star, Barbara LaMarr. Fair, just ordinary business. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Farming class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

HER SISTER FROM PARIS. (7,255 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. A "comedy pippin," buy it, exploit it, go after it just as strong as you can and reap the harvest. Here it was not thought risque, there is a reason in this comedy for every thing so the "jazz" stuff was not dragged in. Weather fine. The attendance very good, it had to be at the price I paid. I played at regular prices as I do most every picture I play, always trying to get "volume" in business, but it wouldn't be out of line to classify this as a special and to slightly increase your prices. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

IDLE TONGUES. (5,447 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. Fair. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre, Yankton, South Dakota.

IF I MARRY AGAIN. (7,461 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Nice little picture that pleased and did usual business. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre, Yankton, South Dakota.

JUST A WOMAN. (6,380 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. Ordinary as to theme, acting, and attendance. The rental figures on this, buy it right or have regrets. Good weather. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

KNOCKOUT. Star, Milton Sills. Personally I thought this was good, with plenty of action but it seemed to me that the stills did not appeal to the women folk and drove some away, however, pleased all that saw it. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, no. Better for Friday and Saturday. Farming class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

LEARNING TO LOVE. (6,089 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Showed this Armistice Day. Good entertainment, but not Connie's best. However, everybody enjoyed it. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

LOST WORLD. Star cast. The greatest picture this year; more than pleased everyone who saw it, but cold weather kept it from going over big. Wallace Berry, as usual—steals the picture. Good tone, excellent appeal. Yes, for Sunday and special. L. R. Markum, Dream Theatre, Indianapolis, Indiana.

LOVE'S WILDERNESS. (7,057 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. A dandy picture which pleased all. Many tense moments. Lots of heart interest. Good acting, good story, good comments. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers' and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

MARRIAGE WHEEL. (7,672 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Not as good as "Classified" but done very well for me as Griffith is a favorite with my crowd. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre, Yankton, South Dakota.

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE.—(8 reels). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. This is a mighty fine picture, although a little old. Prints not in very good condition. This is a picture you need not be afraid of if you can get good prints. Can't see why First National will send out such prints as they certainly know they are liable to cause a fire. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

ONE YEAR TO LIVE. (8,064 feet). Star, Aileen Pringle. Very good drama. Played one day. Tone, doubtful. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers' and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PACE THAT THRILLS. (6,911 feet). Star, Ben Lyon. Fair, but this giving the people how they fake the scenes is terrible and shouldn't be done. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Fine picture. Pleased one hundred percent. This girl is sure coming fast. Pictures like this help you build up your business. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, LaBelle, Missouri.

SALLY. (8,635 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Considered by all as Colleen's best. It probably is, people liked it very much, but refused to come out to see it. Receipts built up on second day, but fell below normal first day. Lost money with it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25; specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SANDRA. (7,905 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. A society drama. Tone, rather doubtful. Some beautiful settings. Good acting by leading man. Quite a few said they liked it. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers' and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet). Star cast. I thought this an excellent picture but much of my public disagreed with me. Business was not good and many did not like it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SOUL FIRE. (8,262 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Absolutely nothing to it. For God's sake why don't Dick wake up and snap out of it. He goes around with sad face all the time. Nobody liked it. Not even the janitor. Tone, questionable. Sunday and special, no. No appeal. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

SUNDOWN. (9,000 feet). Star cast. A very fine picture, done on a big scale. Various adverse reports resulted in our holding this to a one day run but it went over very well, indeed, and was sorry we had not run it two days. It will please most lovers of big, western drama. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

WHITE MOTH. Star, Barbara LaMarr. A pretty picture and very entertaining. Rental too high. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers' and merchants' town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WINDS OF CHANCE. Star cast. Fine type of Yukon Gold Rush story. Pleased well here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Farming class town of 5,000. Admission 10-30. H. Tammen, Moon Theatre (480 seats), Yankton, South Dakota.

WOMAN ON THE JURY. (7,231 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Very good story. Pleased the patrons. Rental too high. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Above program schedule. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

Fox

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast.

This one pleased nearly ninety per cent, as it has action, suspense, plot, story and about all the essentials necessary to make entertainment for most any following. Tone and appeal, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

DANCERS. (6,656 feet). Star, George O'Brien. I don't know exactly what was the matter with this picture but somehow or other it didn't give universal satisfaction. To me it seemed too long and draggy. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GOLD HEELS. (6,020 feet). Star, Robert Agnew. A good picture of the racetrack. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

GREAT DIAMOND MYSTERY. (6,056 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. This is a plot drama and has fairly good acting but did not please as well as "That French Lady." Nevertheless, it is a good program picture. Tone and appeal, good. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

HEARTS AND SPURS. (5 reels). Star, Buck Jones. Another one of those good westerns with Charles Buck Jones as star. Good for a Saturday night crowd. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre, Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

HONOR AMONG MEN. Star, Edmund Lowe. This picture has its setting in rather ancient times and on this score did not please my patronage, although the acting was good. Tone, good. Appeal, poor. General class town of 1,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250-700 seats), Union, Maine.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. A good account of the building of our first trans-continental railway. Outside of that we could not see much to it. Not very entertaining but very educational. Lost money on it. Fox got it all. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. Best big special picture Fox ever made. Draw all classes. H. W. Guinan, John Sexton Amusement Co., Cotton Valley, Louisiana.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A splendid program picture. Some of the Mix fans may be disappointed, as after one reel they learn Tony and the West for Boston. However, we never screened Mix picture that brought as many laughs as this one. Rural class town of 700. Admission 10-25. W. C. Whiting, Opera House (250 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

LUCKY HORSESHOE. (5,000 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A picture for Mix patrons and where the genial "Tom" is liked over goes the picture with a bang. With some one else in the title role, oh dear. Billie Dove, a thing of beauty in this and Anne Pennington gets in and does a few "steps." All in all a picture that will please and get box office response. Also a very short picture, less than five reels, you who have a scheduled number of reels to show, look out for this. Program picture of thrills and comedy. Weather fine, attendance, ditto. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, George O'Brien. A very good picture whose box office value is killed by the title, fight in this is very good. Tone, questionable. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THUNDER MOUNTAIN. Star cast. Another John Golden story that didn't do much for us. Rather a ruff tone. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A real western, let me tell you Buck is getting mighty good. Good comments. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers and business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

BLANCHE SWEET
Who is appearing in "The Far Cry," a First National production.

Metro-Goldwyn

BEAUTY PRIZE. (5,759 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A breezy little picture in six reels, showing shots from the Atlantic City beauty pageant. Will be liked if billed as a program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTS OF OLD BROADWAY. Star cast. First costume picture I ever saw go over. One hundred per cent., wonderful, clean and entertaining. C. S. Martin, Martin Theatre, Villisca, Iowa.

LONG LIVE THE KING. (9,264 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. I ran this on Thanksgiving Day to a record matinee attendance, mostly kids. For some reason my night attendance did not equal that of the matinee. Jackie surely has the kids with him. Some of the adults walked out. It is a good feature and deserved a better reception. Tone, good. Farm and mill class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parson's Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

MERRY WIDOW. Star, Mae Murray. Very beautifully done. Acting of John Gilbert wonderful. Audience can't see Mae Murray. Title and paper drew splendid business. Tone and appeal, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498 feet. Star, Ramon Novarro. Advertised title with three players and said that it was filmed at the U. S. Naval Academy and they came one hundred strong. Had a nice crowd, and were they pleased? I'll tell the world. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Almost a special. Excellent appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

NEVER THE TWAIN SHALL MEET. (8 reels). Star, Anita Stewart. A picture that might have been great, but fell down. You can do some business with it on the strength of the book, but careful how much you say in its favor. Weather fine. Pretty good attendance. A program picture, nothing more. Buy it at that rate. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SEVEN CHANCES. (2,113 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. Buster scores in the first scenes, which are in technicolor, and from there on the story isn't just exactly hilariously funny. Some scenes are great, including the great rock slide, but the whole picture isn't a triumph. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star cast. This was a big flop for us. We lost money on it two days. Only a few liked it. Tone, bad. Sunday and special, no. Very little appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples' Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

TOWER OF LIES. (6,849 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Supported by lovely Norma Shearer. A very good attraction. Times are very quiet here so I didn't make a howl. No fault of picture. Rental high. Tone and appeal fair. Sunday, yes. Fair special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WHITE DESERT. (6,464 feet). Star cast. This pleased the audience immensely. Bought it at the right rental so didn't lose money like I do with fifty per cent. of the product nowadays. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Excellent appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

WINE OF YOUTH. Star cast. You'll have to step on this to get any money with it but it is a corking good picture that will stand a strong campaign. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. High appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

ZANDER, THE GREAT. (6,844 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A week offering that failed to please the star's friends. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. Better classes city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Paramount

ANY WOMAN. (5,963 feet). Star, Alice Terry. This is another "salter." No pulling power at all, and very little entertainment in it. They "crabbed" about it here. Tone, okay. Isn't worth showing any day, and we paid extra for it. No appeal. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples' Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale California.

ANY WOMAN. (5,963 feet). Star, Alice Terry. A rather weak society story based on a girl forced to go to work when her father loses his money. Although Alice Terry is sweet and plays her part to perfection she cannot carry the action by herself. Just fair entertainment, too mild to be enjoyable in this flapper age. Tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

ARGENTINE LOVE. (5,970 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Not much to this one. Did not draw for me and no favorable comments. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

A SON OF HIS FATHER. Star, Bessie Love. A good Western drama above the average. Good scenery and print. The story part only fair. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Rural class town of 700. Admission 10-25. W. C. Whiting, Opera House (250 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

A SON OF HIS FATHER. (6,925 feet). Star cast. This is an exceptionally good picture. All Harold Bell Wright's stories in pictures are good, and this is no exception. Book it and boost it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Oneida Theatre (225 seats), Oneida, South Dakota.

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Not much to it. Unless glorious Gloria, as they call her, gets something worthwhile pretty soon she will be amongst the discarded ones. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Star cast. The poorest Zane Grey story to date. Not much to it. Buy it right and run it as a program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, no. General class town of 5,000. Admission 1-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased everyone, as do all Meighan pictures here. Virginia Valli fair and Larry Wheat good in support. Some good comedy touches. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farmers town of 110. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Theatre (120 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

CONTRABAND. Star cast. Give them this one in place of a cut and dried Western and your patrons will thank you. This picture has all the punch of a Western and more too. Tone and appeal, good. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

FORTY WINKS. (6,203 feet). Star cast. A humorous photoplay just chock full of amusing antics and as many as forty laughs. The villain steals the coast defense plans and the hero to save the brother of his sweetheart from court martial starts to find the culprit and after side splitting adventures recovers the papers. Raymond Griffith as Lord Chumley is in a class by himself, a real comedian. Viola Dana is clever as usual and Theodore Roberts with his famous cigar is with us again. Although brand comedy verging on the slapstick the picture nevertheless is a good one and will draw. Draw from tourist class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

GOOSE HANGS HIGH. (6,186 feet). Star cast. Paramount has a special in this one. Boost it. Pleased one hundred per cent. Tone and appeal good. Sunday and special, you bet. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

HE'S A PRINCE. Star, Raymond Griffith. Just about broke even on this. I can hardly say about Griffith. I think he is fine but he rarely ever gets a laugh from my audience, and he has no drawing power whatsoever. Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

KING ON MAIN STREET. Star, Adolph Menjou. Title failed to draw. Picture not half bad but Menjou is a wonderful actor and should be cast in a real story. Bessie Love does a neat and nifty Charleston. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

KING ON MAIN STREET. (6,224 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Very good production. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. but above program schedule. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,650 feet). Star, Jack Holt. As good as all of Zane Grey's stories which means another one of the best produced western stories ever screened. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

LOVERS IN QUARANTINE. (6,570 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This is an entertaining comedy drama. I don't care much for it, but the crowd seemed to like it and that is more important. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Universal class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Did not think much of this one. Advertised the star and not the title but was surprised. Had a large audience who were well pleased and who praised this one. Tone, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Mixed class town of 5,000. Admission 15-25. L. J. Morse, Palace Theatre (400 seats), Winnsboro, South Carolina.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star, Rex, the horse. This is a very attractive picture and people like it. I hand it to the director on this. He has made a real picture out of an animal story. Pathe may worry about their short subjects but I am sure they will check up enough profit off of this feature to carry a lot of shorts. Special, yes. Universal appeal. Town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 feet). Star cast. An unusual picture, well done, displaying a great deal of directing, care and patience. A picture that should be thoroughly exploited, and that done—there is no reason why a fair sized profit should not be registered. Weather good, ditto the attendance, and with a clever lot of "fillers" you "tilt" your prices just a trifle. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A good box office attraction. Also a winner. Terms unreasonable. Pathe wants too much on this one. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Excellent appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FRESHMAN. Star, Harold Lloyd. This picture is absolutely there, best thing Lloyd ever made and will make you plenty of money providing you buy it right, it's about a fifty-fifty proposition, and should be bought with this point in view. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-nine per-cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

FRESHMAN. (6,833 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. This is a rip snorter of a comedy. After footing up the damage to my theatre for four days showing and paying Pathe I looked around for my share but failed to find enough to get a hair cut, but I am learning. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Farmers and business class town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

HOT WATER. (6,000 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A real good Lloyd picture. Lloyd gets me good crowds. Everybody pleased. Don't be afraid to boost this one. Tone, good. Hardly suitable for Sunday. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farming class town of 1,000. Admission 20-35. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre (250 seats), Grantsville, West Virginia.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER MAN'S WIFE. Star cast. A fair program picture that may get by and that is all that can be said for this six thousand feet of celluloid. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

AWFUL TRUTH. (5,917 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A so so picture that leans very much to mediocrity, it is good enough in spots, for a discriminating audience never, if played buy it cheap, no box office draft. I had a great program of short stuff with it and gave it a lot of prominence in advertising, which held up this rather weak feature. Good weather, attendance fair. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

CHALK MARKS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. A pleasing picture of heart interest and drama that brought favorable comments from my patrons. Love and appeal good. Second week town of 1,700. Admission 25-35. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (800-seat house). Coley, Maine.

CHARLEY'S AUNT (7 reels). Star cast. They have no need to report this picture except to say if you have not had it get it. Advertise it well and the people there and the picture will do the rest. Tone and Appeal good. Second week town of 1,700. Admission 10-25. W. U. White (150-seat house). Whiting, Iowa.

CHORUS LADY (7,000 feet). Star cast. A romantic drama of old Kentucky with a real thrilling ending for those who love and know good drama. Good patronage. Tone and appeal good. Second week town of 1,700. Admission 10-25. E. N. Prescott Circuit (850-seat house). Union, Maine.

LIFE WOMEN ALONE. Star cast. Good picture. Many good comments. Not enough attraction given to draw town lobby. Paper cannot be taken from best scenes in pictures, something to make flappers wonder. W. J. Wilke, Liberty Theatre, Graham, Texas.

ON THE THRESHOLD. Star cast. Would be all right for a church. Six reels of religion and a dying man asking our boy will to lead. Tone okay. Sunday and special, no. Very little appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Rolf, Star Theatre (667 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

United Artists

DON Q, SON OF ZORRO. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. The best picture Fairbanks ever made. Tone good. Sunday yes. Special yes. Appeal one hundred per cent. Conservative class city of 10,000. Admission 35-50-75. P. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre, Concord, New Hampshire.

LITTLE ANNIE ROONEY. Star, Mary Pickford. As this came somewhat in mid-season, I passed it up but we have yet to hear, as it was drawing power here, over Sunday and second run. Good picture. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Rolf, Star Theatre (667 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

NUT. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Very ordinary program picture. Better get some good short stuff to go with it. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. A better than the last picture. Seems that we never played same picture close around. Mixed class town of 700. Admission 10-25. Jerry Wentz, White Theatre (300 seats), Adams, Massachusetts.

WAY DOWN EAST (12 reels). Star cast. About three years ago I played "Way Down East" to nearly a record house and that at twenty-five and fifty cents. Just played it again at my regular price. Although there were several church activities on the same night, I had a good attendance and made some money. It pulled in a lot of new faces. Tone good. Sunday and special yes. Mill and farming class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

Universal

BIG TIMBER. Star, William Desmond. As the name implies this is a story of the lumber camp. A good story, good acting, good scenes. The whole show was from Universal International News. Star comedy "Ice Cold" and a two-reel western "The Best Man." It was a good show and the crowd went out happy. The best part, I had enough left to buy a steak for dinner next day. Tone, good. Special, no. Farm and mill class town of 1,000. Admission twenty-five cents. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

BUSTIN' THRU. Star, Jack Hoxie. This is an average western. Universal class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

BUTTERFLY. (5,472 feet). Star cast. This is a mediocre production which pleased only a few. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Small town class and farmers town of 450. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Olson, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

CALGARY STAMPEDE. Star, Hoot Gibson. An excellent program offering by this likeable star. Attendance good, weather fair. Dave Seymour, Pastime Theatre, Beautiful Saranac Lake, New York.

CALL OF COURAGE. (4,061 feet). Star, Art Acord. Here is a star that is commencing to draw something since he went with Universal; this is his second one in the Blue Streak Western and it is a good one; has a wild, fighting dog and horse that sure gets even with the fans. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Independents

BLACK LIGHTNING. (State Right). Star, Thunder (dog) (6 reels). Thunder is one hundred per cent better than in "Silent Pal" in this one. Eddie Phillips good as the half wit. This makes a nice Saturday offering. Print new. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

BLACK LIGHTNING. (Independent Pict.) Star, Clara Bow. Fair dog picture, being new for this territory did not register as strong at the box office as, "Strongheart," or "Peter the Great," fair business for two days. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials 15-50. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

BOOMERANG. (State Right). Star, Anita Stewart. Only fair. Did not have audience appeal. Far fetched story that drew on account of the cast, but failed to please. Fair tone. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

CALL OF THE MATE. (Articlass). Star cast. The theme of this story has been done too many times to comment on it; only a fair program offering. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CRACKERJACK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. I consider this to be a fair Johnny Hines picture, but no better than his others, for which they ask considerable more money. I paid too much for it, therefore, lost money. My advice is not to let them hook you for it. Tone, none. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. All classes, town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials 15-50. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

DANGER SIGNAL. (Columbia). Star, Jane Novak. Very good railroad picture. Better than the "Midnight Express." R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MAKERS OF MEN. (Progress Pict.). Star, Kenneth McDonald. Boys, do you want a good war picture? It is worth running anywhere. J. McGowan as the top sergeant about carries off the honors for the picture. Will go good in any house. Good for three days. Tone, good. Sunday and specials, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

THREE KEYS. (Banner). Star, Edith Roberts. (6 reels). This is a fine program picture and ought to take well with any audience. Prints in fine shape. The Banner series of pictures have all been good so far. Think every one was well pleased. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. General class, town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

Along Exchange Row

With the Men Who Sell the Pictures

Buffalo

Fred M. Zimmerman, manager of the Producers Distributing Corporation office, got some Christmas present. Nothing less than a hunting lodge in the wilds of Canada and Mrs. Zimmerman was the donor. But we doubt if Fred will make use of it until the weather gets away from that 20 below zero mark which is the rule in the land where the lodge is located.

Max Roth was in town from the Fox home office this week, making his headquarters at the local exchange. Bill Rowell of the Fox sales staff has been home ill but is now O. K. once more. R. Gross, formerly of Cuba, is now covering the Southern Tier for Fox.

Charlie Johnston has resigned from the Freedom Film Corporation sales force to join the Universal staff, succeeding Bobby Murphy as city feature salesman. George Schaefer succeeds George Moser as city short subject representative. Mr. Moser has gone with First National in Albany. Manager Charlie Goodwin has engaged Harry Levvy, former Associated Exhibitor's manager, as "U" salesman in Rochester.

Richard C. Fox, manager of the Vital Exchange, has returned from the New York convention all pepped up over the new product. Dick is planning to hold weekly previews in the Vital office to which exhibitors will be invited.

G. Emerson Dickman, salesman de luxe on the main line for Fox, and his special deputy, Carl Fahrenholz, who books by day and sells 'em by night, are bringing in new business every day in large amounts. Both expect a big bonus soon. Expect, we said.

Syd Sampson of Bond Photoplays, has a new convenience on his tractor. He carries trolley wheels on the side of the bus so that he can make short cuts cross country on the tracks when he comes in from the Southern Tier or Rochester. It also save tires.

George Canty, for the past year or so booker at the Pathe office, has been appointed Syracuse sales representative. Louis Shindler, who has been acting as cashier for several years, has been named booker.

Harry E. Lotz, former Associated Exhibitors district manager, is expected to announce his new connection in a few days. Harry was in town the past week visiting friends along Film Row.

Richard C. Fox, district manager for Vital, has appointed Nathan Cohen a member of the Albany sales force. Frank C. Moynihan, manager of the Albany Vital office and his assistant, Frank C. Young, were in town for the holidays. Mr. Fox announces that both the Albany and Buffalo offices have gone over the top in the drive for new business.

The Film Board of Trade has completed all arrangements for the Movie Ball to be given in the large ballroom of the Hotel Statler on the evening of January 4. Thousands of tickets have been sold and it is expected that a record breaking crowd will be on hand for the event, including exhibitors from all parts of western New York.

Fat bonus checks were in the hands of several of the salesmen along Film Row this week, rewarded for excellent sales showings during the past twelve months.

Hub Taylor, Pathe salesman, is negotiating with Amundsen, the explorer, for some Eskimo outfits to wear while calling on exhibitors in the Southern Tier where the thermometer is registering shameless figures these days. Twenty below is the average, says Hub.

Ohio

The genial Bill Danziger, who has been doing exploitation work for Famous Players in Cincinnati district, has been transferred to Chicago.

Warner exchange in Cleveland is now under office management of Fred Scheuerman. Daniel Phillips, who was booker in the same office, has resigned.

St. Louis

Wanted:—One vest. Apply Bill Shalet, manager, United Artists Exchange, Cincinnati, O. In short, on December 3 Bill became the very, very proud papa of an 8-pound boy. And if you have ever been in a similar fix you know what it does to vest buttons. The baby and mother are doing nicely. Shalet formerly managed the local United Artists branch. St. Louis sends congratulations to the happy trio.

Reports are that that Eddie Alperson's boy is getting to be some bicycle rider. Alperson manages the Warner Brothers' branch here. His hopeful is but 7 months. However, you all know what a wonder Eddie is. Nuf sed.

The son of C. E. Penrod, division manager for F. B. O., had a very narrow escape from very serious injuries when struck by an automobile in Indianapolis, Ind., last week. Fortunately the plucky lad escaped with minor cuts and bruises. He is 6 years old.

C. D Hill, manager of this district for F. B. O., leaves early in January to attend a sales conference on the Pacific Coast. Hill's district is leading the national sales contest and he is hopeful of maintaining the winning pace until the finishing wire is reached. It will take some thoroughbred to grab first honors from him and his branch managers.

"Buns" Derby, formerly on the sales staff of the local F. B. O. office, is now manager of William Goldman's Kingsland Theatre on Gravios avenue. John Walsh, city salesman, has added Derby's territory to his own.

C. F. Charack has succeeded Maurice Davis as "U" exploiteer in this territory. Davis has taken charge of the publicity department of Loew's State Theatre, St. Louis. Charack comes from Portland, Ore., and has been with Universal for four years. His most recent assignment was with the Columbia Theatre, a Universal house in Portland.

Barney Rosenthal, president of Columbia Pictures, forecasts that 1926 will be the most successful year for the local independents. He says there is every indication that it will be the biggest year for Columbia Pictures notwithstanding his office shattered its previous marks in 1925. He states that the class of pictures to be released and the advanced bookings already obtained is responsible for his confidence.

San Francisco

Oscar Kantner, for some time director of exploitation for Famous Players-Lasky at the San Francisco, Cal., exchange, has left for New York, where he will head the exploitation department. A farewell party, with which the annual Christmas party was combined, was tendered him just before his departure He has been succeeded at the San Francisco office by G. F. Sullivan, formerly of the sales staff.

The offices of the Producers Distributing Corp. at Golden Gate avenue and Leavenworth street, was the bright spot on San Francisco's Film Row during the Christmas holidays, an illuminated tree, scintillating with P. D. C. stars making it a center of attraction.

Harry Schmidt, well known in local film circles, and connected with the industry since the old days of the General Film Company, has been made head booker at the San Francisco office of the Pathe Exchange.

Fred Voight, for years manager of the San Francisco Metro exchange, has been made manager of Associated Exhibitors here, succeeding R. S. Stackhouse, who has been transferred to Seattle.

The Mutual Independent Exchange, opened recently at 281 Turk street, with C. C. Thompson in charge, is off to a good start and an addition to the sales staff has been made in the person of William Bernard.

L. J. Schlaifer, division manager for Universal, is the proud possessor of a fine watch, the gift of branch managers in the Western district.

Carl Kreuger, formerly of Seattle, has been added to the staff of the poster department of the San Francisco Universal exchange.

Louis Hutt, cameraman attached to the Pathe Exchange, San Francisco, has returned from an extended stay at Salt Lake City, where he has been doing some special assignment work.

Pittsburgh

Samuel N. Wheeler is the new manager of the Federated Film Exchange Company, Pittsburgh, operated by the Standard Film Service Company of Cleveland. Sam succeeds A. M. Goodman, who returns to his old home town, Detroit, where he will manage the Standard branch in that city. The new manager has been city salesman for Federated for the past two and a half years, and will be succeeded by David Kimmelman, former West Virginia representative.

Harry Scott, general sales manager for Pathe, was a recent visitor to the local branch.

John Davis, who has been both exchangeman and exhibitor, and one of the local industry's most popular members, has turned to a new field, closely allied to the industry. John has purchased a half interest in Reuben Soltz' Theatre Lobby Display Company, Inc.

Clarion, Pa., is the last place you would look for a moving picture men's convention, and yet the other night at one time there was Lynch of Metro; McHugh, of P. D. C.; Gould of Pathe; Frankel, of Warner's and "Bill" Robson of Paramount, all there the same night; to say nothing of McCawley, who formerly had a theatre at Apollo, and now has the Frederick Music Store.

Moe Koppelman, assistant manager of the Standard-Federated exchange, is spending a two-week vacation over the holidays in New York City.

"Bob" Lynch, for years a M. G. M. salesman here, has resigned, and says he will take a short rest before accepting either one of five positions that have already been offered him.

H. G. Bodkin has just been added to the sales force of the M. G. M. office. Mr. Bodkin comes here from the Philadelphia office of the same company.

Don Velde, accessories sales manager at the Paramount exchange, is spending the holidays at his old home in Chicago.

This Department Was Established September 23, 1911 by its Present Editor

Editorial Is a Unique Advertisement For Ten Commandments in Eldorado, Ill.

ONE of the outstanding exploitation stunts of 1925 is contributed by Steve M. Farrar, of the Orpheum theatre, Eldorado, Ill. Just how much Steve himself had to do with the preparation of the stunt we cannot say, but Steve was doing big things before most theatres had discovered the value of exploitation, and he probably was what the lawyers would call an accessory before the fact.

The stunt is in the form of the only editorial in the Eldorado Daily News for November 25, and is suggestive of the writings in M. Quad's mythical Arizona Kicker of twenty years ago. It is headed with six lines of twelve point bold face and the rest runs in ten point double leaded. Dr. Latham is the local political boss and form Mayor. The editorial runs:

Here's An Invitation and An Opportunity For Doc Latham To Get Right: He Should Go See the Ten Commandments, The Motion Picture, At the Expense of the Daily News.

The whole object and purpose of the establishment of the Daily News was to make Eldorado a better place in which to live. Once in a while we are fortunate in securing an ally who goes a long way to help us and we take courage in the knowledge that others view of the rottenness and crookedness in Eldorado as we see it.

And right here at hand—today and tonight—there is an opportunity for some people to see themselves as others see them and as they really are. This opportunity may never come again and we advise everyone to go to see the Ten Commandments, a motion picture.

The scenes showing the slavery indulged in by Egyptians at the expense of the Israelites may be compared to the poor coal miners in Eldorado who have had to pay their taxes several times over in order to keep their little home.

As they toil along drawing the heavy load under the whip of the master it makes us think of those poor devils who are still sweating under the lash because an administration of the city government was so mismanaged that it will be years and years if not generations before the city will be out of debt.

A few examples:

The City Hall Bonds.

The expense of operating the water department.

The money paid out for concrete blocks.

The money paid out for blue vitriol.

The illegal water mains.

The dozens and dozens of extra policemen at so much per.

Etc., etc.

And because we believe that everybody should see the benefit of living right and clean and because we are interested in the future welfare of Eldorado we respectfully submit the following:

His Private Coupon

And at the tail of the editorial is printed a coupon which is reproduced here and which we think is the final touch to one of the most amazing stunts on record.

How London Sold The Iron Horse

For some reason The Iron Horse was put over on its initial English run at the Capitol theatre, London, with stress on the character of "Judge" Haller in the play, the chief stunt being the use of eighteen men dressed in that character.

These men, in pairs and in a body, fairly infested London. They walked down the street in a group, they rode in busses and trams and in the underground, and always they were engrossed in a herald on the outside of which was big type lettering for the play and house. They paid no attention to the interest they aroused, which made the stunt all the stronger.

Judge a Big Man

In Shaftsbury Avenue a special location was obtained for a cutout figure of the Judge in heroic size, the board being 17 by 30 feet. It carried frequently changed copy such as "I say, you must see The Iron Horse."

As the avenue is much used in the evening, the sign was floodlighted at night.

The figure also was used to illustrate scatter ads in the London and general newspapers, and two of the largest costume balls; one at historic Covent Garden, were invaded by impersonators of the Judge and a girl in crinoline. The man carried publicity on the production.

A drive was made on the sixpenny version of the book, and an immense banner was hung from the Fox offices.

Football games were bannered, and every effort made through the more conventional channels, for the London engagement was to help put over the picture for its later runs in the provinces.

A Fox Release

TWO OF THE STUNTS WHICH BROUGHT LONDONERS FLOCKING TO SEE THE IRON HORSE

In addition to the usual sandwich men, eighteen men were dressed as "Judge" Haller in the play and sent about town, reading a special herald on The Iron Horse. They rode on trains and trams and busses. and paraded the streets, sometimes in pairs and trios, and again in mass formation. The other picture shows the banner used at the Fox exchange.

Matinees for Bobbed and Bobless Help Warner's

Played Hair Bobs for Bobbed Hair

Naturally bobbed heads go well with Warner's Bobbed Hair, but the trick is to be different. Anyone can give a matinee to bobbed hair girls, but Ned Edris, of the Blue Mouse Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., required that his guests be not only bobbed but either grey or white haired.

He was a bit surprised at the number who accepted the invitation, for he had not realized that elderly women were given to bobs, but the more they came the better the stunt went over and the News-Tribune, which had sponsored the stunt, got plenty of material for a good story.

Each woman was asked to leave her name, address and birth date in an envelope when she applied for seats. The reason for this was not stated in advance, but following the matinee the newspaper announced that Edris had mailed a three month pass for two loge seats to the oldest and the youngest of his guests. The names of the winners were announced, but not the ages.

Another stunt was the visit of a family of five generations, all unbobbed. They were introduced to the audience and the paper made much of this feature.

Ever Try This?

Here's a stunt that should be made permanent. Walter G. League, of the Strand Theatre, Memphis, received such a fine cooperation from the book dealers on The Son of His Father that he decided to reciprocate.

He had a large compo board made for the lobby. One of the open pages carried extracts from the story. The other page listed the dealers from whom the book might be purchased. It's worth trying.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Christmas week program was made up of 4 film subjects and 3 musical presentations. This lineup had plenty of Christmas stuff in it, making the show one that was not only timely but unusually entertaining. The length of the whole performance was 1 hour and 54 minutes, of which time the films required 1 hour and 31 minutes. This left 23 minutes for the musical numbers. Thomas Meighan in "Irish Luck" as the feature picture, ran 1 hour and 14 minutes.

Beginning each show was an especially made holiday greeting to patrons, filmed by James A. Fitzpatrick who made the Music Master series. The film, 3 minutes long, started off with the hope that Santa Claus would make Christmas merry for the patrons and that the theatre resolved to do its utmost in providing the best entertainment for the New Year. There was a Christmas tree on each side of the stage, trimmed and lighted during the interlude to the picture.

The Mark Strand Carolers sang a group of Christmas carols including "Oh Come All Ye Faithful" by mixed quartet; "O Holy Night" by soprano; "No Candle Was There" by baritone, and "Holy Night, Silent Night" by mixed quartet. The setting for this incident represented the exterior of a church with a large colored window as the centerpiece. The singers stood up stage in front of grill gate which opened into the churchyard. A dancer posed as the madonna stood on a pedestal to one side lighted from overhead by a steel blue baby spot. Lights for the scene included deep blue open box lamps, light blue overhead spots and violet floods. The time of this incident was 7 minutes.

Five minutes was given over to the Kelly Color "Ectotypes," a novelty reel which proved well worth the time.

"The Night Before Christmas," taking up 4 minutes, was a dance pantomime with Santa Claus and 12 Gus Edward Kids. The scene was a child's nursery with animal pictures painted on the drop and a fireplace effect given by a transparency. A large four poster bed was built and set center stage. The dancers at opening came on dressed in pajamas ready for bed and carried electric candles. After they had all jumped into bed, Santa Claus made his appeaance. The incident was exclusively dancing and pantomime.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review came the atmospheric prologue to "Irish Luck." The setting for this was a painted leg drop and back drop of a Scotch moor. The lighting consisted chiefly of straw color open box lamps lighting the drops all around. Overhead and side spots were of straw with front lights including purple borders and 2 magneta floods from the projection room. In the prologue there were 4 principals and 4 dancers. The sequence of the number ran as follows: "The Rocky Road to Dublin," by soprano; "Mickey's Advice," baritone; an Irish dance by dancers; "Ireland Is Heaven To Me" by tenor; "Danny Boy," contralto; "'Tis a Great Day Tonight For the Irish," Ensemble.

Eighteen Barrels

At a potato matinee given by the Fulton theatre, Jersey City, Fred S. Mertens and Arnold S. Rittenberg, his publicity man, collected eighteen barrels of potatoes, which were given to the Salvation Army, the Hebrew Orphan Asylum and the Society of St. Vincent de Paul of the Roman Catholic Church of that name. All of the Jersey City papers gave elaborate space and the New Jersey editions of several New York City papers also gave mention.

The Potato Matinee, which was first given publicity in this department about twelve years ago, is one of the best Thanksgiving and Christmas stunts in the catalogue. It pulled 12,000 youngsters to the Fulton and three shows were necessary to take care of the crowd. No immediate money in the stunt, but invaluable year round good will.

THE LUCKY HORSESHOE IS A HANDY TITLE TO EXPLOIT, SEE WHAT PORTLAND DID

The Majestic Theatre, Portland, Oregon, not only played up the horseshoes in the lobby, but found it easy to get windows with the good luck emblem, the cut showing a tie in a display of special candies bearing the title of the Tom Mix play. It does not always pay to distort a title for exploitation, but when the title fits, it's like that much extra money.

Walking Locomotive is an Iron Horse Novelty

A Universal Release

A GOOD IDEA IN BILLBOARDS FROM LOS ANGELES

This shows the boards dressed for The Phantom of the Opera at Grauman's Rialto Theatre. They are far more sightly than the straight boarding and if you command permanent locations they are well worth the trouble of dressing up.

Walking Locomotive Is a New Departure

So many Fords have been converted into locomotives for The Iron Horse that we have put locomotive pictures on the "ain't" list and shall use no more until the press department sends over a photograph of a locomotive, perambulator that can walk on its hands and speak French.

A. N. Gonsoir, of the Virginia theatre, Champaign, Ill., came pretty close to the specifications when he put out a locomotive that could speak French. He used a two-man-power miniature that was carried about the streets on the shoulders of the bearers. One boy housed his head in the funnel and the other occupied the steam dome. The four-legged locomotive was a compelling stunt.

Showed a Collection

The University of Illinois is located at Champaign and the School of Engineering has what is said to be one of the finest collections of pictures of locomotives extant. The entire collection was borrowed for a lobby display and was shown for two full weeks.

All ushers announced the coming of The Iron Horse the week before the event as they seated each patron and a special screening was given for the faculty of the university.

Two afternoons there were no sessions at the public schools, the pupils being marched to the theatre by classes, and the Boy Scouts were worked overtime, while a special discount of ten cents was made through tickets distributed to all railroad men and 30,000 rebate tickets, each good for five cents, were wrapped in the output of a local bakery, but only one coupon would be accepted on each ticket.

Outside of this there was the usual posting and newspaper work, and the business went up like a thermometer on a hot day.

Newspaper Helped The Last Edition

Appreciating the newspaper angle in The Last Edition, Adna Avrey, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, permitted the News to give a special morning showing for the children.

The newspaper, of course, put the picture over to the general public in putting it over to the children, and the endorsement of the local school board was more than a little helpful. But the big angle was the constant talk of the children in their homes and elsewhere.

But Mr. Avery killed two birds with one stone when he got the newspaper to print the back of its passes with an advertisement of Hell's Highroad, the following attraction. This was equivalent to the distribution of 6,000 throwaway cards, and cost nothing. Each child attending the matinee was also given a herald on the Highroad

Helping Chaplin

Guy Kenimer broke all regular price records with The Gold Rush at the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

One of the best stunts was a shadow box in the lobby showing the interior of the cabin with a winter landscape seen through the window. There was a fire in the stove, produced with a light bulb and red tinsel that gave a suggestion of coziness to the set. This shadow box has become virtually a fixture in the Arcade lobby so useful has it proven.

Kenimer also used a truck perambulator and a Chaplin impersonator.

Waltz Contests Are Help to The Widow

This is the day of the Charleston Contest, but for that very reason a waltz contest is a novelty, and it has worked in a number of towns for The Merry Widow.

The Liberty theatre, Terre Haute, Ind., made a clean-up with a good campaign in which the idea was laid off to the leading dance palace, The Trianon. The waltz from the operetta was used as the music throughout the contest and two music stores and three phonograph shops hooked to the music.

Where the stunt is well handled, with eliminations and finals, the idea can be used for a week with constantly increasing interest.

A Forty-five Foot Chaplin Had Animated Legs

Put a Real Kick In This Chaplin

Most managers would feel that they had done their full duty by a picture when they built a 45 foot marquise figure. That didn't content Bruce Fowler and publicity director Charles Raymond, of the Royal theatre, Kansas City.

A TEASER PERAMBULATOR USED IN MILWAUKEE FOR WHERE WAS I?

Nothing on this oddly designed car suggested the Alhambra Theatre, and that was where interest was made. People wanted to know what it was all about, and since they naturally suspected the pictures, they kept watching for the advertisement.

Roofed the Phantom

Street men impersonating the Phantom of the Opera are common, but the Ritz Theatre, Niagara Falls, made it a different stunt. The Phantom is mysterious, so instead of strutting the streets he made unexpected appearances on roofs and balconies, in windows and wherever else you would not expect to see him. A plant in the street directed attention to his appearances to make sure he would not be overlooked. He just stopped and gazed and everyone in sight followed his example.

Freshman Records Helped by a Lloyd

George A. Rea broke the attendance and box receipts of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga., with The Freshman, partly through tying to a local football game but more through the use of a perambulator made up as Lloyd and dressed in football togs.

The picture opened the day following the Georgia-Auburn game, and the man rode a decorated car in the college parade before the game and also attended the game, clowning the crowd.

A large banner was placed on the local playground and two more were erected in private yards by permission of the owners. The lobby was decorated with pennants of the opposing teams and with the Lloyd pennants and all lobby and marquise lights were changed to the colors of the two colleges.

He fairly plastered the windows of a music store featuring the plugger song.

Playing up the sideshow background, George W. Bailey, of the Royal Theatre, Wilmington, N. C., put out a set of paintings including those of the trio in the Metro-Goldwyn drama. It had the natives anchored to the sidewalk before they went inside.

Made Appeal

Never The Twain Shall Meet has been a cleanup all through the South, but its success is not geographical. Now that the cold weather has set in, the tropical lobby is working wonders in the northern tier. Rockland, Maine, came almost in a body when the Park theatre draped its lobby in green stuff to suggest tropical foliage.

Army Helped

A notable stunt was worked on The Fool at the Alamo Theatre, Louisville. Church cooperation has not been unusual on this picture, but in Louisville the Salvation Army got behind the picture and put out 10,000 heralds at their various meetings in addition to talking the picture up.

George E. Carpenter Had Novel Stunts for Road

A Producers Distributing Release

TRAVELERS DOWN THE ROAD FROM YESTERDAY AT SALT LAKE

George E. Carpenter, of the Paramount Empress, was host to all residents over seventy, including one of the original Mormon pioneers. The frame shows the telegrams from the players. Only a few of the 1,190 guests are shown in the picture.

Road to Yesterday Was Well Traveled

George Editor Carpenter, of the Paramount-Empress Theatre, Salt Lake City, got the world premiere of The Road to Yesterday, beating Los Angeles by six days and New York by nearly a month.

Figuring that the road to yesterday was the trail into pioneer days, he offered a special matinee to all residents who were over seventy years of age. An audience of about 1,100 responded. Red ribbon favors were worn by those under eighty, blue by those under ninety, and white by those over ninety.

Included in the company were one of the original Mormon pioneers of 1847, about 25 survivors of the old Mormon handcart companies and 162 who had come into the state by ox-team in advance of the railroad.

The Governor sent a delegate to convey his respects and the Mayor was there in person. A short program preceded the picture opening, with a prayer by the old pioneer and including the singing of a number of the songs used by the old timers to cheer their toilsome journeys seventy-five years ago. It made for a wonderful publicity story that hooked directly to the title.

A number of the original costumes were shipped to Carpenter who used them for a window display, reserving two to be worn by students at the Utah-Denver football game. In the window disply the costumes of the romance interlude were contrasted with the present day models.

Sells Serials by a School Appeal

Andrew Sharick, Universal exploiteer around Cleveland, sells his company's serials through appeal to the school children through their schools.

In Delphos, Ohio, for example, he got excellent results through letters sent the teachers emphasizing the educational value of the U serials, and bearing down on the Adventure Club he was launching in connection with The Fighting Ranger.

There was enough argument to convince the teachers and when the youngsters took home "teacher says——" the mothers capitulated.

A new stunt was a special matinee staged in advance of the first chapter, at which Sharick explained to the children the idea of the Adventure Club. The house was crowded, and as they filed out each child turned in a coupon giving his name, age and address in return for the Ranger book.

This gave an excellent mailing list for future serials, these coupons being supplemented by a newspaper advertisement carrying a similar coupon for the benefit of those unable to attend the performance.

The result was that the Ranger started off under full sail and the succeeding chapters have held the business up.

Progressive

Using a Raffles for The Merry Widow at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland, additional interest was excited by raising the reward ten dollars each day. The Press sponsored the idea and carried a column a day recounting the Widow's experiences.

Girls with lettered hat boxes paraded the streets; not a new idea, but still effective.

Real Goods

One of the most valuable pieces of publicity on Charley's Aunt was recently run in the cartoon strip, Polly and Her Pals, in which "Paw" sees Chaplin and laughs so heartily that he loses his false teeth.

The strip ran in all of the Hearst papers and in addition syndicated to a large string of other dailies, gaining an enormous circulation. It not only helped Charley's Aunt, but in a lesser degree it worked for The Man on the Box.

Proper Size Screen a Help in Newspaper Work

a line. Because it is the only white in that section of the space, it gets over with double strength. But the best part of the display is the cut of the star, which seems to have been locally made. It is the right screen to give the best results, apparently about a 70, and on news print paper it prints up much better than usual, giving the same effect as a finer screen on better paper. Your first reaction to the space is one of appreciation. It is a pretty display, and you start to read feeling that the picture must be good. You are more than half sold before you know the title. In so large a space the light signature does not hurt, but in a three column or even a four with a different design, this might have been too light. As it is, the black backing of the portrait and the heavier panel effect throw the title into relief. That panel, by the way, is much better than most of the panel effects Mr. Bailey's artists achieve. It gives value to two important sections through throwing them into relief, and at the same time it softens the all-black ground of the portrait without detracting from its strength. On the Arcade advertisement the star lettering is hurt through an effort to carry it across the portrait. The "thelm" is parti-colored, and while you sense, rather than read the name, it does not give any suggestion of strength. It would have been better to have used a smaller portrait to permit it to rise clear of the name. It may not have hurt the ticket sales, but most assuredly it does not help any. The lower design appears to have been clipped from a press book and pasted on the design, which saves art work and often gives a better effect. The general layout is good, but the lettering cuts down the average very materially, because it has been inexpertly done At that it is above the local average.

Gets Fine Display in His Tiny Space

We know of no one who does better work in small spaces than Cliff Lewis, of the Strand theatre, Syracuse, N. Y., but in this 60 by 2 we think that Cliff has licked himself. Sixty lines is about four and one quarter inches, and you can't expect to do very much in that space, but Cliff makes a miniature page ad out of it with the aid of a single column cut from the press book. This cut is very similar to those available on practically every picture by practically every company. Some of them are better than others, and we think this is very good, but you can get much the same effect with almost any single, and we do not know of any better disposition you can make of the space. Cliff sells this story and adds four program items in a total of less than nine inches. If you can do any better than this, please shoot your examples in. Of course if Gloria happened to be looking toward the right you would switch the cut to the left, for you want to have her look at the rest of the announcement and not direct attention outside of the space, but that's a detail. The main point is that you can make a big time flash with these singles, now that Cliff has led the way.

Widens a Cut With Another

Widening one cut through the addition of another is not to be recommended, but the Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, gets away with it by adding a single column character sketch to a two column stock cut to get a three ten and a halfs on Secrets of the Night. We do not think very highly of the selling possibilities of the cuts, but they serve as an attractor and get attention for the generous bank of well-framed selling talk, which so nicely set that the average reader will take it straight through and be sold on the idea. The talk seems to be home-made and winds up with an adaptation of a cigarette advertisement in the "What a whale of a difference just a few thrills make." The idea of the story is sold in a chatty, intimate vein. It gives you the idea that there is a treat in store for you, but the entire sales campaign is concentrated has been mortised to get in the local press comment under the caption: "What they say behind his back." This was the fourth week of the run and the cleverness of the idea gave a new punch to the announcement. There was some sort of exposition going on and the panel to the right of "Charlie" tells the out of town visitors to hurry and see it, as it may be some time before it comes to the home town. As the picture is on general release they will find it in their home town presently. It would have been a better appeal to have suggested that here was the visitor's chance to see the picture before the rest of the folks in his town got a look. "Be the first in your town to see the comedy hit of the year" would be a better appeal than the "now or never" suggestion, and would have carried no back kick.

Probably the house was doing the best it could with what it could obtain from the exchange, but we think that dropping the upper single in favor of a good sales line and omitting the other one column to help the display of the sales talk would have made for a better display.

Got a Section

Most managers stop these days with a two-page hook-up ad as the limit of their ambitions, but C. J. Alden, of the Martin Theatre, Globe, Arizona, takes three pages of a four page section to put over his Paramount Week. By selling the back page to the Globe Luncheon Club, he was able to make it a full section and get "ears" on the title carrying "Paramount Section." A few years ago we got up to eight page special sections, but Mr. Alden is the first to go over two pages in a long time, outside of new theatre openings.

Puts Over Pickford With Child Designs

Giving emphasis to the fact that Mary Pickford has returned to the type of character in which she won her real success, the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco got all the business to be had. In all his display work text, but we are using it to show how the arrow indicates that the crude sketch is supposed to indicate Miss Pickford in the title role. The other design is a newspaper proof, with the type added, and tells that "Her wonderful curls of gold are flung free again in the tomboy role of leader of a gang of tough Bowery kids." The illustration for this suggests a "drop out" half tone, but it really is a line drawing; perhaps traced from a bleached photograph and then shaded in with benday. It goes far ahead of any half tone that could be produced for newspaper work. If this is a plan book cut, be sure you get it, for it will print well on any paper. Even a country printer cannot wholly spoil it. There were several other advances in the set sent in, for this play was advertised for a week in advance, on the proposition that it would pay to get them coming from the opening day. Selling the role is the best appeal for Little Annie Rooney. Tell them it is the old, familiar "Little Mary" and the crowd will pack in.

This Chaplin Cut Is Best Idea Yet

Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C., takes only a 90 by 3 to put over the Gold Rush, but we think that it does it with a better appeal than in the larger ads. If you can't get sold on this cut, the chances are that you are insensible to appeal. There isn't much else to it than the idea, but it's a big idea. You get the impression of Chaplin in the snow wastes of Alaska, and you can imagine the rest. Moreover, there is real strength to the cut. The star's name stands out boldly against the dark sky and in spite of the nearby lettering the figure is strongly outlined. That is going to be the first advertisement you will read when you turn to the amusement page, and if you do not deliberately seek the page, it will arrest your eye as you turn the pages over and you'll stop and see what it is all about. It is one of the best selling cuts we have shown in a long time, and if you still have The Gold Rush coming you can easily make your own ad copy by pasting the figure from the press sheet and doing the little drawing required in black crayon.

"Lady of the Harem" Picked As Title of New Walsh Film

Jesse L. Lasky announced that "The Lady of the Harem" has been selected as the title for the Paramount picture which, under the working title of "The Golden Journey," Raoul Walsh has just made from James Elroy Flecker's play "Hassan."

"Featuring Ernest Torrence, Greta Nissen, William Collier, Jr., and Louise Fazenda," said Mr. Laskey, " 'The Lady of the Harem' will be one of the most colorful and sensational pictures ever produced by this company. Mr. Walsh, who directed "The Wanderer" and 'The Thief of Bagdad' has filled this new spectacle with all the colorful atmosphere of the East and I am confident that this production will receive an even greater reception than was accorded 'The Wanderer.' "

"The Wedding March" Is Von Stroheim's First

Eric Von Stroheim's first picture for Paramount will be an original story entitled, "The Wedding March," it was announced yesterday by Jesse L. Lasky.

Von Stroheim, who recently signed a contract to purchase pictures for Paramount in association with P. A. Powers, wrote the story himself and will play a prominent role in it. It is expected that Mr. Von Stroheim will begin work on the picture early in February.

Spence Writing Titles for "Too Much Money"

Ralph Spence, whose titles in Corinne Griffith's recent screen success, "Classified," will long be remembered for their cleverness, is now writing the titles for First National's "Too Much Money," which John Francis Dillon recently made in New York under the supervision of Earl Hudson. Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson are the featured players in this picture which is declared by those who have seen it to be one of the "smartest" comedy dramas turned out by the screen world this year. "Too Much Money" is due for an early release. It is the screen version of Israel Zangwill's stage play of the same title.

ENA GREGORY is a Universal player mighty good to look at.

THERE'S NO TUCKS IN A TUXEDO, but there's fun a-plenty in "Skinner's Dress Suit," which Universal has made, with Reginald Denny and Laura LaPlante as funsters.

"Just Suppose" Is Big Hit With Audience at Preview in Ridgewood

"JUST SUPPOSE," the new Richard Barthelmess picture to be released by First National was given a preview last week at the Playhouse Theatre, Ridgewood, N. J.

A party of Inspiration First National executives attended the showing as did Mrs. Barthelmess, Kenneth Webb and a number of others who are interested in the Barthelmess productions.

As a result of the showing before a representative audience, it appears that Mr. Barthelmess has another big success with which to follow "Shore Leave" and "The Beautiful City." The audience responded to the incidental humor in the situations and to the delightful romance as interpreted by the star in the role of a Crown Prince of a mythical European kingdom and Lois Moran, as an American girl whom he meets and loves.

The role of the Crown Prince is in sharp contrast to any portrayal by Mr. Barthelmess in the past and he handles it in a most sympathetic fashion. Miss Moran gives a beautiful interpretation of the girl who sacrifices her love rather than have the Prince untrue to his duty. The picture contains many magnificent scenes and offers much variety. Included in the cast directed by Kenneth Webb, are Geoffrey Kerr and Bijou Fernandez.

Completes "Wild Oats Lane"

Neilan Finishes New Type of Vehicle Completed—Prominent Players in Cast

Marshall Neilan has competeld his production, "Wild Oats Lane," and is now working on the final titling and editing, getting it ready for an early release by Producers Distributing Corporation.

"Wild Oats Lane," was adapted by Benjamin Glazer from Gerald Beaumont's story, "The Gambling Chaplain." The cast is headed by Viola Dana and Robert Agnew.

This production is a new type of vehicle for Neilan. Here is a story of tragedy which is interspersed liberally with the typical comedy touches for which this director is internationally famous.

Practically all of the exteriors were made in and around New York, and Neilan with his troupe of players journeyed east especially to make them. The interiors and the completion of the production were made at the Neilan Studios in Glendale, Calif.

Rosen Begins His First for M-G-M

Phil Rosen, latest directorial acquisition of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and who was signed to a contract last week by Hunt Stromberg, studio executive, began his first production at Culver City last Monday.

The story is an original with a French locale but has not as yet been titled. Renee Adoree, who scored such a decisive hit in "The Big Parade", and Conrad Nagel have been cast for the two leading roles.

Rosen, who directed "The Life of Abraham Lincoln", was formerly head cameraman for Mary Pickford.

YOU CAN COUNT ON Lionel Barrymore and Pauline Garon for real roles—and they deliver the goods in First National's "The Splendid Road."

Strong Pictures for Release in January, First National Month

TO start the new year right and to give exhibitors exceptionally strong releases for First National Month, Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National, announces a completed schedule for the five weeks of January that affords a variety of pictures of extraordinary box office appeal.

A recent change of national release dates places the pictures in the following order: "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," January 3rd; "Memory Lane," January 10th; "Just Suppose," January 17th; "Too Much Money," January 24th; "The Far Cry," January 31st.

"Bluebeard's Seven Wives" is a Robert T. Kane production based upon a comedy situation as unique as it is diverting. The inner workings of a motion picture studio along with the ingenuity of a press agent intent upon getting publicity for his star provides the basis for farcical developments. The cast numbers at least a half dozen screen favorites of the first calibre, including Lois Wilson, Blanche Sweet, Ben Lyon, Dorothy Sebastian, Diana Kane and Sam Hardy. John M. Stahl is the producer of "Memory Lane," a picture of romantic and dramatic appeal, possessing a deep vein of sentiment. In the well-balanced cast selected by Mr. Stahl are Eleanor Boardman, Conrad Nagel and William Haines.

In "Just Suppose," Richard Barthelmess portrays a young European who visits this country with unexpected consequences of a social and emotional nature. Mr. Barthelmess has plenty of opportunity in this picture to display his gift for adroit comedy. He is supported by Lois Moran, Geoffrey Kerr and Bijou Fernandez.

"Too Much Money" is an Earl Hudson production, recently completed at the Eastern studios with Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson in the featured roles. As the title indicates, the story has to do with the expenditure of a fortune. In this case the wife is unduly extravagant and the husband takes measures to bring her to reason. It is a distinctly human story having a serious background, although there are many touches of appealing comedy.

"The Far Cry" was made on the West Coast under the supervision of June Mathis with Balboni as the director. It is an adaptation of the play by Arthur Richmond with Blanche Sweet and Jack Mulhall in the featured roles.

Goldwyn Completes Another "Potash and Perlmutter"

Samuel Goldwyn announces the completion of the film version of "Partners Again — with Potash & Perlmutter," directed by Henry King, with George Sidney and Alexander Carr in the title roles.

Probably none of the Montague Glass stories formerly screened by Samuel Goldwyn approaches in real comedy the one soon to be completed. In the most reecnt adventure, the commercial wizards are automobile dealers, and only the agile wit of Glass could have managed the delightful complications depicted. The partners also engage in aeronautics in "Partners Again," with dire results.

Frances Marion prepared the scenario, and "Partners Again" will be distributed by United Artists Corporation, to be released February 15.

Miss Blythe in England

British Producer is Seeking $500,000 Capital to Star Our Star

"Dear Old Blighty" is a good enough place (indeed, a splendid place) to remain for a definite stay, but when the British producers implored Betty Blythe to remain over indefinitely, and continue starring in British pictures, the charming star just naturally balked. Hollywood, Cal., with its blessed sunshine, called to the statuesque star, and she is expected back in the United States (actually headed for the West Coast) shortly. That is—

Well, if the whole truth must be known, there is just one chance that "Old Blighty" will lay a restraining hand on the Junoesque lady. Sam Burney, until recently affiliated with the Astra National Film Corporation of England, is, we hear, so very eager to keep the glorious Betty abroad, he has set about organizing a new company with a capital of $500,000 to make exclusive "Betty Blythe Pictures."

Sam has deposited $100,000 of his own money in bank, and has three weeks in which to raise the remaining $400,000 among his friends in London filmdom. If he succeeds, Betty may remain in England for an indefinite period.

Kathleen Myers Opposite Flynn

Kathleen Myers has been engaged to appear opposite "Lefty" Flynn in his next F. B. O. production "The Traffic Cop." It is Miss Meyer's third role with the former Yale star, now producing under the guidance of Harry Garson for the F. B. O. program.

"The Traffic Cop" is a Gerald Beaumont story and presents the husky star in another cop's role, somewhat similar to those in which he appeared in "High and Handsome" and "Speed Wild."

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE, star of "The Skyrocket," shortly to be released by Associated Exhibitors, Inc., receives the congratulations of Oscar Price, president of that organization, and E. J. Smith, sales manager. Both "Peggy" and her picture look like the proverbial "million dollars," and she is soon to start on her next.

"The Savage" to Start Soon

Ben Lyon Chosen for Male Featured Role in Coming First National Film

"The Savage," an original story written for the screen by Ernest Pascal, will be the next picture to go into production at First National's New York studios.

This picture will be made under the supervision of Earl Hudson, and will be started either the first or second week in January, according to present plans.

Ben Lyon has been chosen for the male featured role. Ben is already growing a beard for his part which calls for him to appear with a natural beard of considerable length. Other principals have not yet been selected.

Fred Newmeyer, who gained fame as a director of Harold Lloyd, and who was loaned to First National by the Lloyd organization to direct Leon Errol in "The Lunatic at Large," has been engaged to direct this picture. Nick Barrows, who came on from the coast with Newmeyer as a "gag man," will furnish the "gags" for the "Savage." George Folsey will be cameraman.

This picture will mark the return of Ben Lyon to the Eastern studios of First National after several months' absence during which he has been working for the Robert Kane units.

Change in Gotham List

Will Make No December Release, But Will Make Two in January

A slight switch in the releasing schedule of Gotham Productions from the Lumas Film Corp. was made known which, however, will not cause any inconvenience to exchanges handling the Gotham pictures.

Instead of releasing "The Phantom of the Forest" in December as originally scheduled, this picture starring "Thunder," the Marvel Dog, will go forward in January. The regular release, "The Speed Limit" with Raymond McKee will keep its regular place on the schedule.

In other words there will be no December release from Gotham but two January releases.

DOROTHY MACKAILL
She's "Joanna" in First National's picture bearing that title.

ARE THESE TWO OF THE "Seven Sinners"? Must be. Not as Marie Prevost and Clive Brook, but in their roles in the Warner Brothers' film with the "teaser-able" title.

Warner Brothers Complete Two More Big Productions

TWO more Warner Bros. productions to be released on the current schedule have been finished in the last ten days and are now undergoing the processes of editing and cutting.

One of these is "The Night Cry," in which the wonder dog, Rin-Tin-Tin, will appear as the hero of a thrilling story by Phil Klein and Edward Meigher. The human players having conspicuous parts in the cast are June Marlowe, John Harron, Gayne Whitman, "Heinie" Conklin, Don Alvarado and Mary Louise Miller. Herman Raymaker directed.

The other picture just finished is "Other Women's Husbands," the forthcoming Monte Blue-Marie Prevost starring vehicle. Also in the cast are Huntly Gordon, Phyllis Haver, Marjorie Gay and John Patrick. The story, E. T. Lowe, Jr., is a record of domestic entanglements, the machinations of a vamp and the operations of a designing "best friend."

Wasps Hold Annual Meet

Elizabeth Riordan Elected President Women Publicists Body

The Wasps, which is the short for Women's Association of Screen Publicists, an organization that has sprung into prominence on the West Coast in the last year, has just held its first annual business meeting and election of officers, at the Writers' Club in Hollywood.

Elizabeth Riordan of the publicity department of Fox Studios was chosen to serve as president in the organization's second year; Helen Hancock of Metropolitan Studios, vice-president; Margaret Kimball of United-First National Studios, secretary, and Shirley Moorman of the Ruth Roland Company, treasurer. Caroline Wagner, the outgoing president, and Adeline Alvord were elected to the board of directors.

Reports of the initial year of the group, which corresponds to the Wampas, or Western Association of Motion Picture Advertisers, indicated that remarkable growth had been made and much accomplished toward the unifying of the efforts of women in this branch of the business.

Sign Popular Writers

Well Known Scenarists Under Contract to Write for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Productions

The studio executives of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production, Hunt Stromberg, studio executive and Irving G. Thalberg, associate studio executive, announced last week that they had made contracts with many well known scenarists, and title writers to work on coming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions.

Mr. Mayer says that he has signed a new contract with Katherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell as writers of titles, subtitles, and other editorial work, and also an extension of the contract with Lew Lipton the ingenious writer of comedy situations.

Mr. Thalberg announces that A. D. Younger, the well known scenarist, has been signed to write the adaptation and continuity for "Brown of Harvard."

Studio Reorganization Pleases Lasky

ELATED over the satisfactory results already evident from the reorganization of the production forces at the Lasky studio, Jesse L. Lasky has returned to New York and at once went into conference with William Le Baron, associate producer at the Long Island studio, for the discussion of plans for Paramount pictures to be made in the East.

"Our policy of wiping out all seasonal lines in the offering of big pictures to the public in spring and summer as well as in the winter is being enthusiastically supported in the studio," Mr. Lasky said. "Under the general supervision of B. P. Schulberg and Hector Turnbull, associate producers at the Lasky studio, the studio forces have plunged into the new program with an enthusiasm which augurs well for the box offices.

"For instance, Bebe Daniels' next picture, 'Miss Brewster's Millions,' will be one of the outstanding pictures of the year, and we are all sure that it will establish Miss Daniels as a comedienne of immense popularity. This picture not only will tell a rattling good story, but it will be packed with gags supplied by the comedy constructors who go to make up Miss Daniels' producing unit, and it also will have a fashion show sequence which will have tremendous appeal to the women. In this picture, which is being directed by Clarence Badger, Miss Daniels will be supported by Ford Sterling and Warner Baxter.

"Another big special which will prove sensational is Allan Dwan's picture, 'Sea Horses,' from Francis Brett Young's novel. While on the Coast I saw many of the rushes, and I know that after seeing the picture you will agree with me that it is a triumph for the director and Jack Holt, Florence Vidor and George Bancroft. These three members of the cast are masters of the difficult roles they portray. Jack Holt reaches new heights as the American captain, a virile role in which he is supreme. Fresh from her wonderful work in 'The Grand Duchess and the Waiter,' Miss Vidor has a new surprise in store for her thousands of admirers. To watch Mr. Bancroft is a treat in itself. This picture, I am confident, will give the sea story a new significance on the screen.

"In preparation is an original by Ernest Vajda, the noted Hungarian dramatist who is in America to write screen stories exclusively for Paramount. This story, which will combine the atmosphere of Continental Europe with that of America, will give Pola Negri a vehicle which will display as no other picture has the wide range of her dramatic power. Miss Negri is enthusiastic about the story. Dimitri Buchowetzki, recognized both here and abroad for his directorial genius, has been assigned to this picture. With this triumvirate of European artists, who are alert to the demands of the American audience, Paramount is planning one of the great pictures of the year. Robert Ames has been selected to play the leading male role in this special production, which has not yet been titled.

"Those who have read 'The Blind Goddess' realize its great screen possibilities. This story went into production on the West Coast on December 28, under the direction of Victor Fleming, whose mastery of dramatic situations was displayed in 'Lord Jim.' In the Arthur Train story his opportunity is even greater. He has been given a strong cast, including Jack Holt, Esther Ralston, Ernest Torrence and Louise Dresser. You are familiar with the work of Mr. Holt, Miss Ralston and Mr. Torrence in Paramount pictures.

"William de Mille's next production for Paramount will be an adaptation of Charles Neville Buck's 'The Flight to the Hills.' While in the East, Mr. de Mille, after a conference with our production executives, decided definitely upon this story. He feels that in this Buck opus he has a story of special calibre. When I left the Coast he was considering a number of players for the leading roles.

"Another of Zane Grey's popular stories of the West, 'Desert Gold,' will be produced on a scale commensurate with the bigness of the theme found in all of this author's works. George B. Seitz, who made the Indian epic, 'The Vanishing American,' will direct 'Desert Gold,' and in the notable cast will be Shirley Mason, Neil Hamilton, George Rigas, Robert Fraser and William Powell. This story is a Western melodrama of an appealing love theme. The scenario has been completed by Lucien Hubbard, who supervised the production of 'The Vanishing American.'

"This outlines only briefly the big things in store. These and other specials will contribute to what I believe is going to be the greatest spring and summer Paramount history and in the history of the motion picture industry."

Book First National Solid for January

FROM all sections of the country bookings are pouring in for January, First National Month, according to reports just received from the Distribution Department of First National. Two weeks before the first of the year, the bookings in first run theatres of small cities as well as the key centers far exceeded the mark set by the Sales Department for that date. Many exhibitors have rearranged their programs in order to run a solid month of First National product.

An important feature of the month which has aroused keen intefest among the managers of theatres, is the Exploitation Contest open throughout January and carrying awards totalling $2,000 for the best exploitation, advertising and publicity in connection with First National Month. Soon after the announcement of the terms of the contest was published, letters began to arrive from exhibitors announcing that they would enter the competition which will be decided by the editors of the trade papers, acting in the capacity of judges.

Among the theatres that have booked First National pictures solid during January are the following: Strand, New York, Strand, Brooklyn; State, Minneapolis; Capitol, St. Paul; Garrick, Duluth; Rialto and Strand, Omaha; Princess and Rialto, Sioux City; Liberty, Portland; Orpheum, Ogden; Liberty and Strand, Seattle; Liberty, Spokane; Imperial, St. John; Rialto, Tulsa; Grand Opera House, Pittsburg; Strand, Erie; Chicago, Chicago; Madison, Peoria; Gaiety, Springfield, Ill; Burns, Colorado Springs; Rialto, Des Moines; Strand, Grand Rapids; Criterion and State, Los Angeles; Strand, Milwaukee; Orpheum, Oshkosh; Strand and Walnut, Cincinnati; Southern and Keiths, Columbus; Leland, Albany; Rialto, Poughkeepsie; Avon, Utica; Opera House, Newburgh; Avon, Watertown; Strand, Binghamton; Olympia, Boston; Majestic, Providence; Olympia, Worcester; Broadway, Springfield; Olympia, New Bedford; Merrimac Square, Lowell; Central Square, Cambridge, Mass; Olympia, Lynn; Broadway, Lawrence; Teele Sq., Somerville; Star, Manchester; Olympia, Brockton; Olympia, New Haven; Proctors, Yonkers; Capitol, Reading; Savoy, Wilmington; Opera House, Easton; Colonial, Harrisburgh; Washington, Chester; Metropolitan, Washington; Rivoli, Baltimore; State, Layton; Pantheon, Toledo; Strand, Akron; Dome, Youngstown; Circle, Indianapolis; Main Street, Kansas City; Miller, Wichita; Rialto, Louisville; Majestic, Memphis; Crescent, Nashville; Rialto and Tivoli, Chattanooga; Riviera, Knoxville; Empire, Mobile; Stanley, Philadelphia; Poli, Bridgeport; Strand, Hartford and Crown, New London.

Making "The Hidden Cabin"

"The Hidden Cabin" is the title of the Western feature Pete Morrison is now making for Universal. Supporting Morrison are Barbara Starr, James Welsh, Dick La Reno, Jr., Les Bates, Jerome De Gasse, Milburn Morante, Peggy Blackwood, James Lowe and others. The picture is being directed by Joseph Franz.

Siegmann Signed by "U"

George Siegmann, one of the best known character actors and "villains" of the screen, has signed a long term contract with Universal. Siegmann recently completed an excellent "heavy" role in "The Midnight Sun," Universal Super-Jewel directed by Dimitir Buchowetzki. His first work under his new contract with Universal will be in "Poker Faces," with Edward Everett Horton in the stellar role and Harry Pollard directing."

Added to Cast

Thomas Holding and Joseph Smiley have been added to the cast of "Tamed," the Paramount picture in which Gloria Swanson is now starring at the Long Island studio. Mr. Holding has been the leading man in a number of important productions, his last appearance having been with Barbara La Marr in "The White Monkey." Mr. Smiley's most recent picture were "Aloma of the South Seas" and "Lovers in Quarantine," both for Paramount.

Metropolitan Has Big Production Plans

SIX producing companies launch auspicious schedules with great array of talent.

January, 1926, will be a month long to be remembered in the Metropolitan Studios, for during this month six producing organizations launched a program of gigantic magnitude.

Harold Lloyd, filming "For Heaven's Sake," directed by Sam Taylor with Jobyna Ralston as his leading lady—and it is by far his greatest production; Corinne Griffith in "Mademoiselle Modiste," which Robert Z. Leonard is directing with Norman Kerry, Rose Dion and Willard Louis featured in her support; "Whispering Smith," George Melford's current Metropolitan Production with an all star cast, headed by H. B. Warner, Will Walling and Richard Neill.

E. Mason Hopper directing "Paris at Midnight," the second Frances Marion Production for Producers Distributing Corporation's release. In the cast are Jetta Goudal, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Brian, Edmund Burns and Emile Chautard.

A. H. Sebastian's production "The Prince of Pilsen" with Anita Stewart and George Sidney.

Renaud Hoffman is completing final preparations on his next P. D. C. release "The Unknown Soldier," which he will personally direct.

And under Mr. Hoffman's supervision are two Gotham Productions for Lumas release, the first, which starts Dec. 26th, is "Hearts and Spangles," an original story of circus life written by James Tynan. The second is tentatively titled "Racing Blood," a race track melodrama also by Tynan. Henry McCarty scenarized these productions. The first will be directed by Frank O'Connor.

This brings together in one studio the greatest array of screen writing talent extant.

Frances Marion leading the list with her scenario of "Paris at Midnight;" Elliott Clawson and Will Ritchey who adapted "Whispering Smith" for the screen; Adele Heilbrun who adapted "Mademoiselle Modiste;" Tynan and McCarty for the two Gotham productions.

All of the above are in process of filming at the Metropolitan studios or nearing that point, while Priscilla Dean is getting ready for her next Metropolitan starring vehicle, "Forbidden Waters," which Charles Logue is preparing for the screen.

Finis Fox is completing the last detail on the scren treatment of "Shipwrecked," and Percy Heath is completing his original of "The Dice Woman."

In summarizing the above, Lloyd will have one production; Sebastian will have one; Hoffman will have "The Unknown Soldier" for P. D. C. and two for Gotham; Corinne Griffith will have one; and Metropolitan will have two filming and three preparing, all five of which will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Warners Start Three More Productions

THREE new productions were started at the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios last week, according to information received from Jack L. Warner, production chief, and Ben Zeidman, his associate executive.

"Leave It to Me" is the title of William Beaudine's first feature for the Warners since his return to the home lot after a six months' leave of absence. Patsy Ruth Miller, John Patrick and Montague Love have the leading roles. The story is by Jerome Fiddler and the scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr., with adaptation by Lowe and Phil Klein.

"The Grifters" is the title temporarily borne by the production being made from L. A. Lancester's novel. So far as selected the cast includes Dolores Costello, Dot Farley, John Harron, Matthew Betz, Lee Moran and Gertrude Claire. Darryl Francis Zanuck made the adaptation and Roy Del Ruth is directing. The story is a clever crook comedy drama, admirably adapted to screen translation.

"Why Girls Go Back Home" is Marie Prevost's forthcoming starring vehicle, she having started work on it immediately upon the completion, a few days ago, of "Other Women's Husbands," in which she is co-starred with Monte Blue. James Flood is directing from Catherine Brody's story, as adapted by Flood and Walter Morosco, with scenario by Sonia Hovey.

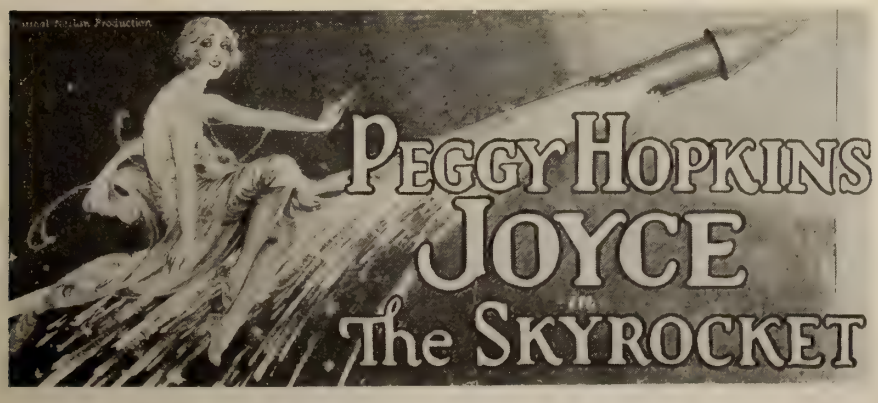
Big Song Tie-up on "The Skyrocket"

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., have completed a unique exploitation tie-up with Leo Feist, Inc., on the Peggy Hopkins Joyce special "The Skyrocket," whereby "Wonderful One," the theme song of the photoplay, will be broadcast by every large radio station in the United States and Canada on the evening of January 7th, 1926, when "The Skyrocket" is to have its world premiere in the Grand Ball Room of the S. S. Leviathan.

The Feist organization has arranged to send a new orchestration of "Wonderful One" to every radio orchestra. Their branch offices in the principal cities have been notified of the tie-up with "The Skyrocket" and will arrange with announcers to precede the playing of this number with the announcement that it is being featured in honor of "Peggy Hopkins Joyce" Night aboard the Leviathan. As has already been announced, the program incidental to the Leviathan showing will be broadcast over WMCA and the Leviathan orchestra is to feature the "Wonderful One" number. A talented group of artists has been assembled to entertain guests at the special showing and this entertainment will also be broadcast over WMCA.

Paul Whiteman wrote the music for "Wonderful One" from a theme by Marshall Neilan, who directed "The Skyrocket." In addition to being the theme song, it appears several times during the action of the photoplay, and lends additional heart appeal to the Adela Rogers St. Johns' story of Hollywood and the stars of the screen.

Associated Exhibitors have notified their exchange managers to co-operate with the Feist representatives for the general broadcasting of "The Skyrocket" theme song, and the national plugging of this song on January 7, is certain to arouse widespread comment, as it has not been on the "air" for some time and is being especially revived to commemorate the debut of the initial Peggy Hopkins Joyce picture.



ONE OF THE TWO STRIKING TWENTY-FOUR sheets issued by Associated Exhibitors on their big special, Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket." Both styles of twenty-fours have made their appearance on boards all over New York.

Seena Owen in "Shipwrecked"

According to an official announcement from Producers' Distributing Corporation, Seena Owen's first appearance under her new contract with Metropolitan Pictures, will be in the leading role of "Shipwrecked."

Work on this production, which will be an adaptation of Langdon McCormick's stage play "The Storm," will be started shortly at the Metropolitan Studio.

REMEMBER ALICE IN WONDERLAND? Well, this is Thomasina in Hollywood. Why, Thomasina Mix, of course. Tom Mix, her dad, has one bad habit—he can't pass a toy shop without bringing home a doll. Her mother has just called in an architect to plan a playhouse where all Thomasina's "children" can be parked at night. Maybe the title for this picture should be "There Was a Young Lady Who Lived in a Shoe." And maybe when Daddy Tom gets the architect's bill he will pass up the toy shop. Thomasina says, "Not if he's my old man!"

Old Tapestry Background for "The Volga Boatman"

AN outline disclosing the nature of the story, now being produced under Cecil B. De Mille's personal direction, has just been issued by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Under the title "The Volga Boatman" Konrad Bercovici has written a story that strikes out into a rare vein of photoplay background. It will be a drama of Russia after the fall of the Czar and coincident with the release of the production, Grosset & Dunlap will publish the story in book form.

The story opens at the time of the outbreak of strife between the Red army and the White army of the Aristocrats. The dramatic interest centers in Elinor Fair, a lovely aristocrat, and William Boyd, a sweat-stained, toil-laden boatman of the Volga. Theodore Kosloff plays the part of a mute blacksmith, Victor Varconi, an imperious prince and Julia Faye, an exotic Tartar character. Robert Edeson is given one of his interesting character roles, as the last of a great line of Russian land owners.

The story starts on the Volga river, before the Revolution, and swings into full stride when the overturning of the Czar makes the whole nation a seething caldron of uncontrolled emotions. Servant becomes master, and master, servant.

The highlight of the picture will be a great ball of aristocrats interrupted by the shells of the Reds. Later, we see the aristocrats in their silks and satins forced into the harness formerly worn by the Volga boatman.

The story points no moral and takes no sides. It is intended simply as a love story of a man and a woman played against one of the most interesting tapestries of recent history.

Noel Smith Named to Direct Picture

Richard Talmadge has announced that Noel Smith will direct his next picture, work on which will begin in a few days. The engagement of Smith is a reward for his direction of Talmadge's latest starring vehicle, "The Bue Streak," which is now in the cutting room.

To Frank Howard Clark has been assigned the task of writing the continuity.

Albert Metzetti will again serve as assistant director to Smith, and Jack Stevens has been engaged as cameraman. Casting will begin as soon as Clark finishes the continuity.

Lucian Andriot Signed

Lucian Andriot, French cinematographer who filmed such pictures as "The Thundering Herd," "The Count of Monte Cristo," and "A Connecticut Yankee in King Arthur's Court," has been signed by De Mille to photograph "Red Dice."

Contracts with Bert Roach

Louis B. Mayer, Vice-President in charge of production at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, announced last week that he had made a new contract with Bert Roach, the popular comedian.

Mr. Roach has also had the comedy parts in the M-G-M productions, "Don't", "The Denial", and will probably be seen in the forthcoming production of Rupert Hughes' "Money Talks", directed by Archie Mayo. Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor are featured in this picture, adapted to the screen by Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

'Partners Again' New U. A. Film

Samuel Goldwyn's Third Potash & Perlmutter Laugh Special Is Completed

Samuel Goldwyn's third annual "Potash & Perlmutter" laugh feature has been completed, according to advices from Hollywood, and after going through the editing and titling processes will be ready for distribution through United Artists Corporation.

This third fun special is called "Partners Again—with Potash & Perlmutter," and is an adaptation of the famous Montague Glass stage play. George Sidney and Alexander Carr again are seen in the title roles—Sidney as "Abe" Potash and Carr as "Mawruss" Perlmutter. This time the two fifty-fifty partners are in the automobile business as distributors and demonstrators, and those who have seen the first rush prints declare that the celluloid adventures of "Abe" and "Mawruss" in their latest business ventures comprise a reel riot.

In the cast supporting Sidney and Carr are Betty Jewel, Allan Forrest, Earl Metcalfe, Robert N. Schable, Lillian Elliott, Gilbert Clayton and Anna Gilbert. Henry King, whose directorial genius is being praised everywhere for the results obtained in the Goldwyn dramatic offering "Stella Dallas," is directing "Partners Again," and the scenario is from Frances Marion.

Gene Hornbostel, technical man for Director King, has taken every advantage of all opportunities for telling effects and innovations in this film, these including many ludicrous airplane adventures for the "Partners." George Barnes has done the camera work.

"Little Annie Rooney" Making World Conquest

Mary Pickford's "Little Annie Rooney" is conquering the world, according to reports from the Pickford-Fairbanks studio, Hollywood. In far-off countries where the old song, which served as an inspiration for the photoplay, has never been heard or heard of, the latest Mary Pickford screen success is registering the same decided hit as an audience and box-office production that it did in New York and other chief cities in the United States.

First London, then Paris, voted the picture of the tenements of New York City one of the big successes of the year. Now Germany has joined in the chorus and registered an emphatic approval. Not a single community yet has turned in an adverse report on the showing of this film.

"'Little Annie Rooney' is popular in both large cities and small, and in Los Angeles, the home of the movies, it has run five weeks at the big Million Dollar theatre, and the engagement still is under way.

Spearing Made Director

James O. Spearing, critic, newspaperman and scenarist, will add director to his list of titles, according to an announcement from Carl Laemmle, president of Universal.

Spearing has been permanently elevated to a directorship by Universal, and will direct an untitled all-star feature production starting within the next few weeks.

He has been at Universal City for the last two and a half years as scenarist and in a consulting and advisory capacity in directing and cutting pictures.

F. N. Pictures on "Main Street"

"The UnGuarded Hour" and "Just Suppose" Are Coming to Broadway Soon

"The Unguarded Hour" starring Milton Sills with Doris Kenyon featured in his support, will be the attraction at the Rialto Theatre, New York, for the week of January 1st. "Just Suppose" the latest First National picture starring Richard Barthelmess will be seen at the Strand starting January 24.

In selecting the "Unguarded Hour" for the New Year's week feature, the management of the Rialto gave this First National production precedence over many other feature attractions available for showing. It is reported to be one of the best box office productions that Milton Sills has had for a long time.

The story is an adaptation of a novel by Margaretta Tuttle which is highly romantic in quality. Many of the scenes are laid in Italy. Lambert Hillyer directed the picture and the cast includes, in addition to those already mentioned, Lorna Duveen, Charles Beyer, Dolores Cassinelli and Vivia Ogden.

In "Just Suppose," Barthelmess has a role of great charm and appeal as the heir to the throne of a mythical European kingdom. He falls in love with an untitled American girl, played by Lois Moran, and is forced to choose between his duty to his people and the dictates of his heart. The character of the Prince will take its place high on the list of memorable portrayals contributed to the screen by Barthelmess.

New Colleen More Picture Will Be Called "Miss Nobody"

The title of the Colleen Moore starring picture to follow "Irene," will be "Miss Nobody," according to an announcement just received from First National Pictures.

"Miss Nobody" was originally called "Shebo," taken from a serial story by Tiffany Wells. Anthony Coldeway is now at work on the script for the picture which will be produced under the editorial supervision of June Mathis. The story deals with the adventures of a young girl, who having all the rich things in life, suddenly finds herself facing abject poverty. The trials and tribulations that ensue give Miss Moore every opportunity for a display of comedy as well as pathos.

Alfred E. Green, who made "Sally" and has just completed "Irene" will also direct "Miss Nobody."

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp" Is Title of Langdon's First Picture

"Tramp, Tramp, Tramp," has been selected as the title for the first Harry Langdon picture now being completed for release by First National Pictures. This title was selected after hundreds of suggestions had been considered because of its suitability to the story and its box office possibilities. Reports from the Coast indicate rapid progress on the picture which has been in work at the studio under the direction of Harry Edwards for a number of weeks. The details of the plot have not been disclosed, but it is understood to be original in its conception and development. Mr. Langdon has received the assistance of the most experienced gag men in Los Angeles in the development of incidental comedy business.

A distinguished cast will be seen in support of Mr. Langdon, including Joan Crawford, his leading lady, Edwards Davis, Carlton Griffin and Tom Murray.

Barrymore's "The Sea Beast" Opens At Warners January 15

JANUARY 15 has been definitely set by Warner Bros. as the date for the official release of the big John Barrymore special, "The Sea Beast." On that day the world premiere of the production will take place at Warners' Theatre, New York.

While plans are yet to be completed, it is proposed to make the New York opening a gala event. The first public showing of the production has long been awaited eagerly and interest has been heightened by the fact that Millard Webb, the director, is to be present in person.

Webb arrived in New York early this week. It is his first visit to the big city in three years—since he became active in motion picture work, in fact. The premiere will be the first of any of his pictures, therefore, that he has attended in New York, and he anticipates with interest the opportunity to study at first hand the production's reactions on a metropolitan audience.

While persons who have had pre-views declare that in "The Sea Beast" John Barrymore attains heights of artistry to which even he had never before scaled on either stage or screen, they predict that the picture will prove a notable triumph for the director also. Webb is one of the youngest of megaphone-wielders, a fact that makes this achievement all the more noteworthy.

For the premiere a special and particularly elaborate prologue is being arranged, in the preparation of which Webb will have supervision. Fresh from the direction of the production itself, it is expected that he will impart to this preliminary number the very atmosphere of the picture itself. He also has in mind some novel exploitation ideas which will be worked out in cooperation with the Warner exploitation staff. He is extremely enthusiastic over work on the Warner lot and is an intense Barrymore fan.

Webb, meanwhile, is taking advantage of the opportunity now afforded to see the latest plays. He is constantly on the lookout for picture material and production suggestions.

Ben Reynolds Renews With M-G-M

Ben Reynolds, who is now doing the camera work on "The Light Eternal," the initial production of Benjamin Christianson for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, which stars Norma Shearer, last week signed a new contract with Louis B. Mayer. Reynolds is one of the most competent cameramen in the business and has been responsible for some remarkably fine photography in several M. G. M. productions.

M-G-M Starts the New Year with Big Schedule of New Productions

METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER will start the New Year with an auspicious group of releases calculated to keep them in the front rank of the industry where the successes of "The Big Parade," "The Merry Widow" and "The Unholy Three" and many other productions have so surely placed them.

Best sellers, as well as original stories for the screen by famous novelists, have been bought by M-G-M and moulded to the requirements of the screen by skilled scenario writers. The M-G-M galaxy of stars, and the popular M-G-M stock players give life and movement to pictures carefully directed by great directors. It will be a happy New Year for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and for the exhibitors who book their productions, with such a bright bevy of productions as the following scheduled for early release in January and February.

Rex Beach, the much-read author of The Spoilers, gives another Alaskan story to the screen. "The Barrier," directed by George Hill, is an adventurous variant of the "eternal triangle" against a background of splendid scenic shots. A gold rush gives a vigorous and moving tone to the picture. Norman Kerry is admirably cast as a tall, romantic, army officer, who loves and succeeds in gaining the love of the appealing, half-breed heroine, Necia, sympathetically portrayed by beautiful Marceline Day. Lionel Barrymore gives a strong characterization of the villain, a brutal sea captain. Harvey Gates is responsible for the smoothness of the continuity through the maze of incidents and adventures.

Another popular novel finds its way to the movies through the M-G-M release of "The Exquisite Sinner," made from the book, "Escape," by Alden Brooks. The picture is a colorful tale of the adventures of a young man who escapes his cares as the youthful head of a large manufacturing house by joining a band of gypsies. Conrad Nagel plays the part of the young man, and the lovely Renee Adoree that of his gypsy sweetheart. The vampire's role is played by Paulette Duval. Many picturesque incidents fill the production with life and color, among them a Breton wedding and the customs of the gypsies. Escape, pursuit, a duel, and a mass fight between gypsies and peasants supply many tense and dramatic moments during the showing of this splendid film.

Blasco Ibanez, the world-renowned Spanish writer, whose work has been proved such successful screen material by the triumphs of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" and "The Temptress," supplies another novel for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production with Ibanez, "The Torrent," a tragic and powerful story of Spanish life. The continuity of Ibanez "Torrent" is by Dorothy Farnum. She weaves into well connected scenes the love story of a Spanish politician and Lenora, the great singer. Ricardo Cortez is doubly attractive as the enamoured Don Rafael Brull, making fervent love to Greta Garbo, who lends her exotic beauty to the role of Leonora. Gertrude Olmsted in the part of the heiress whom it is Don Rafael's duty to marry, is pretty and appealing. And the delicious newcomer, Sally O'Neill, who made such a hit in "Sally, Irene and Mary," enlivens the picture with her merry personality. A great dramatic climax is in the scene where Leonora sends Don Rafael back to his wife and children, going back to the stage, with a forced smile, to continue the opera.

Another Rex Beach story to come out under the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer banner is the widely read novel, "The Auction Block." Hobart Henley gives this production his able direction. The scenario has been done in collaboration by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. "The Auction Block" is the story of a young woman sacrificed to please her family in a marriage with a worthless young man, and her regeneration of him. Eleanor Boardman and Charles Ray are the players featured in this simple and moving story of business and marriage. Eleanor Boardman is tremendously appealing as the gentle and virtuous young wife, and Charles Ray plays well the part of the wealthy and drunken husband.

"The Light Eternal," starring lovely Norma Shearer, was directed from his own original story by Benjamin Christianson, M-G-M's Danish director. "The Light Eternal" has its locale in modern Denmark, and Norma Shearer is again cast as a circus star. It is a moving story of very human beings. Miss Shearer is supported by Carmel Myers and the dog actor, Buddy, supplies many humorous touches to the picture.

Rupert Hughes' "Money Talks," an original story for M-G-M, is an amusing comedy that will make money talk to many exhibitors. Archie Mayo directs the story in his own inimitable manner, and the scenario is lightly and deftly handled by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor give a delightful characterization of a young American couple, and Bert Roach supplies many a roar of laughter. This comedy disproves the teachings of the busy ant, for it is to the spendthrift hero of this comedy that success and money come.

A smart and sophisticated story from the pen of witty S. Jay Kaufman, who conducts the column, "Round the Town" in the Evening Telegram, is "Dance Madness," written especially for M-G-M. Robert Z. Leonard celebrated for his flare for dance and cabaret sets does the direction of "Dance Madness." The continuity has been written by Federica Sagor. Conrad Nagel, Claire Windsor and Bert Roach are again happily combined. An amusing motivation for the story is the marriage of a poor young woman and a wealthy young man who go to Paris for their honeymoon, where, because of her inability to speak French, the girl falls back on their American chauffeur for companionship. The resulting love affair, and the husband's clever solution of their problem makes "Dance Madness" a vastly amusing picture. There are some highly attractive scenes in French cabarets, and the picture has a gay and sophisticated air.

Lon Chaney follows up his triumphs in "The Unholy Three" and "The Tower of Lies," in which he co-starred with Norma Shearer, by a distinctive success in Tod Browning's story for M-G-M, "The Mocking Bird." Browning also directs the character star in this adventurous crook story. The chief feature of the story is Chaney's lightning changes from crook to mission worker in the Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde role which he plays as he alone can play it. There is a deft love interest, and Renee Adoree, who won such high praise for her work in "The Big Parade," is superb as the music hall actress who incites the rivalry between the Mocking Bird, Chaney's role, and West End Eddie, played by Owen Moore. A diamond dog collar is the prize which the two crooks covet for their sweetheart, and the possession of which passes from one to another through a series of startling robberies. Heart interest is not lacking from this "crook story." Doris Lloyd plays the part of the Mocking Bird's faithful sweetheart, and the picture ends happily for both sets of lovers. Waldemar Young guides the story through the intricacies of plot and counter-plot set in the Limehouse district of London. But, above all the excellence of this picture, is the excellence of the incomparable, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star, Lon Chaney.

Sax Buys Oppenheim Novel

"The Golden Web" Will Be Put Into Production at An Early Date

As a straw indicating which way the wind will blow in the matter of Independent picture production for the coming season, is the news that Sam Sax has purchased the motion picture rights to "The Golden Web," one of the best novels by that prolific and popular contemporary author, E. Phillips Oppenheim.

It is announced that "The Golden Web" will be one of the first stories put into production for the forthcoming 1926-1927 series of Gotham Productions and that a very well known male star has already been signed up for the principal role.

Phil Rosen Signed by M-G-M

Hunt Stromberg, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio executive, has announced the signing of Phil Rosen as that organization's latest directorial acquisition.

Rosen has directed a number of notable productions, among them being "The Life of Abraham Lincoln" and he was formerly head cameraman for Mary Pickford.

No picture has as yet been assigned Rosen.

Virginia Browne Faire in Hoot Gibson Production

Virginia Browne Faire has been signed to play the leading feminine role opposite Hoot Gibson in "Chip of the Flying U" the popular novel by B. M. Bower in which Universal will feature the western star.

Lynn Reynolds, who recently made House Peter's latest starring production, "Combat," will direct Gibson, and expects to start work within a week.

Philo McCullough and Harry Todd also have been added to the cast. Strangely enough, Miss Faire, McCullough and Todd were all in the cast of "The Calgary Stampede," a recent Gibson picture.

Associated Exhibitors Busy on Product For Next Season; Big Pictures Planned

WITH the "Triumphant Thirty" all accounted for and booking widely, and with Peggy Hopkins Joyces' big special, "The Skyrocket," already well on its way toward box-office history, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., announce that the organization is already planning and whipping into final shape its product for 1926-1927. According to present plans, many of which already have taken definite form in the shape of signed contracts, the 1926-1927 Associated program will present a strong lineup of pictures. The program will include pictures of every variety from the biggest of big special productions to the speedy Westerns.

P. A. Powers has been on the Coast for some time negotiating for product such as will fill the exacting requirements of Associated Exhibitors. Already he has lined up stars, authors and directors of known box-office power—names that mean actual dollars and cents insofar as selling seats is concerned. Also he has secured several books and plays which will be made into Associated Exhibitors attractions.

Pictures for the 1926-1927 Associated program already are being made in studios in Los Angeles, San Francisco, Tacoma, Portland and New York, and rumor has it that Mr. Powers has under advisement the acquisition of a central studio building in Hollywood to house the various units making pictures to be released under the Associated banner. It is expected that on his return to New York from the Coast within the next few weeks Mr. Powers will have definite announcement to make regarding this central studio plan. It is believed that in this manner Associated will bring the production of pictures made for release under its banner to a point of efficiency that is certain to reflect in the added worth of the finished product.

Among the many important matters occupying the attention of Mr. Powers on the Coast is preliminary work on the second starring vehicle for Peggy Hopkins Joyce. According to Mr. Powers this picture is destined to be even a bigger special than "The Skyrocket." He predicts that, despite the furore Miss Joyce's screen debut caused, her appearance in the second big special is going to be even a greater surprise to the industry and to the public.

While Mr. Powers has been busy on the Coast with plans for the 1926-1927 product, Oscar A. Price, president of Associated, has been equally busy in New York. Out of a mountainous mass of details and propositions submitted and precipitated, Mr. Price has made selections certain to aid materially in bringing moneymaking pictures to the screens of exhibitors who present Associated Exhibitors. Not the least of this work has been the reviewing and passing upon of scores of completed pictures which were offered for release. The few pictures selected out of the many submitted are convincing proof of the quality standard that has been set for the new Associated product.

Also there has been the work in New York of considering countless propositions for the production of pictures built on sure fire showman ideas. A few of these have crystallized and will be seen next year as Associated Exhibitor pictures—pictures with a basic appeal and exploitation possibilities that will make each an outstanding attraction of its kind and type.

While not yet ready to announce definite names and titles for all of next year's releases, Associated Exhibitors is in a position to talk about the program as a whole with full knowledge that it will live up to the highest week-in-and-week-out standards, and that the specials will stand out among the coming year's best pictures.

In line with the announcement of the forthcoming product, it is particularly worthy of note that Associated has progressed in such a short time to the point where such an announcement might be made. A Herculean task of reorganization has already been accomplished in the rebirth of Associated Exhibitors, but much still remains to be done to make of the concern the outstanding factor of the industry which its sponsors are certain it will become.

Another fact in connection with the next year's product that is worthy of mention is the attitude that will be taken on advertising and publicity. Associated Exhibitors announce that every release under their trade mark will receive individual attention in advertising and other methods of selling, and that with every Associated picture the exhibitor will get such backing as he has seldom received on a picture before. Then, too, Associated Exhibitors attractions will be brought to the attention of the exhbiitors themselves in a manner such as to make them known to every theatre owner.

"Lady Windermere's Fan" Smashes Records At Its New York Premiere

SATURDAY, December 26, the opening day of the world premiere run of "Lady Windermere's Fan," Ernst Lubitsch's picturization for Warner Bros. of Oscar Wilde's classic, saw the smashing of all attendance records at Warners Theatre, on Broadway, New York.

Moreover, on the second day—despite the fact that it was the coldest of the year the crowd was so large as to make the attendance record for the two consecutive days the greatest on record. And the indications throughout the week have bene that the record-breaking would continue indefinitely.

Picture reviewers on the daily papers are unanimous in their praise of the picture. They hail it as another Lubitsch triumph and most of them laud the work of the individual performers as the best they have ever done.

An elaborate and particularly artistic prologue, "The Spirit of the Fan," conceived by Lina Basquette, formerly premiere danseuse of the Ziegfeld Follies, is greatly enjoyed. When the curtain rises a huge fan is seen on the stage. As this opens, there emerges from each of its panels a dancer, until seven, recruited from Broadway shows, appear. The girls, garbed in filmy costumes, execute an attractive dance.

The following brief extracts from New York reviews give an indication of prevailing impressions of the picture:

World: Lubitsch deals persistently in art. Each Lubitsch scene, garnished with the brilliance of a fanciful, imaginative, impressionistic touch, unfolds itself into a full, unmistakable and tremendously simplified episode. "Lady Windermere's Fan" is pictured in the style of the German director at his very best. It is a smart, carefully pointed, now and again humorously brilliant undertaking.

American: Lubitsch has taken Wilde's play and made it his own. All evening we tingled with delight at the delicacy, the originality, the precision of the directing. Irene Rich, May McAvoy and Bert Lytell were touched by Lubitsch's magic. The minor characters were equally well cast.

Morning Telegraph: The sophisticated combination of Oscar Wilde and Ernst Lubitsch makes a delightful picture, with gay bits of humor and a charmingly told story. It is an outstandingly good picture. Lubitsch could never be dull.

Evening Post: "Lady Windermere's Fan" is beautifully, delicately framed by a picture maker who knows, down to the smallest detail, how to tell an interesting story with a camera. The celebrated "Lubitsch touch" is everywhere to be discerned, and the players give, for the most part, unforgettable performances.

Sun: This photoplay represents unquestionably one of the directorial triumphs of the year. Here is a cinema with a style, with an air. It is a high comedy-drama directed in the quiet, aristocratic vein which runs only through Lubitsch.

Times: There are artistry and inspiration about Lubitsch's direction. He has fashioned an entertaining picture.

Telegram: As honest and intelligent a piece of screen entertainment as we have seen during the entire year. The settings are artistic and impressive. The cast is an able one.

Preparing "Eve's Leaves"

Ready to start work on the final preparations for his next production, Paul Sloane, a member of Cecil B. De Mille's staff of directors, has returned to the De Mille Studio following a six-weeks trip to New York.

Sloane's next picture, "Eve's Leaves," will go into production early in January, with Leatrice Joy filling the starring role. Miss Joy was also starred in Sloane's last picture for De Mille, "Made For Love." Elmer Harris, production editor of "Eve's Leaves," has prepared a screen treatment of Harry Chapman Ford's successful play, which deals with the passion of the modern woman for wonderful clothes.

"Laugh Month" Special

Edited by Charles Edward Hastings

Best Theatre, Parsons, Kan., Breaks House Records With All-Comedy Circus, Held Recently; Three Pathe Comedies Used

ANOTHER impetus was given to the Pathe All-Comedy Circus program idea with the holding of a big All-Comedy day at the Best Theatre, Parsons, Kan., put on by Manager Walter Fenney, on Thanksgiving Day.

This was probably the first attempt any exhibitor in that territory has made to feature short product exclusively and get behind it with a big campaign of advertising and exploitation. A wire received from Manager Fenney says: "All comedy circus a great success here, in fact, the biggest day's business we have done in months. If laughing means they liked it, they didn't miss."

A circus dodger advertised the program as "One big day for kids from 8 to 80—one day in Parsons when laughs will come faster than cinders from switch engines in the Katy yards. Be sure and get your share of laughs, not cinders."

Another paragraph says "No all-comedy show could be complete without 'Our Gang', so here they are in their newest." The circus dodger was illustrated with three two-column cornerblock ads which are furnished free to exhibitors with all Pathe short comedies. Two of these covered Harry Langdon in "Feet of Mud" and Charley Chase in "The Caretaker's Daughter."

"Our cornerblock ads on short comedies make a real flash in a circus dodger," said S. Barret McCormick, director of Exploitation for Pathe, and exhibitors will find a big selection of them for special heralds and throwaways during Laugh Month."

Following the favorable comment of exhibitors on the All-Comedy Program, Branch Manager J. A. Epperson of the Kansas City Exchange, closed with seven Kansas City theatres whereby each is to present Pathe comedies in this unusual experiment during "Laugh Month."

Comedy Should Predominate on Every "Laugh Month" Program

By PAT CAMPBELL,
Feature Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

"A COMEDY on every exhibitor's program during 'Laugh Month'." The above is a slogan that is right in order for January, 1926. I say a comedy and I do not place limits on the length of the subjects. On many bills short-comedies will play their part and on other bills feature-length comedies will be the "Laugh Month" keynote of the program.

As long as the screen subject is a sure-fire laugh-provoker it should qualify as a fitting attraction during "Laugh Month." Although more stress has been made on the short length comedies, in no way was it intended to limit "Laugh Month" programs to shorts, only I believe that the big idea is to have, as my opening slogan says: "A comedy on every exhibitor's program during 'Laugh Month'."

Therefore, in many theatres the comedy portion of the bill will be a feature-length comedy like Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman," or Larry Semon in "Stop, Look and Listen." The program will, of course, be rounded out with a short dramatic subject, a screen magazine and a news reel—just as in theatres where the feature is a dramatic subject, a comedy short will play its "Laugh Month" role.

PAT CAMPBELL

The feature-length comedy with its full-measure of laughs is an ideal "Laugh Month" attraction. With its volume of rib-tickling scenes and convulsing gags it provides an hour or more of merriment which is conducive to a "darn good time."

Comedies will be in great demand during "Laugh Month," and the feature comedies will play their part.

Her Boy Was All Wet

Lloyd Hamilton's mother, visiting her famous comedian son at his home in Laurel Canyon, Cal., dropped into the studio in time to see her boy drenched to the skin in an artificial rainstorm in the making of his new Hamilton-Educational comedy.

Arthur Starts Comedy

Johnny Arthur is starting the fourth of his series of Educational-Tuxedo Comedies under the direction of William Goodrich. He will be supported by Virginia Vance in the leading feminine role.

Eight Buster Brown Pictures Available for Laugh Month

EIGHT Buster Brown Productions will be available for booking during National Laugh Month, it was announced this week by the Stern Brothers, producers of these two-reel comedies. This includes three of the series which ordinarily would not be released until later in the winter and spring, but which are being rushed to the exchanges now so as to be on hand for January.

Not only have the Sterns sent word to all Universal exchanges to pre-release the forthcoming Buster Brown productions for Laugh Month, they also have let down the bars on all Century Comedies now in the exchanges and those which will be in the exchanges during the next few weeks. This will include comedies set for release up until the end of April, or a total of eleven two-reelers which exhibitors now have the privilege of running before their release dates.

"The best way in which we can help to make Laugh Month a success is to provide a large assortment of good comedies for showing during that month," the Sterns state. "By letting down the bars on release dates and by speeding up the making of prints on all comedies now on hand, we feel that we can give the exhibitor an unusual variety of subjects from which to choose. We have made arrangements assuring that Buster Brown Productions and Century Comedies as far ahead as the April releases will be completed in the factory and shipped to the various Universal exchanges in time for January bookings. Together with the regular January releases, this will total seventeen two-reel comedies which the exhibitor can get right out of the can."

The Buster Brown productions offered for pre-release showing are "Buster's Nose Dive," "Buster's Hunting Party" and "Buster's Sky Rocket." The regular January release, "Buster's Bust-up," has just completed a very successful week in the Capitol Theatre, New York City, a showing which firmly established the Buster Brown productions at the top of Short Product box-office quality.

Including the January releases, the following Century Comedies are included in the pre-release two-reelers for Laugh Month: "Her Lucky Leap," "Flying Wheels," "Yearning For Love" and "Painless Pane," all starring Wanda Wiley; "A Honeymoon Squabble," "The Big City," "Say It With Love," all starring Edna Marian, one of the new Wampas Baby Stars; "Helpful Al," "Accidents Can Happen," and "Al's Troubles," all starring Al Alt; "Crowning the Count," and "A Flivver Vacation" starring Eddie Gordon, and "Too Many Babies," featuring Charles King and Constance Darling.

The four Buster Brown Productions which already have been released, and which are offered as excellent Laugh Month material, are "Educating Buster," "Buster Be Good," "Oh Buster" and "Buster's Nightmare." The last recently had a successful week in Warner's Theatre, New York City.

LAUGH MONTH packed into a Glenn Tryon mirth-concoction by Hal Roach for Pathe to distribute—that's "Flaming Flappers."

Laugh Month Comedies in Work at Sennett Studios

THE production of comedies in tune for "Laugh Month" is humming at the Mack Sennett Studios in California where several series of Pathe comedies are made.

Director Eddie Cline has just completed an Alice Day two-reel comedy vehicle in which the star was supported by Danny O'Shea, Ruth Taylor, Joe Young and Eddie Quillan. Cline is starting another Alice Day two-reeler with a cast including the leads in her completed comedy, with the addition of Sunshine Hart.

Lloyd Bacon has completed direction of Ralph Graves in a star comedy of the Graves series with a supporting cast including Thelma Parr, Marvin Lobach and Sunshine Hart. Following this he began production of another Graves comedy with Thelma Parr and Marvin Lobach again supporting the star.

Director Del Lloyd, who guides the unit appearing in the series of star comedies bearing the "Mack Sennett" brand name, is in the midst of production. As usual Billy Bevan and Andy Clyde are prominently cast. In addition are such well-known players in Pathe comedies as Madeline Hurlock, Kewpie Morgan and Louise Carver.

Several comedies from the Mack Sennett studios are scheduled for Pathe release to add to the merriment of "Laugh Month." Among these is the latest Harry Langdon special comedy, "Saturday Afternoon."

Who Challenges Burns?

Neal Burns, the golfing Christie comedian, has hung up an enviable record for someone to shoot at, which will probably require considerable shooting. Burns, playing the sixth hole at the Lakeside Club, which is a one-hundred-yard, par three hole, made it in two four consecutive times playing the course. It is said that such a unique record has never been accomplished on any of the local courses. If this is open to contest, Burns will gladly meet the challenging golfer and fight it out on any tee or green. Burns is one of the stellar performers of the stellar performers of the Christie-Metropolitan team which has only been defeated once in meeting other studios this season. The team is composed of Charles Christie, Neal Burns, A. C. Cadwalader, Jack Noble, Jack Cunningham and George Melford.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE. (F. B. O.-Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Chapter one. Fine and appeal, good. Clean comedy. New print. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farm class, town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (200 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE. (F. B. O.-Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. Now on the sixth chapter "Pike's Pique" and in my opinion are the best two reel subjects on the market, this is new stuff and my people like them fine. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Small town class, town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

ARE BLOND MEN BASHFUL. (Pathe Comedy). This Stone boy is coming to the front rapidly in our estimation. His stuff is original and he doesn't overwork it as he seems to have a surplus of new gags to spring. Small town and rural class. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

BAD MAN. (Bray Dinky Doodle Comedy.) Good on long programs. Best one-reeler on market. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farm class, town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (200 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

BE CAREFUL. (Educational). Star, Jimmie Adams. A real ful comedy that will convulse most audiences. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BENEFACTOR. (General Electric). Here is a picture I have used on several occasions at different places. It is a three-reel picture and very entertaining. Exhibitors can get lots of pictures like this from their nearest General Electric office. No rental on these pictures and they're very good. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Admission 25c. Mitchell Conery, Conoat Projection Service, Menands, New York.

BOTTLE BABIES. (Pathe Comedy). A Spat Family Comedy, somewhat better than the average of that series. Seemed to get more laughs than they usually do. Small town and rural class. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

BOYS TO BOARD. (Pathe Comedy). "Our Gang." "Our Gang" in another comedy of kid monkey business. Pretty good stuff in this, though it does not create much laughter. The audience is probably amazed too much for that. Small town and rural class. Kenneth W. Thompson, M. W. A. Theatre, Hancock, Wisconsin.

Will nothing pull 'em in?

Do they look at the posters on the feature and stroll off down the street?

Can't you coax them any way? SURE!

Play up the strong comedy, the serial that makes 'em forget.

Play up your short subject. It quit being "filler" long ago; give it the boost to make it your puller at a season when they want laughs and thrills.

THEN SEND SHORT SUBJECT TIPS TOO!

BRAY CARTOON AND FOX NEWS. Good with "Iron Horse" type of picture. H. W. Guinan, John Sexton Amusement Co., Cotton Valley, Louisiana.

DINKY AND THE BAD MAN. (F.B.O.-Comedy). Here's one of Dinky's best. Produced by Bray. These cartoons about as good as Felix cartoons. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HEAD OVER HEELS. (Fox-Comedy). A really funny Fox comedy of the slapstick variety, but it will keep your audience in a yowl all the time. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HONEYMOON HARDSHIPS. (Century-Comedy). Very good. About the only real good one we have had of Universal. Farmers and Business class town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre. David City, Nebraska.

HOT SHEIKS. (Paramount-Comedy) Here's a comedy I didn't care much about running, but I was all wet. It's a good one, with some snappy subtitles. Rental right. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LOVE BUG. (Pathe-Comedy). "Our Gang." A dandy as they always are; believe these kids are the best we can buy. Farmers and business class, town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PERILS OF THE WILD. (Universal-Serial). This started out fairly good and looks as though it may be fairly good serial, however, my patrons are not flocking to see it. The serial fans usually want western action and this one is lacking that. This will no doubt please if it will sustain their interest for ten weeks. Admission 10-30. L. O. PERILS OF THE WILD. (Universal-Serial). Star, Joe Bonomo. Starts off good. Patrons appreciate change from western serials. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton Alberta, Canada.

PLAY BALL. (Pathe-Serial). Was greatly disappointed in this serial both from standpoint of entertainment and box office receipts. Only a few kids really enjoyed it. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

POLITICAL PULL. (Pathe-Comedy). Spat family. A fair comedy, got a few laughs, very few Spat family pictures are good. Working class town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre (232 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RED PEPPER. (Educational). .Star, Al St. John. A wow! This one was great for us on a Saturday night. Young and old all enjoyed this one. A dandy mermaid comedy. Tone, O.K. Good appeal. Draw better class, town of about 4,500. Admisison 10-20. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (410 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PATHE NEWS No. 88. (Pathe). Wine, women and song, "Aesop's Fables," makes them laugh as usual. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre. Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Big Circuits Book Buster Brown Comedies

THE BUSTER BROWN COMEDIES entered in The "Laugh Month" classic with other comedies hit the top of the ladder last week when "Buster's Bust-Up," the current two-reeler of the series being released by Universal, was shown in the Capitol Theatre, New York. The comedy was a decided hit with the Capitol audiences and consequently is rated as a first-run subject of the highest quality.

"Buster's Bust-Up" is the second Buster Brown Production to play on Broadway in the last few weeks. "Buster's Nightmare," the previous two-reeler in the series, was shown in Warner's Theatre late in November and was a great success.

"Naturally, we are greatly pleased with the success of our little feature in the New York Capitol," said Mr. Abe Stern, Vice-President of the Century Film Corporation.

"Frankly, the 'break in' to the Capitol is just a step in the onward progress attending this delightful feature. The rest will take care of itself. We are going right on making better comedies in this series, and we shall add to our plans from time to time, as we have determined to give the theatre owners only the best that can be made.

"We have found that by merely introducing this series to the showmen, the 'Buster Brown' pictures sell themselves. I am not at all afraid of the outcome, now that the big circuits have decided to book 'Buster Brown.'"

The Universal home office report that the several succeeding comedies in the series, which have been completed and shipped East are even better than "Buster's Bust-Up" and "Buster's Nightmare."

These two-reelers are being made by the Stern Brothers, with Gus Meins as director. "Buster" is played by little Arthur Trimble, "Mary Jane" by Doreen Turner and "Tige" by Pete, the dog comedian. This series marks the initial step of the Stern Brothers into series comedies. So successful have the Buster Brown Productions shown themselves, the Sterns are planning additional series releases.

Simultaneously with the showing of the Buster pictures in the Capitol, New York, comes word that they will be shown in the Capitol Theatre, Detroit, the series having been signed up by the Kunsky interests for their circuit. Also, they are to appear on the screen of the Empire Theatre, Syracuse, and over the A. H. Blank circuit of Des Moines, with a big first run in the Rialto Theatre, Des Moines.

An indication of the popularity of the Buster Brown Comedies with exhibitors and the public is included in the following letter, written by O. L. Meister, manager of the Whitehouse Theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.:

"In my estimation, there is no two-reeler that can approach the high standard of Universal's latest achievement in the comedy field—the Buster Brown series of comedies," he says.

"With the numerous types of two-reel subjects on the market, it is, indeed, a decided hardship for the exhibitor to choose and choose wisely. However, my faith in Universal as the leader in the short subject field has always been fully justified, and hence I lost no time in contracting for the Buster Brown series and incidentally for the balance of the Universal current comedy output.

"The first of the Buster Browns, "Educating Buster" was presented amid one continuous round of applause, and I, in unison with my patrons, am looking forward with extreme pleasure to the succeeding releases. These comedies have a most pleasant reaction on the theatre going public because of their clean, wholesome entertainment qualities, and as for invigorating tonic at the box-office, they are second to none."

Three Pathe Featurettes on Program of New Keeney Theatre in Elmira, New York

The new Keeney Theatre in Elmira, New York, opened by Frank A. Keeney, well-known theatre owner, on December 21st, presented three Pathe short-feature subjects on the initial program.

Pathe News, Pathe Review and a Grantland Rice "Sportlight" were played on a bill that included as the feature "The Ten Commandments."

The Pathe feature, "Black Cyclone," starring the noted Hal Roach equine, Rex, will be shown at the Keeney Theatre on the second week's program—December 31, January 1 and 2.

HERE WE SEE THE CHARMING AND WINSOME Wanda Wiley doing her "Daily Dozen" in a few scenes from her latest Century Comedy, "A Winning Pair." Charles King and Tony Hayes support Miss Wiley.

"YES, YES, BABETTE"—his French is "wet," but in the end he'll win you yet!—and in the Christie-Bobby Vernon comedy, with those first three words as title, leading lady Frances Lee is "toot SWEETIE!"—and it's an Educational release, of course.

F. B. O. Sales Head Lauds "Laugh Month" Stars

LEE MARCUS, general sales manager of F. B. O., asserts that the National Laugh Month Drive to be launched during January will give exhibitors an opportunity to concentrate not only on laugh-provoking productions, but on stars who have a particular flair for comedy.

On commenting on this particular phase of Laugh Month, Mr. Marcus said:

"Producing and distributing companies are giving as much time and thought to short subjects and short subject stars as to feature length productions and stars who appear in them. They are recruiting the finest talent among players, authors and directors for their comedy subjects. Many of the companies have recruited their talent from the vaudeville stage, the first home of humor, and these players are proving tremendous box office attractions. The short subject today is in the same class with the feature length film, and in many instances, is superior to the feature production.

"Exhibitors realize the value of making their audiences laugh. They want comedies with good stories, clear subtitles, and amusing players. The producing companies who concentrate on short subjects are filling this demand as quickly and ably as they can.

"F. B. O. is concentrating particularly on stars with a comedic bent. Alberta Vaughn is now starring in 'Fighting Hearts,' a new series from the pen of Sam Hellman, well known humorist. Alberta is one of the few young actresses on the screen today with a distinct flair for comedy. It would not be amiss, at this point, to suggest that they concentrate on Alberta during Laugh Month.

"Alice Ardell, who is being featured by Joe Rock in the series of Blue Ribbon comedies which he is producing for F. B. O. distribution is another comedic 'find.'

"The three fat men, 'Fat' Karr, 'Tiny' Ross and 'Fatty' Alexander, the trio whose gross weight approximates a ton, and who are being featured by Rock in the series of Standard Fat Men comedies which are also being made for F. B. O. distribution, are taking their place as funmakers of the first rank.

"'Dinky Doodle,' the cartoon character created by Walter Lantz, has won a place in the hearts of film fans.

"Although not stars on the F. B. O. roster, Al Cooke and Kit Guard are two of the funniest players on the screen today, and their following is enormous."

"Goat's Whiskers" In Production

The "Unnatural History" subject which is scheduled for release by F. B. O. during Laugh Month will be titled "The Goat's Whiskers." This subject is a combination of both cartoon and comedy. It is the first subject of this series to be made jointly in Hollywood and in New York. The comedy action will be filmed by Joe Rock in Hollywood while the cartoon sequences of the picture will be produced at the Bray Studios in New York by Walter Lantz and Earl Hurd.

The New Year

By AL CHRISTIE

Ring out the old hokum; ring in the new. 1926 has much in store for the moving picture industry because the trend in the minds of the public and the producers is more than ever toward "entertainment only."

Gradually the industry has swung back to the first principles of pictures; that they are for entertainment first, last and all the time.

This is a business of selling entertainment to the public, not art.

Entertainment first; whether in hilarious comedy or emotion-stirring drama.

Because the industry has been convinced of this fact, less money will be lost striving for "art" and more of the public will be entertained.

Books "A Peaceful Riot"

F. L. MacNamee, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Washington, D. C., has sold "A Peaceful Riot," a Blue Ribbon Comedy featuring Alice Ardell, to H. M. Messiter for early showing at the Garden Theatre, Baltimore, Md.

THIS TIME THEY'RE "BACHELOR'S BABIES"—those Juvenile comedy folks Educational gets so much good comment about.

"Good Cheer"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS "Our Gang" comedy produced by Hal Roach and directed by Robert McGowan is slightly mystifying at the start, since it consists of a number of scenes without any suggestion of story but only imbued with the Christmas spirit. For that reason the story begins slowly, and it doesn't show real plot until the first reel is well over. It concerns children whose faith in Santa Claus is restored by two older kids, who raise enough money to buy them gifts. Then, too, there is a lucky break when bootleggers posing as Santas, with toys camouflaging their bags of bottles, are forced by policemen to themselves play Santa and hand out the toys to the East Side children. The Gang members outdo themselves in putting over the subject, and when the story begins to give them a chance to romp around they do put it over. The comedy is particularly opportune to the holiday season.—Sumner Smith.

"Wide Open Faces"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THE conclusions to be drawn from this Mack Sennett comedy featuring Ralph Graves is that dentists are unnecessary artisans out where men are men. Graves comes to town in high spirits and is genteel with occasional revolver bullets, which bore neat holes in his eastern fedora and nick the ground around his heels. The sitation becomes complicated when the worst of the bad men waxes jealous, his sweetie having vamped Ralph. The dentist overcomes him by administering laughing gas, then proceeds to fall for one of the kind of girls who make muffins that mother used to make. It is all uproarious fun of the best sort and should make a big hit. The action is greatly assisted by some fine titles by A. H. Giebler. One of the screams is where Ralph does some dental work for a donkey and another where the bad man ruins his business by attaching an electric light wire to the chair.—Sumner Smith.

"Between Meals"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

THIS Hal Roach single-reel subject presents Paul Parrott and a tiny colored boy in the adventure of two tramps who experience much difficulty in locating food. A kindly, dignified gentleman offers to buy them all they can eat at a fruit stand, but cops take him back to the insane asylum and the hungry ones return the food. Their adventures are a series of funny frustrations that ought to please most audiences.—Sumner Smith.

Hodge Podge No. 40

(Educational—Magazine—One Reel)

LYMAN H. HOWE'S Hodge Podge No. 40 presents various interesting facts in its inimitable fashion. Most appealing are scenes of Mexicans making rope, the harvesting at Lake Texcoco of winged insects that are sold as food for fish and birds and of fly eggs considered a delicacy by the natives of the Viga canals and of peasant women who wash in them. The concluding bit is an imaginative drawing of a boy who imagines himself being eaten by a Sphinx.—Sumner Smith.

Pathe Review No. 2

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

FEATURING this issue is "Plundering the Sea," another episode in the camera record of the Arcturus Oceanographic Expedition, and it is intensely interesting. Women especially will rejoice in "Innocence," a pictorial study of babyhood done in a charming way. The third is "A Date in Egypt," showing the harvesting of dates. These three subjects constitute an exceptionally entertaining issue of the Review.—Sumner Smith.

"All Astride"

(Pathe—Sportlight—One Reel)

LOVERS of horses particularly will enjoy this Grantland Rice Sportlight. It makes the point that although the automobile has supplanted the horse to a large degree in everyday life, still Old Dobbin hasn't lost all of the affection entertained for him by humans. The scenes are of the cattle country, the race track and the polo field. As usual, Mr. Rice has produced a film pictorially satisfying as well as replete with human interest.—Sumner Smith.

"The Gold Push"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

HERE is a peach of a Paul Terry-Aesop's Film Fable for "Laugh Month." Cats drive mice teams in the Klondike and a bold, bad cat miner runs away with an unsophisticated mice lady. All hands then join in saving her, apparently proving that in that bleak, heroic country cats are cats.—Sumner Smith.

"Three Blind Mice"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

THIS subject plays on the general suspicion that lots of "blind" beggars aren't unable to see the cop rounding the corner. The mice have a merry time at the expense of a cat and the farmer, and Paul Terry fans should too.—Sumner Smith.

Zelina O'Neal Lands

It's a long jump from musical comedy to leads in screen comedy, but Zelina O'Neal, late of Harry Carroll's "Pickings," has successfully made the leap. Miss O'Neal is playing leads with Al St. John, in Educational-Mermaid Comedies, under the direction of Stephen Roberts. Although Miss O'Neal has appeared in supporting roles in a number of screen comedies, this is the first time she has faced the camera in a "straight" make-up. Like many other eccentric screen comediennes, Miss O'Neal is remarkably good looking in a straight make-up and those who saw her in "Pickings" will hardly recognize her in the new Mermaid Comedy.

New Dinky Doodle Picture

Bray Productions have completed the filming of the next F. B. O. release of the Dinky Doodle series entitled "Dinky Doodle in the Restaurant." Walter Lantz appears in this subject together with the cartoon characters.

The Comedy Angle of Fox Films

NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH is a welcome event to Fox Films. It marks the culmination of the greatest comedy season this company has ever experienced. We have made what we believe is the best comedy program in the history of the corporation, and the fact that every Fox series started this season will be continued next season is proof sufficient that they have met with the wholehearted approval of exhibitors.

And right here is where Fox has profited this year. The company has had its finger on the exhibitors' pulse, has watched every report, every expression of approval and disapproval in order to give showmen the sort of comedy pictures they want.

The Fox Van Bibber Comedies, of course, were well established before this season, but they made strides that surpassed even our own expectations. Among the Richard Harding Davis comedies already produced are "The Big Game Hunter," "The Sky Jumper," "The Wrestler," "A Parisian Knight" and "The Feud." Earle Foxe and Van Bibber has created a character that is a byword in comedy circles. Florence Gilbert as the girl has gathered a great following.

Van Bibber Blazed the Way

Van Bibber gave us the lead to other series. Their instant success showed us the way. The public, we learned, wanted pictures that, first were clean; next, were funny; and third, carried the air of richness. The public itself eliminated the custard pie comedy and Fox was quick to recognize this fact.

The result was two other comedy series taken from the best literary product in years. One was O. Henry's works and the other the Married Life of Helen and Warren, Mabel Herbert Urner's popular stories that are running currently in newspapers throughout the country.

In the O. Henry series we have attempted to select girls typical of the American heroines of that author's imagination. Marion Harlan appeared in the first, "Shoes;" Mary Aiken in the second, "Transients in Arcadia;" Kathryn McGuire in "The Failure;" Florence Gilbert in "Cupid a la Carte" and Gladys McConnell in "Elsie in New York." The supporting casts of all those were selected from dramatic people. The directors were Daniel Keefe, Robert P. Kerr and Albert Ray.

By GEORGE MARSHALL
Supervisor of Fox Comedies

The Helen and Warren Series

When the Helen and Warren pictures were started, we had the good fortune of selecting for the leads two of the most typically representative characters of the great American married multitude that could be found. They were Hallam Cooley and Kathryn Perry. How these comedies were received in every section of the country is a matter of box-office record. With the tremendous newspaper tie-up and publicity, they have forced their way to the top of the comedy list in one brief season. Albert Ray directed the first three Helen and Warren releases. They were "A Business Engagement," "All Aboard" and "The Peacemakers." Tom Buckingham made the next, "His Own Lawyer" and Ray the fifth, "Held for Investigation."

Previews of the O. Henry and Helen and Warren comedies have kept us in the right direction, and, with the assistance of exhibitors' reports, in which we invite every suggestion for improvement, we expect to keep these high class two-reelers at the top of the heap.

In Imperial Comedies we have adhered to the same policy of clean, swift humor with a natural, coherent story. We have tried to develop comedy from natural situations, rather than to create pictures by a series of gags, the old discarded method.

Comedy Directors Signed

Benny Stoloff directed three Imperials this year. They were "Sweet Marie," "Love and Lions" and "East Side—West Side," the first of a series of Irish-Jewish comedies that have taken hold at once. Lew Seiler made "On the Go" and "Strong for Love." There are twenty on the schedule for release and several of these are now in production.

A five-reel feature based upon Charles A. Hoyt's comedy-drama, "A Trip to Chinatown," was also made by the Fox Comedy department. Bo bKerr directed with a cast including Margaret Livingston, Earle Foxe, J. Farrell MacDonald, Anna May Wong and Gladys McConnell.

On the Fox comedy list for 1925-26 there are forty-four pictures. This may be increased to fifty-two next year, although final plans on the schedule have not been settled.

There is one thing that is certain, however. That is that exhibitors will get the Van Bibber's, Helen and Warren and O. Henry pictures again next season, in addition to Imperial Comedies.

It is probable, also, that the Fox comedy department will create several long features from the Charles A. Hoyt plays, the rights to which have been acquired by Fox Films.

Animation Department Installed

We have just instituted an animation department at the Fox West Coast Studios to handle some comedy novelties which are in preparation. It is our intention to offer four or five novelty Imperials during the season.

I believe we have one of the finest staffs of comedy directors and writers in the business and we are fully prepared to give exhibitors comedy of every description—regardless of what kind of house he has or where it is.

Lloyd Bacon has just been added to the directorial staff, having been brought to Fox from Sennett. Other directors on my list are Robert P. Kerr, Benjamin Stoloff, Lew Seiler and Albert Ray. Felix Adler heads the writing staff, which includes Andrew Bennison, Beatrice Van, Sid Lanfield, Mrs. Catherine Carr, Jack Rubens and Earl Emlay. Pinto Colvig is in charge of the technical and animation department.

It is the sincere purpose of Fox Films to obtain the best works of the best comedy writers and turn out the best comedy pictures that can be made.

And remember, Mr. Exhibitor, we are always open for suggestions. We will appreciate letters giving us the reactions of your audiences. We are making pictures for you. Let's cooperate.

Renews with Pathe

"Topics of the Day," Pathe laugh-reel produced by the Timely Films, Inc., and which is made up of jokes and witticisms clipped from the press of the world, was recently contracted for the seventh successive year for presentation by the Keith-Albee, Orpheum, Orpheum Junior, Interstate, and Moss and Proctor circuits.

Pathe Has Sennett and Roach Comedies For the Second Week in "Laugh Month"

FOR the second week of "Laugh Month," Pathe lists a Mack Sennett and a Hal Roach two-reel comedy an "Aesop Film Fable" and "Topics of the Day" to add mirth to the entertainment of the theatregoers. The January 10th program also includes "The Mystery Ship," the sixth chapter of the Patheserial "The Green Archer," "All Astride" a Grantland Rice "Spotlight"; a Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

"Wide Open Faces" is a Mack Sennett two-reeler featuring Ralph Graves and directed by Lloyd Bacon. Graves plays the role of Bob Bridger, who longs to fill some of the open faces in the West. Amid these sagebrush surroundings Ralph has anything but a peaceful time and the mirthful uproar is helped along by Thelma Parr, Eugenia Gilbert, Marvin Lobach and Leo Willis.

"Good Cheer," the "Our Gang" holiday comedy produced by Hal Roach, was directed by Robert McGowan. The story concerns the efforts of the "Gang" to brighter the Christmas season for the less fortunate kiddies. They encounter a whole army of Santa Clauses and uncover a big plot as well as providing a right Merry Christmas for many children. All the "Gang" members—Mary Kornman, Farina, Mickey Daniels, Fatty Joe Cobb, Jackie Condon, Johnny Downs and Jay Smith contribute to the fun.

"Three Blind Mice" is a "Laugh Month" animated cartoon that is sure to please the Paul Terry fans. Each issue of "Topics of the Day" during "Laugh Month" will have added fun features.

"The Mystery Ship" is the title of the sixth chapter of the Patheserial "The Green Archer," a picturization of the Edgar Wallace novel of the same name. Valerie Howett's (Allene Ray) escape from Cold Harbor Smith's boat is a thrill in this chapter and the climax takes place on the famous new Bear Mountain Bridge over the Hudson River. Spencer Bennet directed this Patheserial which features Allene Ray and Walter Miller.

"DIS HERE SHO' NUF IS PARADISE!" That's Farina's decision in the Pathe—Our Gang comedy, "One Wild Ride."

"All Astride" is a Grantland Rice "Spotlight" that will surely prove popular. The automobile has replaced the horse for everyday purposes, but there is still a very important place in the world—the sport world—for man's most faithful servant and friend. Mr. Rice shows how the horse is still supreme in the cattle country, as a means of transportation in the rough mountain roads, on the polo field and the race track.

Pathe Review No. 2 presents "Plundering the Sea," a camera record of the Arcturus Oceanographic Expedition released in cooperation with the New York Zoological Society; "Innocence," pictorial studies of babyhood, in Pathecolor living paintings; "A Date in Egypt," stealing sticky fuit from the stately palm.

Two issues of Pathe News complete the Pathe schedule for the week of January 10th.

EVERYBODY LAUGHS WITH "OUR GANG" during "Laugh Month" and all the rest of the time. Here are the Hal Roach rascals in Pathe comedies wearing smiles quite in season.

Laying the Jinx

They say actors and stage people are superstitious, but Norman Taurog apparently has laid one sure jinx sign by the heels. Norman was seen working under a raised umbrella on one of the big roofed stages at Educational Studios where he is directing Lloyd Hamilton in a Mermaid Comedy. A realistic rainstorm, called for in the action, forced Norman and his crew to don raincoats, rubber boots and to seek shelter from the water under the big umbrella usually used outside to protect cameramen and director from California's bright sunlight.

Every News Film Release Should Contain Some Element of Humor

By EMANUEL COHEN
Editor of Pathe News.

EVERY news film release should contain some element of humor—not only during "Laugh Month" but all the time.

Such humor is derived from subtle incidents caught by the news film camera. Unrestricted glimpses of popular personages have their touches of humor. Unique shots of little animals cavorting before the camera always cause ripples of laughter. Unusual sensations for the audience secured by photographing the scenes so that the onlookers experience just what the cameraman encountered when he filmed them often rock a theatre with laughter.

So important do we consider the element of humor in Pathe News that we instruct each cameraman to catch the lighter side of life wherever and whenever possible. There are dramatic incidents galore in any news film and the humor touches are a welcome and entertaining relief.

All humanity responds to the screening of a news film because it mirrors life in its actuality with its drama and its humor. It is said that a certain percentage of theatre patrons were first attracted to theatres by the news film. And this is undoubtedly very true for it combines humor with its drama and it is timely.

Numerous instances of humor gems caught by Pathe News cameraman come to mind.

When President Coolidge was photographed at the American Legion convention in Omaha, someone handed him a "six gallon" sombrero hat. The executive put the hat on and it completely covered his head. As he peeked out from under the hat, the President smiled broadly. And this scene has brought forth good-natured chuckles and laughs wherever shown.

EMANUEL COHEN

Vice-President Dawes usually adds a little subtle humor to a news film scene. One of our cameramen pictured the Vice-President knocking out "flys" with a stout baseball bat for neighborhood kiddies in Evanston, Illinois. Another time he was photographed chumming with a group of the Senate page boys. Scenes like these always register laughs.

In a scene showing Indians from the 101 Ranch atop a New York hotel prior to their sailing for Europe, the cameramen persuaded Miss Helen Ferguson to Charleston with a squaw who then "did her stuff" in her own clumsy way. This scene has proved a scream in the theatres.

Scenes of stout people doing unusual things get the laughs in a newsfilm just as they go over in a Hal Roach or a Mack Sennett comedy. I recall views of stout ladies going through a series of weight reducing exercises atop a hotel and also a similar scene shot at Brighton Beach where the fat ladies struggled through some arduous calisthenics. The exercisers laughed over their efforts, and so did audiences.

One sure-fire way to tickle the ribs of an audience is to have the cameraman take his scenes so that the audiences experience unusual sensations, as I remarked above. Examples of this stunt in recent reels are looking at the world while riding a hippo and an elephant and while tied to a wing of a giant wind mill. A cameraman rode a hippo at the Bronx Zoo to get his scenes and another rode an elephant in a circus parade in Chicago. The riding-a-windmill scenes were a Pathe News Fifteenth Anniversary feature taken at San Francisco.

Yes, indeed, every news film release should contain some element of humor and I have instructed my staff to play up the lighter side especially during "Laugh Month."

"BIG BOY," "BONNIE," "SPEED," "GINGER," "BOBBY" make things lively for the captain and his crew in Educational-Juvenile Comedy, "Sea Scamps." Of course their dog, "Pal," also adds to the fun. Oh, yes! The youngsters had a chaperon, but that did not mean a thing.

Start Young America Laughing

BY REGGE DORAN,
Director of Public Relations,
Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE "mouthful" credited to the Queen of the Belgians by a prominent New York woman has nothing on that emitted by the fellow who declared "laugh and the world laughs with you." Like all the rest of the good advice we've had to listen to all our lives, however, we none of us have taken this wisdom seriously. More the pity! Maybe we didn't because our grandmothers told it to us, our mothers told it to us, and all our wise-cracking uncles have all too frequently attested the fact. Our grandmothers used to teach us other words of truth such as "be a good little boy or girl, because the habits formed in your youth stick to you all your lives." But that didn't prevent us from smoking corn silk behind the barn door in spite of the repeated exhortations concerning growth stunting. Now though, as we reach the years of so-called discretion, the kindly admonitions of that gray-haired, white-capped old lady creep out of the dim past, and we are even free to admit, if cornered that there WAS something after all in this habit formation and mirth explosion counsel.

The trouble with us nowadays is that we will listen to the preachings of the Walter Camps and the Dr. Frank Cranes concerning systematic living and all because these fellows can get a top head in almost any newspaper. We even give them credit as the first discoverers of the royal road to health, never dreaming that the same old grandmother knew this gospel when these men were but infants in arms. Of course the trouble with this glee sharing gospel is that nobody has taken us in hand. There has been no daily dinning about systematic laughing which will do us much more good than all the medicines that could be bottled. Of course, the noses of the intelligensia would be uplifted in scorn if one presumed to broadcast a "Haha-Hehe-Hoho" hour a day.

REGGE DORAN

Fortunately however, we can be spared the contempt of such meritorious individuals, and still lend an ear to the wisdom of the ancients. How? We have the motion picture theatre, with its motion picture program—the best laugh-getting element in the world! So the solution is simple. Get the movie habit. Go at least once a week, see a good comedy bill and into oblivion will go your compounds. Think of it! Fifteen minutes more to read your favorite book before retiring at night; nothing on your mind all day and a lot of fun in store for you once or twice a week in a comfortable loge.

This getting the habit when you are young is not so bad either. Did you ever hear a bunch of youngsters laugh at Charlie Chaplin? Did you ever hear them roar at the antics of "Our Gang"? The disease is infectious, but unlike other germs of that category, not only is it not harmful, it is even more than harmless, it is Health Making.

All throughout the country today, there is a cry for a motion picture performance a week which will be adequate for children. That is a great idea. It is a great idea in spite of all the arguments we hear against it; that "motion pictures are an adult form of entertainment," that "there are so few pictures children should see," that "children should not go to the movies anyway." Why of course they should. There are loads of pictures that children may and should see. There are enough of these pictures to give TWO performances a week if the younger generation but had the time to attend—which they haven't always, owing to the tradition in America and other civilized countries that a public school education is a necessity. But we would not think of shutting up our children in a dark room because we know that sunlight is conducive to the physical, mental and moral well being of youth? Mothers would turn assassins if we dared suggest such an idea. Yet laughter, we have been told through the ages, is also a gift of the gods. So why not let us be sane? Why not start Young America laughing its way through life? Get the young citizens into the habit of concentrated laughter. The line leads right to the good comedy movie program, given once a week. The custom will not wane. Then watch the effect on the freedom and bravery of this land and home of ours.

New Dog Star Signed to Appear In Big Levine-Bischoff Serial

PRODUCTION has begun on an absolutely new type of serial, starring a keen, intelligent police dog. Nat Levine, recently returned from a nation-wide tour, visiting every independent exchange and many exhibitors, ascertaining their future needs, immediately launched into plans for this serial. The demand for a serial that would be a deviation from the usual trend of melodrama and hokum was almost unanimous. Exhibitors, particularly, dwelt on the making of a serial that would appeal to both children and adults.

Mr. Levine and Mr. Bischoff are bending their efforts toward giving exhibitors a sure-fire money-maker and chose for their story, one written by George Morgan, the well-known author of adaptations and continuities for Universal, among which being, "Strings Of Steel," "The Winking Idol," "The Great Circus Mystery" and "The Scarlet Streak." The story has human interest and is brimful of action, written around the life of a dog, with the frozen north as its locale. Mr. Morgan has interspersed his tale with a continuous procession of thrilling episodes and anecdotes in the life of this brave, almost human, police dog.

William J. Craft, well-known as the director of all the early Hoot Gibson Westerns and the following serials, "Stanley In Africa," "Days of Daniel Boone," "The Beast Of Paradise," "The Riddle Rider" and "The Radio Detective," is the director of this ambitious, and it may be said, "revolutionary" serial.

The dog's name is to be chosen definitely via contests to be conducted in the key city newspapers.

Funny Men U. S. Firemen

The Christie Comedy baseball team has found time from the film activities of its respective members to defeat the team of the Los Angeles Firemen who were conceded to be hot stuff last season by annexing the City Championship. The score against the Firemen was 9-8. On the Christie team are Bob Thornby, George Sperry, Eddie Baker, Jimmie Adams, Gus Peterson, Slatts McBean, Austin Herrick, Bud Rike and George Hall.

Big Theatres Book "Red Seal"

Sales Manager Harry Bernstein who guides the Red Seal sales destinies for the New York territory states that his exchange has sold to a trifle more than five hundred theatres in the territory. The Famous Players' Broadway theatres, the Rivoli and Rialto; the Capitol; Strand; Loew's theatres; Fabian and other important circuits and theatres have also heavily booked the Red Seal product.

Juvenile Comedies

Charles Lamont is "resting from his task of directing the Educational-Juvenile kids for a few weeks while he directs Lige Conley and Estelle Bradley in an Educational-Mermaid Comedy. He will assemble his kid stars in a couple of weeks and finish the series of six. Juvenile Comedies will be distributed by the Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., this season.

Dooley In and Out

Billy Dooley, the Christie comedian, who has been through an operation, has been removed to his home and will be working in front of the camera within a week or ten days. His latest comedy "A Salty Sap" was just finished when he was taken sick while doing his vaudeville act at a local theatre.

A New Day A New Policy

By Hal Roach
Pathe Comedy Producer

"LAUGH MONTH" is dedicated in a special sense to the comedy, and accordingly it furnishes an ideal occasion to announce what probably amounts to the most radical change in production policy ever launched by a comedy studio.

This policy is, briefly, to introduce into our short-comedy productions such names of outstanding prominence that they will exercise for the exhibitor a definite box-office draw. This policy has been shaped entirely with a desire to meet the demands of the present day market and assist the exhibitor in increasing his attendance.

Frequently, the theatre-owner is faced with the necessity of showing a program feature in which there are no prominent box-office names that he can display. The feature itself may be an entertaining piece of work, but without the names to exploit it the exhibitor is powerless to get the people into his theatre. It is right here that our new production policy fits into the scheme of things. The exhibitor may now have the names to bill on his feature, but he will have them in our two-reel comedies.

Assuming that he has a feature with all the advertising possibilities of well-known names, our two-reel comedies with their additional box-office names will augment the drawing powers of the feature's stellar line-up. Thus our purpose is to meet the exhibitor's need for box-office names that will get the discriminating movie-going public off the street and into his seats.

The facts leading up to this change in policy will be of interest to the trade. Some few years ago we set out to improve the quality of our short comedies by the acquisition of the best material available in the way of stories, directors, acting talent, technical craftsmen, and so on. We have improved our product consistently until today we can claim without fear of contradiction that reel for reel our comedy product is superior in entertainment value and screen technique to the average run of feature productions.

What we set out to do was to make of our two reel comedies program features of definite box-office value—screen units that would possess a real, tangible "draw" that the exhibitor could gauge in terms of dollars and cents at his box-office. First, we had to build real substantial quality into our productions. Next we had to develop players and directors as proficient in their respective roles as any set of performers or directors on any featue lot. We have succeeded in these first two steps beyond our fondest expectations. In fact, as far as comparison with feature lots is concerned, I know that right now we have better director talent, better comedy-player talent, better technical-production talent than can be found on any feature lot anywhere.

HAL ROACH

We have now reached the third phase of our campaign to make the two-reel comedy of definite box-office value. For the exhibitor's advertising purposes a well-known name of established prestige is of the utmost importance. We are out to secure outstanding names of proved box-office "draw"—names that any exhibitor can put in his marquee lights, in his lobby displays, in his newspaper advertisements and posters with the certainty that such names will exercise a definite, tangible "pull" for his box-office.

Our recent acquisition of Theda Bara, of Lionel Barrymore, Mildred Harris, Eileen Percy, Elaine Hammerstein, Vivian Oakland, Gertrude Astor, to mention a few, has been in pursuance of our new policy. There are other contracts under negotiation of equal significance, which we will be able to announce in the near future. We are doing our part—in fact, considerably better than our part—at tremendous expense. We ask in all fairness that the exhibitor do his part.

This innovation has been launched only after what practically amounts to a nation-wide inquiry among leading exhibitors. Among those recognized theatre authorities that have listened to our plan and given it their unqualified approval as destined to help the exhibitor in filling his seats are J. J. Murdock, General Manager of the Keith-Albee Circuit; Fred Miller, of the Far West Theatres chain; Al Boyd of the Stanley Amusement Company of America; and Frank Newman, Manager of Paramount's Los Angeles houses. Moreover, we have behind us the experience of the vaudeville business which has been built up to its present state of prosperity largely through following the plan that we have adopted. Well-known Broadway stars have been signed between their stage engagements for variety acts. The rest of the bill has been built around them. Not only their regular "legit" following came to see them, but also many who while not content to watch them perform for a two-hour period found real enjoyment in their briefer appearance as vaudevillians. The same principle applied to recognized feature stars for presentation in short comedies will, we are sure, have the same beneficent effect on the motion picture business as its counterpart had in the vaudeville business.

It is not our intention to depend on stellar prominence to put our comedies over. We shall build around these players the best that can be had in the way of acting talent and production effects. When we hire a performer to do a butler role, we engage not an extra but exactly the same calibre of character actor that our biggest feature producers would insist upon. When a scene calls for pretty costumes, we secure the best that can be had in the way of materials, styles and fashion appeal. In this respect we wish to call attention to the fact that the head of the Hal Roach wardrobe department at the present day is Will Lambert who is a recognized authority in his profession. The same goes for technical details, such as properties, lighting, and the like. We have in charge of these departments men that are the equal of any of their contemporaries on feature lots. It may come as a surprise to many that we have "let out" of the Roach studios presons, who later through sheer force of publicity became recognized "experts" in their lines—and the reason we "let them out" was because they were not competent enough to meet our studio standards.

"Laugh Month" strikes the keynote of a situation that has been developing for some time past. More and more feature dramatic producers have been showing a decided trend toward the comedy angle as a basic source of entertainment. Every dramatic company is concerned at the present time with working "comedy relief" into its productions. Many of the industry's leading directors—not excepting D. W. Griffith—are engaged in planning greater slices of this "comedy relief" for their current dramatic work. Broadway's present outstanding cinema sensation, "The Big Parade," is generously sprinkled with comedy despite its serious theme. That's the trend—Comedy! We would like to jump a bit ahead of the trend and risk a prophecy. The more we study this marvelous business of ours the more convinced we are that the ambition to make quality the supreme goal will have the effect of putting mere footage in the shade. We sincerely believe that the day is not far distant when three reels will be the maximum footage of standard feature—even of those features boasting the greatest box-office names as stars and directors.

A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

The Theatre of To-Day

Presentations ~ Prologues ~ Music

Edited by Colby Harriman

In Defense of the Prologue

IN a recent issue of the Moving Picture World, we published a communication from Major Edward Bowes, Managing Director and Producer of the Capitol Theatre, New York, in which he predicted the passing of the prologue as it had practically outlived its usefulness. From all sections of the country we are receiving letters commending and decrying his arguments. W eare publishing herewith two letters which reflect the patron reaction to prologues from the extreme sections of the United States, the two coastal areas.

Edward L. Hyman, managing director of the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre, has come to the defense of the atmospheric prologue. Since Major Edward Bowes of the Capitol Theatre recently voiced his opinion that prologues are passing, Edward L. Hyman bases his opinion of the prologue on his six and a half years' experience at the Brooklyn Mark Strand Theatre. During this time, he declares, the prologue has grown in favor until now it occupies one of the most important places on the program.

"Everybody is entitled to his or her own opinion as to the value of the prologue. It is entirely logical that Major Bowes has found the prologue unsuited to his theatre. However, such may not be the facts in other cities and in other theatres. I can only speak from my experience here in Brooklyn for the past six and a half years. In this time we have developed the prologue until it stands forth as one of the most important incidents of the program.

"Whenever I hear a discussion on any point I immediately think of that old truism, 'It is not what you do, but the way you do it.' This can be applied to theatres as well as to any other endeavor. Naturally, the prologue which attempts to lift a scene or sequence from the story would defeat its own purpose because it would destroy the continuity. On the other hand, an atmospheric prologue which is built upon the basic principles of entertainment and art, without endeavoring to give information concerning the feature film, is very likely to win 100 per cent. approval from the audience. That has been our experience here.

"I believe that as far as the setting of the prologue is concerned, it is permissible to copy a scene from the picture. Into this setting you may put your artists, but have them do nothing which would take parts out of the picture itself. It is possible to build original incidents through means of vocal solos, dance interpretations, instrumental numbers and pantomime. With an act so constructed we have found that this is just what the people want. They are given entertainment for the eye and for the ear, while at the same time they are being put in the mood associated with the feature itself. It is very important that the public be in the proper mood when the picture begins.

"Take, for example, the recent Harold Lloyd picture, 'The Freshman.' This turned out to be one of the most successful prologues we have ever used and one which drew thousands of people into the theatre during the week. To this prologue, coupled with the feature itself, we owe the sale of block tickets to St. John's College and Brooklyn Technical High School, amounting to more than two thousand tickets. This prologue had as a setting a college jazz band on a terrace raised from the stage by four marble steps.

"The jazz band was costumed in the Harold Lloyd caps, sweaters and trousers. There were six dancers in white sport suits and tams, and there was a male dancer who wore the football suit similar to Harold Lloyd's in the picture. With these people an act was built which included instrumental numbers, dances by the girls and two eccentric dances by the man. There was also incorporated in the prologue a college yell by the ensemble. This incident was practically a riot all week, winning so much applause that it was nearly impossible to continue with the show. The result was that thousands who saw it circulated the news outside of the theatre and the people came flocking in.

"In view of that fact and the big success of all our prologues, it would be illogical for me to join in the opinion that the prologue is passing. In fact, it is only arriving, but the showman must know how to put it on for his individual theatre, or else lose the effect entirely.

"Space does not permit me to go into details concerning other prologues which we have used and which have brought home 'the bacon.' Suffice it to say that the prologue which is built upon the principles of entertainment should find favor with nearly any audience. However, the individual showman must judge for himself just what his theatre needs and he must also judge for himself how he is to put on his numbers to get the most out of them. It is impossible, in my opinion, for one set rule to be used by all theatres. Theatres are different in character just the same as are human beings, and what is good for one is sometimes poison to another."

RUSSELL F. BROWN, Director of Publicity, Eugene Greater Theatres Company, Eugene, Oregon, also comments in defense of the prologue.

An infinite interest in presentations and prologue presentation prompts me to express a regret in the condemnation of the latter by Major Edward Bowes, reproduced in your department this week.

Each, of course, is entitled to his own views on any subject, and while Major Bowes is not only privileged to his opinion, and may be right, personally I believe there is another angle to the prologue.

I believe it is generally admitted that the first consideration in either screen or stage material is to entertain. My idea of a prologue is that of a presentation set in the atmosphere of the feature picture to follow. It may be only "in keeping" with the style of picture, such as "Gems from Faust," sung in costume, before "The Phantom of the Opera," etc., the presentation going over on its musical entertainment, staging and lighting alone, and still belonging in style to the particular picture it precedes. We have, successfully, introduced prologues that led directly into the opening action of the picture, but we were very careful NOT to give any indication in those prologues of what the plot of the picture would unfold AFTER the opening. The idea of credit titles between prologue and opening scenes of the picture is purely one of managerial privilege; to cut all except title and cast, if the latter is necessary, is within the power of better judgment. Repeating, few prologues can be arranged to anticipate the opening scenes of a picture, but when that possibility arrives and the prologue is designed to entertain on its vocal, instrumental, dancing or stage effects; for who can deny the beautiful lighting harmonies possible in stage presentations no picture can attempt; why ignore that possibility?

I do not believe the purpose of the prologue has been outlived, but rather, in some cases, the purpose has been misunderstood, and quite naturally, misused.

The term "prologue" may, in itself, have been more than anything responsible, for, in an effort to create the atmosphere for pictures not readily "prologued," some managers have "lifted" big scenes, even climaxes from the film in question, perhaps. I agree, an attempt to compete with the camera in stupendous settings would result in a decided flop for the prologue which looks to me more like just real poor judgment on the part of the one responsible.

Personally, I favor soft, color blending settings, in which the setting is but a suggestion and more time is given to the routine and rehearsal of the entertainment the presentation is to provide. Here originality is given unlimited scope, and scores or nose-dives purely on its merits. But still, there should be no reason, no excuse to "steal" the theme of a presentation from its co-unit, the picture.

"The Merry Widow" and "The Big Parade" are two examples of sure-fire presentation possibilities. "The Merry Widow" music; the patriotic spirit of "The Big Parade."

If the box office says the great American public want "something on the stage" WITH the picture program, and reports seem

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Time, The Comedian"
(Metro Goldwyn Mayer)

Music—Overture: "Leonore No. 3," Beethoven.

The Capitol Grand Orchestra conducted by David Mendoza, truly felt the spirit of Beethoven, while rendering this most beautiful of the overtures from the opera "Fidelio." In commemoration of Beethoven's 150th birthday, the bust of the composer was mounted on a pedestal with a wreath hung on it, this was placed center stage in first and the close in drapes were drawn part way.

Lighting—Orchestra flooded from top with blue—hangings toned canary and green with purple projected foliage across top—bust of Beethoven, spotted canary—the tone on the hangings changed to all green and the drawn drapes headlighted magenta from foots and cross baby spots, this changes to green foots with change to magenta flood on orchestra and all purple on hanging drapes with projected cathedral windows in canary on side drapes changes to green. For finale, all toned lights dimmed off.

Unit No. 3—Marjorie Harcum and William Robyn, "Lullaby Lane," Wood-De Costa.

Setting—A drop hung in second—Painted to represent an end of a living room—fire place center, over which was painted a tapestry, a transparency, on either side of this, a long French window—on stage at right of fire place a lounging chair and a standing lamp—Mr. Robyn seated in a chair sings and joined in song by Miss Harcum, who is seen in a spot behind transparency.

Lighting—Stand lamp with foots—with spot on singer behind transparency.

Unit No. 4—Plantation Revels. (a) "Swanee River." A motion picture with several very beautiful mirrored water shots and a lot of titles—this fades away as we hear Southern melodies, with mixed voices, the lights on stage are brought up disclosing—(b)—Dixie Jubilee Singers in a cycle of Southern Melodies and Negro Spirituals; (a) "Swanee River," (b) "Stand Steady," (c) "Down South," (d) "Steal Away."

Setting—Against a drop painted to represent cotton plantation, hung in fourth were a group of Darkies at rest (a couple of them dancing). Old trees form the second and third wings with top borders, of the long hanging moss forming a very pretty arch across stage. A set fence across stage in third with opening at R. C. A few baskets of cotton and a rustic bench completed the set.

Lighting—Magenta top and side floods in third—green top and border first and second, white X-ray across top in first, Magenta changes to blue as act finishes, giving a pretty afternoon to night effect.

Unit No. 6—Doris Niles, Jack Triesalt and Capitol Ballet. "The Skaters," Waldteufel (arranged in modern rhythm by Herman Hand).

Setting—Beautifully arranged pine tree setting, heavily covered with snow—leg pieces right and left permit entrance on and off fourth only—the general effect, is the uneven edges of a lake, with the snow covered land, rising from the ice covered water—ground cloth of white and blue tone, which gave splendid ice effect. Leg pieces were cut outs.

Costumes—Fancy fur trimmed, all white skating togs.

Lighting—Green on dimmers to side drapes, with projected foliage—green foots, blue on dimmers, tops and cross side banks in second, soft green flood over all—color wheel on, split ballet from each side, with white spot on principals, for finale.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

De Pace, the mandolin virtuoso; Pauline Miller, prima donna of musical comedy; the Mark Strand male quartette and an augmented mixed chorus of sixteen, are featured in the musical program at the Mark Strand Theatre this week in Joseph Plunkett's "Mark Strand Frolics of 1926."

Carl Edouarde conducts the symphony orchestra, with Alois Reiser associate, and John Hammond and Frederick Smith at the organ. Special music for the Frolics has been written by Jacques Gruenberg, associate conductor of the symphony orchestra, and arranged by Cecil Copping, in charge of orchestrations.

MANGAN LEAVES CAPITOL THEATRE

Surprise and regrets were expressed in motion picture circles in Chicago this week when the announcement was made that Francis A. Mangan had resigned as Manager of Productions at the Capitol Theatre.

Presentations had played such an important part in building up the fame and prominence of Chicago's Capitol that Mangan was supposed to be a permanent fixture there, not only had the stage presentations put the Capitol over with a tremendous public approval, but they were also much in demand by other large motion picture theatres throughout the middle west, and were railroaded to the Grand-Riviera, Detroit, Alhambra, Milwaukee, and Fond du Lac, Wisconsin as well as the new Ambassador on Chicago's West Side.

The preesnt week's bill is more on the order of the general vaudeville line-up and it remains to be seen if the Capitol can hold the place it has gained with the movie public without the aid of the big flash Mangan presentations.

No announcement is made of Mangan's future plans but it is generally understood that he is going in the production field on an independent basis.

In Defence of The Prologue

to indicate such a condition, why not give it to them "in keeping" with the feature picture. Surely the progressive manager tries to program his short subjects, music and feature picture as one complete show. Music IS the logical medium of interpreting the mood and character of the picture story, but during the actual showing of the film, the music should ACCOMPANY the picture, and in the mind of the audience, the music should not consciously be heard, but the picture is SEEN through different eyes because of the spell the music creates IN the picture. Good music does so, poor music, at best, distracts and makes the picture likewise poor.

The possibility of the presentation, then, is to present musical features, enjoyable on their own merits, that the audience may LISTEN wtih individual attention. If they like it, they remember it as part of the complete show, relieving the picture of some responsibility, which justifies the box office statement.

The capacity or admission must take care of the cost of the presentation, not the booking of a cheap picture to offset the stage bill. Few will go ONLY for the stage specialities, and if the "word of mouth" has it that the theatre has a knockout presentation, "but the picture is terrible," count that day lost, and as many more as your bookings know.

Numerous pictures have broken house records, even in key cities, without presentations of any kind, without even a short subject or organ solo on the bill. Some use those examples to show that presentation costs are the height of folly, vanity, or what have you? —but I believe good presentations, novel organ solos, short-subject novelties and other program bits, if not in excess of the gross, quite naturally, are permanent patronage builders. They serve to give the theatre in which they are presented, and with which the public is educated to associate them, the best of the deal in the long run. The circus gets by with murder, and turns 'em away everytime it comes back, but we shouldn't forget, the circus only comes ONCE a year, which if we look forward to toasting the shins nightly, day in and day out 'til the big curtain rings down, we really ought not to [illegible] the cashier wear a mask and carry a gun.

[illegible] year, our finicky friends, the public, may demand their pictures shown on the ceiling, that they may recline while being entertained, and if such condition arises, it will be rather difficult to favor stage presentations. As the present vogue in theatricals not only makes presentations possible (that's how many times?) but even encourages them to the point of being profitable, I don't think it is so much a matter of personal opinion, but of "giving it to 'em!" You may have a personal crush on tragedies, and book one, and your box office may tell you your taste is entirely your own.

Synchronizing Stage and Screen Subject

A Moving Picture World Presentation, by Colby Harriman

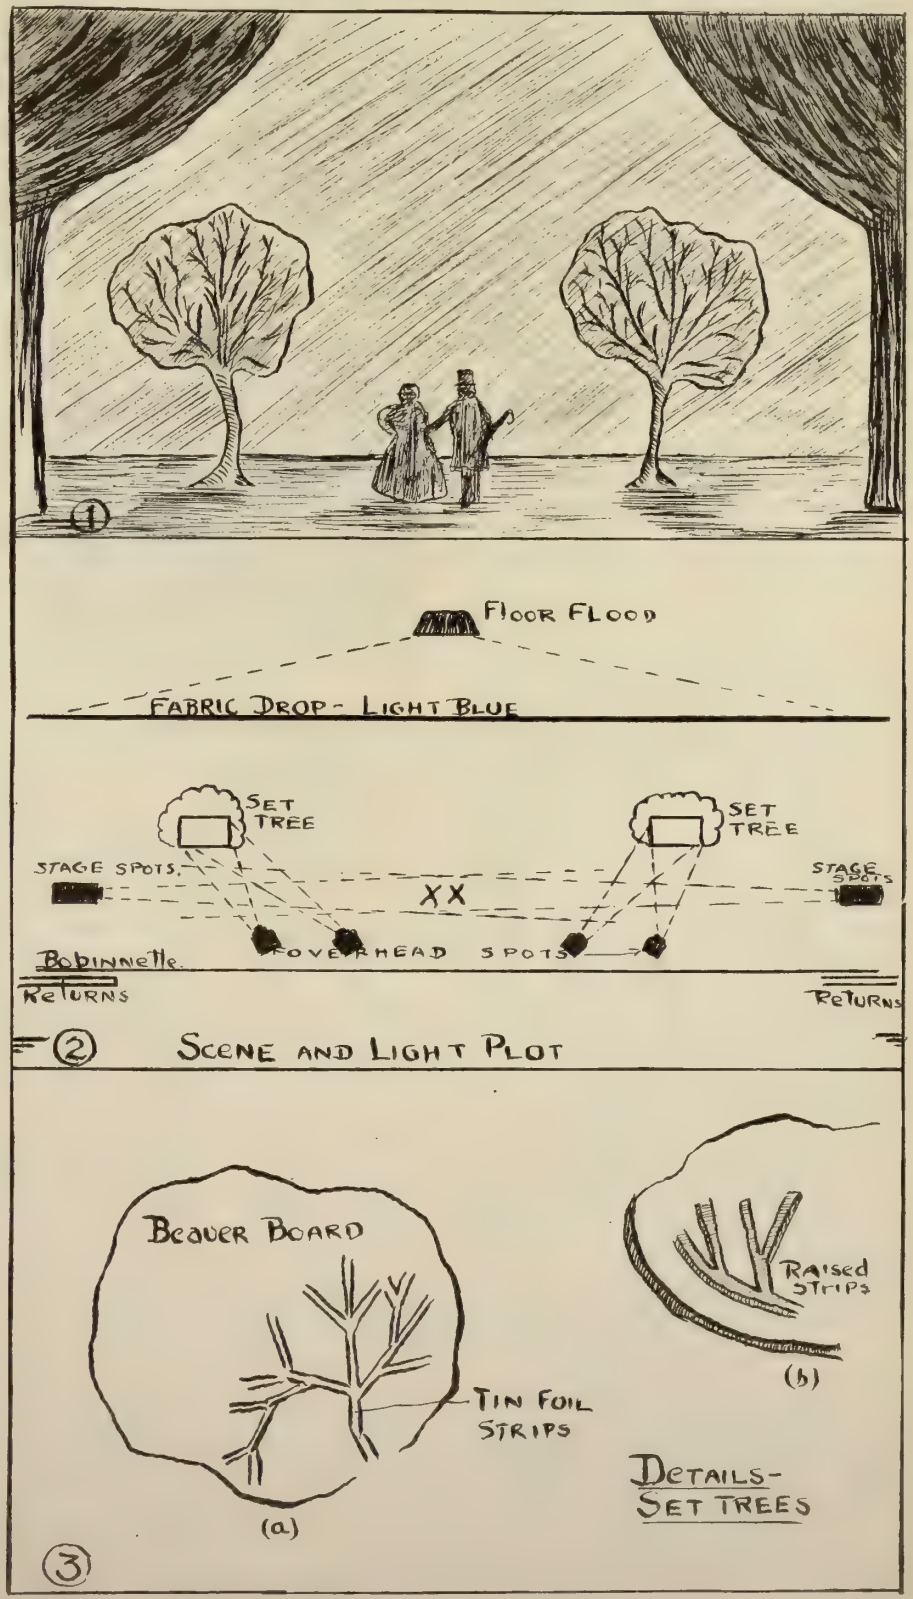
A SYNCHRONIZATION of a stage feature with a screen subject may be catalogued as a surefire number on practically any program. These stage and screen novelties carry with them a certain artisticness which add finesse to the production. We have been very successful during the last few months with the actual production of such numbers, and are submitting this presentation suggestion which we feel will meet with the approval of practically any audience.

The routine may be described briefly. Two characters, a man and woman dressed in 1860 costumes, sing a song of springtime. At the end of the song lights dim as the first scenes of the picture, a scenic, are flashed on the bobinette or scrim. The scenic which should have its titles eliminated should be a succession of pretty shots depicting Nature in its moods of Spring, through Summer and Autumn up to Winter. As the Winter scenes are flashed the lights on the scene are brought up as the two singers finish with a spirited song of Winter.

The Scene: Two constructed trees are set right and left center. A plain background and heavy drapes framing in the bobinette in the foreground constitute the set.

Scene and Light Plot: A bobinette or a well-sewn scrim should be hung at the curtain line. Plush drapes should be hung in sweeping folds to frame in the scene. The two trees which we will detail later are placed midway of the set. A fabric drop of light blue material is hung back. A floor flood should be placed back of the fabric drop and in the first number when the singers appear the scene should suggest Spring, and a variegated medium of rose and canary should be placed in the flood so that it cones the back drop. In the last scene this medium should be a deep blue to contrast with the lights on the trees. Stage spots should be placed right and left masked down to eliminate any spill light on the bobinette or the back drop, and focused on the characters at center, indicated with a XX. Orange amber should be used in the stage spots. Four overhead spots should be hung on a battan, two focused on each tree. Two of the spots should carry a green medium and two should be blanks, or frost may be used. The green spots focused on the set trees in the first movement and the white spots on the trees in the last movement. No lights in front of the bobinette.

Set Trees: The crown or top of the tree may be constructed out of a large piece of beaver board mounted on a standard. The limbs and branches of the tree should be indicated with strips and tinfoil pasted on the beaver board. Prior to placing the tinfoil on the surface the tree should be painted a neutral color such as a light green grey to make the limbs and branches more apparent. Strips of beaver board may be cut out and placed in the formation over the surface and the tinfoil placed on top of these strips. This will raise the tinfoil and permit a better lighting such as indicated in "B." When the green spot is focused on the tree in the first movement, the branches will glisten against the body of green, and when the white is thrown on this surface for the last or Winter scene the lighting will prove most effective.



The Picture: It is suggested that a scenic be secured which is very colorful. There are so many subjects available through the various exchanges which may be used, and in many cases the exchange will cooperate in combining a group of their best scenic shots for such a number.

The Characters: The scene at the opening should depict the characters as youthful and in the last scene as an old couple. A costume change may be effectively used.

Let's Hand Out Some Bouquets

DAVID W. STRAYER is one of them boys which knows the difference between a Geneva movement and them which shakes the floor when you do the Charleston.

Dave is sure a good pal to the poor, hard workin' Print—that bein' me.

Don't seem like I got none too many pals, neither. So, when this pal which has been referred to as above, writes in and sends a letter about me, I feel as puffed up as a puff-adder which has got the mumps.

Dave does the projectin' at the Mount Joy Theatre in the town of ditto name and State of Pennsylvania—the only time he does any "operatin'" is when he gets one of my kind which is full of bum splices due to carelessness in some exchange.

Well, Dave sends a letter which he has sat down and wrote, as I say, and in this letter he springs somethin' that sure is the fish's adenoids for class.

Instead of beefin' and kiyowdlin' about let's kick the pants of each and every exchange because they sends such rotten prints, Dave spills this:

LET'S TELL ABOUT THE GOOD ONES!

That means the exchanges and the exhibitors which helps to protect the poor, hard workin' print.

So this is how let's do:

Down under here is put in a blank, which means a place with lines for you to write on.

Take this blank and if you are in an exchange, set down and write on the blank the name of the exhibitor in your territory who sends back prints in THE BEST CONDITION!

If you are a projectionist or an exhibitor, set down and write in on the blank the name of the EXCHANGE which sends you the prints IN THE BEST CONDITION.

DO IT—AND DO IT NOW!

I have asked Van to collect all these letters and blanks from you and he will find out who is the one that gets praised, from readin' these blanks—then he will have an honor roll in YOUR EQUIPMENT and he will print and publish in this Honor Roll the names of these exhibitors and these exchanges.

That will tell the world who protects the Print.

So, now, set right down and write to Van and say who is the exchange or who is the exhibitor which returns prints to YOU in the best condition.

Here is the blank with all the things showed which protects the Print.

Use it to tell WHO protects the print for you!

And Still They Come—

RIGHT on the heels of Mr. Louis B. Mayer's very interesting chat about studio equipment, which is completed this week, we are proud to have still another peach of a chat, exxlusive and mighty well worth your attention—from E. H. Allen, general manager of Educational Studios, where they produce comedies and other short subjects expeditiously and with high grade equipment.

Watch for this chat next week. If you are a studio executive it will interest you immensely—and if you are in laboratory or theatre you will find it equally entertaining because it shows just how far the modern studio executive is prepared to go in making quality a positive quantity.

Shooting Straight

JOE HORNSTEIN gets out a little magazine in the interest of the finer types of equipment and distributes it to the folks who buy that sort of equipment from Howells Cline Equipment Corporation.

The special reason for mentioning this little publication, called CINE-SHOTS, is the following item reprinted because it shoots straight to the mark in the campaign for more understanding of projector value and quality.

Read—and remember—

The Projectionist is held responsible BUT is it always his fault? You cannot expect worn out apparatus to function perfectly. His mechanical ability may pull you out of a hole, but this does not make a permanent repair.

Give the projectionist good equipment. See that he takes care of it. Then you can hold him responsible. Make your inspections of apparatus at stipulated intervals with the projectionist thus permitting timely repairs to be made.

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios Make Equipment Help Quality

Mr. Louis B. Mayer concludes informal chat of which the first portion was given you last week.

ONE of the important departments is the electrical department, headed by Louis Kolb. You see, we don't use sunlight much any more; artificial light is much more direct and certain that it makes perfect photography three times as sure. About 90 per cent. of our pictures are taken under artificial light.

"This requires two transforming plants, where alternating current is changed to direct in units of three 300 kilowatt motor generators, capable of an overload of 100 per cent.; a total capacity of 3,600 kilowatts. To reduce this to non-technical language, consider that an average electric light bulb consumes one kilowatt an hour, and the average home has nine such lamps. In other words our plant could light 7,200 average homes.

"One moment ten sets may be consuming power—the next perhaps none. The wide fluctuation of strain on the plants mean that special apparatus and equipment must be used.

"The sources of light are various types of arcs, from the huge ten foot sunlight arcs, giant searchilghts, to the little General Electric Company twin arcs. These are placed in position by squads of electricians. Each spotlight requires a constant attendant—besides a moving crew.

Making Old Tapestries.

"The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios have a device unique in its efficiency in the handling of the overhead Cooper Hewitt banks—which furnish light by mercury arcs, and which, I notice, have lately been developed as factory work lights.

"We have overhead tracks by which they can be moved to any part of the ceiling of each stage, and motor cranes that raise or lower them. In other studios these lights have to be shifted by hand—a vast waste of time and labor that our system overcomes.

"But better than the saving of time—it enables us to surely and efficiently concentrate our light on a given point—and obtain such effects in photography as are noticeable in 'The Merry Widow,' 'The Masked Bride' and 'La Boheme.'

Old Masters Made to Order at M.-G.-M. Studios.

"Another great factor is the property shop—a four-story building crammed with every imaginable article, so arranged that it can be produced at a moment's notice.

"But this great collection of articles isn't enough to satisfy every sudden call—so there is a shop where properties can be made to order—a toy factory, a furniture alteration shop, an upholstery shop—and a shop where special tools can be made. We make all our own tools, as most have to be specially designed for a special use.

"In other words—in two days' notice we can produce nearly any article—no matter how difficult it is to make.

"As I said before—picture making is essentially a creative art—the author evolves a tale of a foreign land—or perhaps of modern New York—and then the technicians have to make his dream a reality. The dream takes form through the work of hundreds of men, using every possible form of ingenuity to make a vision a reality—against time.

"It means men—trained men—and tools—the best tools. It means huge electric generators, giant searchilghts; delicate tools of jewelers; sculptors working in tons of plaster. And—they are all striving to get out perfect work in the time, almost, that it takes to think about it.

"Equipment is the only answer: We have the best—and all we can get of it—always.

"An army moves on its belly—the motion picture industry moves on its machinery."

A Patron Puller Is Winnipeg'sNewClassic

GEORGE A. GRAHAM had that "smile that won't come off" when he saw them piling into his new Classic Theatre, Winnipeg's newest, and as neat a patron-getting theatre as Canada can boast.

The new theatre, seating six hundred on the orchestra floor and with provision for four hundred more patrons in the balcony, is up to date in every respect. They know how to build them up in Canada, and they realize—at least Mr. Graham does—that merely throwing doors open on a new theatre isn't all there is to it: he made his plans for patronage pulling away before that, by installing every up-to-the-minute equipment feature possible.

The lighting as well as heat and ventilation are all under the single control of the projectionist, in his well appointed room, heart of the theatre.

Frank Bonnetti, the projectionist in question, had a lot to say in the planning and arrangement of this system of control for bettering projection, lighting and other audience comforts; so he knows all about the installation and can take an intelligent interest in the work for which he was allowed to plan.

Carl Louis Gregory Is Added to Faculty

THE New York Institute of Photography is steadily forging ahead in its policy of progressiveness. One of the most important steps taken by the Institute was that which added Carl Louis Gregory, F. R. P. S., to their faculty. Mr. Gregory is widely known as an authority upon motion pictures and the author of one of the most widely read text-books ever published dealing with that work. In pursuance of the same policy, the New York Institute announces that they have added to their faculty Herbert C. McKay, M. R. P. S., who is also widely known as an authority upon motion pictures and the author of the first text-book ever published dealing exclusive with the amateur aspects of the art. Mr. Gregory and Mr. McKay collaborated in designing the new motion picture camera recently introduced by the New York Institute and it is rumored that they will collaborate further in the preparation of a series of up-to-the-minute text-books dealing with the latest advances in the world of the motion picture.

Realize Importance of the Best Equipment

THEATRE owners around New York territory are not backward about admitting that the best is not only the cheapest but is also the only kind of equipment to hold patronage these days.

Proving it is the report of these exhibitors who let it be known that they get what they want—with co-operation, from Independent Movie Supply Company, Inc.

Faulkner's Strand Theatre, East Orange, N. J., put in two Powerlite low intensity lamps and Westinghouse motor generator sets.

The Olympic Theatre, Newark, purchased an automatic enclosed motor driven rewinder.

Bolognino's 58th St. Theatre on 58th street and 8th avenue, New York City, is to open December 25th with equipment consisting of two Powers projectors with Powers low intensity, spotlight and Imsco special low intensity screen.

William Salkin's Monroe Theatre at First avenue and 76th street, to open January 15th has equipment consisting of 2 Powers projectors with General Electric high intensity, one dissolving stereopticon, one heavy duty spotlights, Hoffman & Sons rheostats, one Imsco high intensity screen and other equipment.

Liberty Theatre, Plainfield, N. J. Mr. Saccardi to open December 25th, with equipment consisting of two Powers projectors with Powerlite low intensity, two Westinghouse motor generator sets, a 13x18 inch Imsco special low intensity screen and other equipment.

Ruckle Bros. Palace Theatre, Bergenfield, N. J., installed a new Westinghouse motor generator and two Powerlite low intensity lamps and one 12x16 foot screen.

Ruckle Bros. Dumont Theatre, in Dumont, N. J., to open January 15th. Equipment consisting of two Powers projectors with Powerlite low intensity, one Westinghouse generator, spotlight and Imsco special low intensity screen and all other equipment.

Golding's new Roslyn Theatre, Roselle, N. J., to open January 1st, took two Powers projectors with Powerlite low intensity, one Westinghouse motor generator, Imsco low intensity screen, spotlight and stereopticon dissolver.

Faulkner's Madison Theatre, Madison, to open January 15th, has two Powers projectors with Powerlite low intensity, one Westinghouse motor generator, spotlight and stereopticon dissolver and Imsco low intensity screen.

"Not so big, but the picture seems to be clearer than a lot of places I've been in"—overheard at B. S. Moss' Cameo Theatre in New York.

Berry Completes Circle Improvements

EXTENSIVE improvements in the decorations and equipment of the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis, designed for the comfort of the patrons and the more effective presentation of the theatre's programs, have recently been completed, Ace Berry, general manager announces.

The alterations were made over a period of several months during the hours when the theatre was not open to the public, thereby not interfering with the regular schedule of performances.

The most important change was the reseating of the entire main floor of the theatre with leather-covered spring cushion seats. Crystal chandeliers placed in the theatre foyer and lounge were obtained in Europe especially for use in the theatre.

The entire system of lighting controls for the auditorium and the stage has been replaced with an equipment which will permit a large range of dimming and blending of colored lights in the auditorum and off stage effects.

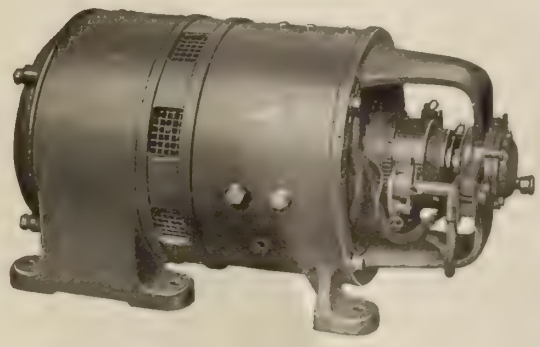
Stern Is Busy

JOSEPH STERN, of Joseph Stern Theatrical Enterprises, has purchased ground in Bound Brook, N. J., for the erection of a building containing a theatre seating 1500, and stores and offices. The plot has a frontage of 300 feet on Hamilton Street and a depth of 150 feet.

Cut the power cost for reflector type arcs

THAT'S just what you can do with the Roth Actodector; bring power costs down and at the same time get steadier light on the screen, simple operation, and a compact, trouble-free installation. The Actodector meets every requirement of operation, with quiet, smooth-running efficiency; its compact design saves space, its high efficiency saves power and simplifies the operator's work, for the Actodector takes care of all operating conditions without attention or adjustment.

The Roth Actodector is a compact, efficient unit with ample power for all operating requirements.



Send for the Actodector bulletin, which has a complete description of the superior features of this modern power supply for motion picture arcs.

Precision Distributes Models of Perfected Liberty Syncrovertor

PRECISION MACHINE COMPANY has taken over the distribution of new, perfected models of the Liberty Syncroverter. An explanation of the uses, types and installation methods are described by M. R. White, Vice-president of Liberty Electric Corporation, Stamford, Connecticut, as follows:

It being an accepted fact that a direct current arc is the only type that gives the proper luminosity so necessary for the perfect projection of motion pictures, the theatre owner and projectionist will be interested in the Liberty Syncrovertor now ready.

For years the motor generator set has been the commonly used method of conversion. As in all fields of endeavor an improved type of apparatus for the conversion of alternating current was inevitable. The Liberty Syncrovertor, a truly synchronous commutating rectifier is the revolutionary improvement in this field.

The Syncrovertor development started with the knowledge that no standard synchronous type motor was satisfactory for the perfect commutation necessary for the rectification of current. Therefore, it was necessary to work out an entire mechanism around the motor as rectification through commutation in principle had been proved.

In describing this unit it should be borne in mind that ordinary so-called synchronous motors are all comparatively high-speed motors, and it is absolutely essential for proper commutation and life of brushes and commutator to have a motor that is truly synchronous and non-hunting at a low speed. The speed of the Syncrovertor at sixty cycles is nine hundred revolutions per minute, which permits the use of a commutator six inches in diameter against a diameter of from three to four inches used in previous attempts to solve the problem.

As early as 1919 The Electrical Testing Laboratories in New York, conducted a very exhaustive test run. The oscillagraph records, which are a part of the report of this test, show no inverse current, which means complete and sparkless rectification.

The present perfected model of the Syncrovertor is of a horizontal type and consists of an eight segment commutator rotated about a horizontal axis by means of the Syncrovertor motor.

The motor consists of a polarized Rotor having no windings whatsoever, revolving in a distributed stator winding, the latter being divided into two sections: one a running winding and the other the starter or inactive winding. The motor is brought to speed as any ordinary induction motor. At the moment of passing through synchronism the field is automatically excited from the rectifying commutator.

The motor is now no longer an induction motor, but a single phase synchronous motor absolutely non-shunting and with positively no phase displacement under any voltage or frequency variation within limits greatly in excess of the usual line voltage and frequency changes. The commutator, which is six inches in diameter and of varying widths, depending upon the rating of the Syncrovertor is made of alternate segments which are mechanically and electrically united and the two structures so formed are connected to the alternating current supply through sliding contacts made between stationary copper rings and rotating carbon discs, both rings and discs being concentric with the axis of rotation. Rectified current is collected from the commutator by carbon brushes joined electrically into two groups. The brush holder studs are mounted on a yoke which can be rotated through a small angle about the commutator, thereby shifting the commutator point for best rectification.

The alternating current voltage impressed upon the commutator is reduced by means of a transformer from normal line voltage to a suitable slip ring voltage.

In adapting the Syncroverter to the moving picture field, that is for rectifying the alternate current for moving picture arcs, a practically self-contained unit has been developed. The type 25 Syncrovertor was developed especially for the reflecting type arc lamp now so universally used.

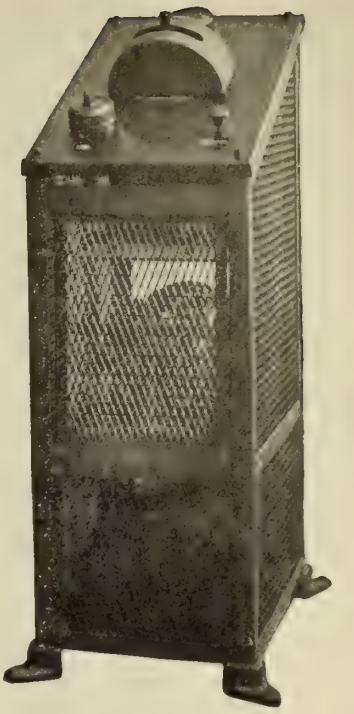
In the type 25 Syncrovertor, the entire unit has been put in a structural steel framework entirely enclosed in steel mesh, and with a panel board mounted on the top at an angle. The transformer of proper size for the particular current specifications where the installation is to go, is mounted in the lower compartment of this case. The Syncrovertor proper that is, the motor and commutator is mounted in a compartment directly above the transformer.

The switch board of the type 25 Syncrovertor carries a double scale O-center voltmeter, directly below is a double pole double throw switch, horizontally mounted and entirely covered. The purpose of this switch is to insure the proper polarity at the arc. The projectionist upon starting the machine throws this switch to right or left as indicated by the needle of the voltmeter.

The switch board also carries the main line or power switch which is of snap switch type and a small starting push button which is pushed down and held, possibly for five seconds to properly start the motor. Ammeter and amperage control for each arc are also mounted on the board.

When it is desirable to install the Syncrovertor in a room outside of the projection room and yet to have variable control elements at the hand of the projectionist, a separate control panel is provided which carries an ammeter and an individual current control for each arc. This panel board is small and compact and may be installed anywhere in the projection room convenient to the projectionist.

From the foregoing description of the Syncrovertor it will be seen that the rectification is done entirely in or through the commutator and all of the power that is required by the motor is to overcome brush friction, and the normal friction of the motor itself, which is very slight due to the fact that it is mounted on large ball bearings. Therefore, the power consumed at no-load on a comparative basis is practically negligible.



Liberty Syncroverter.

The Syncrovertor is a single phase unit thus operating either on the power or light line; has unity power factor, which by the way is a very important factor today when determining power rates. While the Syncrovertor operates on single phase it will also operate from a three-phase supply by simply using two legs of the circuit.

The Syncrovertor is so built that it automatically supplies additional current required when the second arc is struck so that the first arc is not robbed.

Better Projection Pays

Bluebook School

Question No. 439—Gosh! Here is John Griffith again. That Connecticut Son-of-a-Gun must have accumulated the idea that all I have to do is nothing except figger out his puzzles.

Well, just for luck I'll fool 'im once and permit a few of those holding down positions which justify us in assuming that they have such matters at their finger's end. Here is Griffith's last mental explosion:

"I believe too much emphasis has been placed on the fade-away of screens having high reflection powers, as compared with the natural falling off in illumination due to distance. In order to direct attention to this latter I beg to admit the following practical question.

"Given a screen 18x13.50 feet in dimensions, and a total of 4,860 lumens—a brilliancy of illumination approximating that supplied by a 120 ampere H I arc—and assuming the distribution of light on the screen to be even; also that locating points on accompanying diagram are on a horizontal plane at right angles to the center of the screen, find the candle power at the intersecting points in the diagram as reflected from the center of the screen, first for screen surface No. 14, page 263 of the Bluebook, and second, for surface No. 27, same page. In this we assume the photometer to have a reflection surface corresponding to screen No. 1 page 261 of the Bluebook."

Now let us see what kind of a stagger YOU could make at telling YOUR manager candle power of the reflected light would be at any given point in YOUR auditorium, characteristics of screen surfaces being known—and right here let it be known that very soon this department will publish the official tests of all screen surfaces now prominently before the theatre world. The Eastman Company is now making the tests, or rather has just made them, for I think they must by now be finished. They should be available in a week or two.

But, I hold that men holding high official position in Projection should, and if they be competent men in their position, MUST be thoroughly familiar with such matters as this.

I therefore issue a direct and most cordial invitation to Jack Griffith—an able man, by the way—Supervisor of Projection for the Famous Players circuit of theatres, "Mike" Campbell, Supervisor of Projection for the Loew theatre circuit, Charles Johnson, Supervisor of Projection for the Fox theatre circuit, and Charles Dentlebeck, Supervisor of Projection for the Paramount circuit of theatres in Canada, to send in a solution of this questions which they have THEMSELVES prepared.

Doubtless these various gentlemen, each of whom holds high positions in the projection field, will consider this a very simple matter, since they of course, have all such necessary knowledge at their finger's end, and can, therefore, all work the illumination value of the various points out in a few moments. However, there will, I think, be quite some considerable interest among projectionists and others all over the country in seeing if they all make no errors, sending in the perfect results they would of necessity have to produce, did their employers, or any of the managers of the theatres under them, ask the same thing regarding any or all of the various theatres in the chain, and the various screen surfaces available.

The "locating points" are, of course, the points at which the straight lines cross the curved lines. Looks as though it would be a rather big job to figure out all those points, but it really is not—IF YOU KNOW HOW.

Inasmuch as I shall wish to publish the answers of these various men eminent in projection affairs, I will ask no other question this week.

Of course answers are NOT limited to them, however. All Supervisors of Projection and all projectionists are invited to make reply. I have only named these four men because they hold highly important positions, hence must, to be competent, understand these matters thoroughly. Their replies should therefore be very informative, and I am sure they will all be delighted to have the opportunity thus presented.

L. R. HOWARD, Des Moines, Iowa, writes:

Dear Mr. Richardson: I have had an argument. The question is: How many moving picture theatres are there in this country and Canada? Will you be good enough to settle the matter for us. We have made a bet of a dinner and show for our families—wives and two daughters each, so be careful to get it right. If I lose we go to a "one-arm." If the other fellow loses—no one-arm for mine.

If those daughters are not to exceed ten years old I'd like to bring the answer in person, sit in on the dinner, with the kiddies as my guests, and they'd eat in no one-arm I betcha!

The last reliable statistics I have were gathered in 1924. They are for the United States of America only. I don't know whether they include all vaudeville-picture theatres or not, but presume they do. I have no reliable data on the number of theatres in Canada. Can Chas. Dentlebeck, Toronto, Ontario, give me any statistics on that?

The number of theatres in the U. S. of A. in 1924 was 17,834, divided as follows: Seating 100 to 247, 5,124. Seating 250 to 499, 6,666. Seating 500 to 799, 3,151. Seating 800 and more, 2,893.

Incidentally you will observe that this department plays to quite a "house" every week. At the rate of one projectionist or machine attendant to the theatre, there are almost 18,000 of them in this country alone, at least two-thirds of whom, I venture the positive assertion, read the department. But surely we may presume that at least one-third of them have more than one man in the projection room, which would add 6,000, making a total of 24,000 in this country alone, and two-thirds of 24,000 is 16,000.

Then, too, I know that most Canadian projectionists read the department quite regularly, and it is pretty well followed in far-off Australia and New Zealand, and, to a very much smaller extent, in some other countries.

Well, friend Howard, when you sit down to that dinner in the Capitol City of my home state, kiss the wife for—yourself (Got fooled did'n ya!) and the kiddies—if they are kiddies—for me. Then eat, drink and be merry, for tomorrow ye will probably have t' work.

Asks Aid on Film Splices

FROM a small town in southern Texas comes this letter. Now don't some of you wise ones giggle too foolishly, because there was a time, and perhaps not so fearfuly long ago either, when YOU were asking the wide world the same question, or if you were not at least you were wanting to. Here is the letter:

Will you please tell me how to overcome the making of film splices so that you won't have to frame so often while the picture is running Why is not the film put back into proper shape? Probably we don't all make the same patches.

Will you please explain just what is the right way to make a film splice? I have the Bluebook, but cannot understand the method described on page 279. Do you patch the film after it has run in the machine with the emulsion side up, rewinding it from left to right and cut the left hand side one quarter of an inch longer than the frame line, wet the stub ¼ inch and don't scrape the right hand side and then put the in the—and the writing is so poor that I can't make the rest out for certain.

Here is the process, described along the lines I think this man has in mind. As you rewind from left to right and find a break in the film, or some other reason why a splice should be made, you stop the rewinder and cut the film in two—if it is not already entirely parted. You then cut the left hand end (which should be emulsion side up), as shown at A, figure 79, page 279 of the Bluebook, not "one quarter of an inch longer than the frame line" as you say, but exactly half way between the first sprocket hole beyond the frame line and the end one. You then moisten the stub end (A, figure 79), and, using a steel straight-edge, held with its edge exactly on the frame line, and a sharp scraper (safety razor blades are excellent scrapers) scrape ALL the emulsion off the stub end. being very careful to (A) get all the emulsion off without removing too much of the underlying celluloid stock, which latter should be thoroughly roughened, however, and (B) to get all the emulsion off around the sprocket holes without injury to the said sprocket holes.

Next cut the other, or right hand end of the film off squarely at the last frame line —line between the last perfect picture and the torn or cut one. Turn the end over and scrape about an eighth of an inch of the length of the non-emulsion side, to roughen the celluloid and remove any dirt or oil which may be adhering to its surface.

You are now ready to make your splice, but should have a splice similar to the one shown on page 277 of the Bluebook. If you have not, then you should make a set of guide pins for yourself, as follows: On a piece of hard, close-grained wood, such as seasoned hickory, having a perfectly flat surface, paste a strip of white paper and let it dry thoroughly. Lay a piece of film on it and clamp it tight in some manner, so it cannot move. You might draw the ends around the ends of the block to the underside and tack them to the wood lightly.

Now, using a hard leadpencil sharpened to a very fine point, carefully outline two holes in each side of the film, near the center of the block, then skip two and outline two more on each side of the film. Then remove the film and make a centerpunch mark exactly in the center of each of the holes you have outlined. Next, selecting a drill which will make a hole an eight penny nail will drive into tightly, but without splitting the block of wood, drill each one of the holes you have centered clear through the block, and drive eight penny nails into each hole FROM THE UNDER SIDE, clear up to their heads.

Now cut off the nails, using a file or a good cutting plyer, about the height of a sprocket tooth above the wood, and then CAREFULLY file each nail to as nearly as you can the size and shape of a sprocket tooth.

If you have done this carefully, you should have a set of teeth which will be at least fairly accurate for making splices. At least they will be 999 per cent better than the finger matching method.

To make your splice, you know, USING GOOD FILM CEMENT (I would recommend Eastman's), which you should be able to get from your film exchange, and a small camel hair brush, apply cement to surface A, figure 79 of Bluebook, WITH ONE STROKE OF THE BRUSH ONLY, if you can do it without using too much cement, and at the same time get the entire surface well covered. DON'T RUB THE BRUSH BACKWARD AND FORWARD ACROSS THE FILM IN MAKING A SPLICE. For reasons it would require too much space to enumerate here, it weakens the splice to do this.

By the way, I forgot to say, before applying cement lay the stub end, with emulsion side up, on the left hand locating pins of the block I have described, if you have made one, and the right hand end of the film on the right hand pins, so that the ends lap properly between the two sets of pins. To apply cement you then raise up the upper end and bend it back. Having applied the cement drop the bend-up end down and, with a rubbing motion of your fingers, press it down TIGHTLY on the stub end, and with your thumb, or a pad made for the purpose, press it down as hard as you can for a few seconds, whereupon your splice is finished and done, and should be a good one.

There, brother, that is as plain as I am able to describe the process. As to why exchanges do not remove mis-frames—well, it is up to your manager to demand that they do it. As long as he accepts film with mis-frames, etc., so long will the average exchange continue to try to make YOU do their repair work gratis.

One thing more: I want to help you, and other small town men, BUT you have written me several times in the past, and at least on two occasions I just had to waste-paper basket the letter because, after a hard trial, I could not read it. Either be careful to write plainly, or have your letters typewritten.

The Probable Trouble

A PROJECTIONIST in a small town through which I ran an engine in days long gone by, who apparently wants his asking the question kept secret, asks:

"We have a problem which comes up once in a while, and would appreciate it if you will help us out on it. Practically all our pictures go on the screen as though they were painted there, but once in a while we get a feature which has an in-and-out-of-focus effect on the screen.

Could you advise me as to the cause of this? The tension springs and aperture plates on my projectors are in good condition. Is it due to poor photography, or what."

Inasmuch as you say the tension shoes and aperture plates of your projectors are in good shape, and inasmuch as most films run through without the least trouble, it is evident the fault lies in the films themselves. It is no new thing, and is probably due to wrong procedure in drying the films after development. The films are stretched slightly out of shape. If you will examine them very carefully, it is likely you will be able to detect the fault with your eyes. The film probably will not lay perfectly flat at points where the trouble occurs. When it passes over the aperture it buckles, thus throwing the center of the picture out of focus. There is nothing you can do about it except kick to the exchange.

Bluebook School Answers 417 to 420

Brother Fell, who has been absent from school, has brought a perfectly satisfactory "excuse." Illness in family and extra work. He will be back soon regularly.

Might remark that up to now I have but just one answer to Griffith's question No. 422 from the West Coast. Certainly thought more of the many high grade projectionists out there would have nerve enough to tackle it, but then there is still a week to hear from them.

Up to now only one member of the American Projection Society has made a try, though that distinguished body has three branches, and I am told the Washington branch is doing some really very good work. Oh well, I'll admit the question is one which is apt to make a lot of even the best men bat their eyes; but just wait until next week or week after, and you'll get another jolt from the Ansonia gink, darn 'im! But at that I think that out of this John is going to contribute something which will be entirely new, and which will have large value to the profession and to the industry at large.

Question No. 417—If 110 volt incandescent lamps using a total of 40 amperes be connected to one side of an Edison 3-wire circuit, and a motor using 15 amperes and an arc lamp using 22 amperes be connected to the other side, explain in detail what the action of the current would be.

This question was primarily designed to see if you understood the fact that current would act in series to operate incandescent lamps, motors, arc lamps and other equipment. That was my idea in asking the question. It is a bit surprising how some men who are very good in general knowledge will get balled up on a simple matter of this sort.

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, some one who writes in pale ink but fails to sign any of the sheets of his answer; W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island; Thomas J. McQuade, Pawtucket, Rhode Island; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Iillinois; G. E. Steele, Salt Lake City, Utah; Allan Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana, and Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico, all replied fair to excellent.

Colby says:

Regardless of what the nature of power consuming appliances may be, apparatus connected to the two sides of a 3-wire system will operate in series up to the capacity of the apparatus on the side having the least total load.

This is true of any single circuit, and I believe, (though on this point I am not positive) it also is true of any 3-wire system as a whole, except that if the mains carry high voltage which must be transformed down, or low voltage which is transformed up, then it would only hold good for the circuit or circuits supplied by any individual transformer. In other words, the balancing effect probably would not extend from one transformer-fed circuit to another transformer-fed circuit. (I never have had the question raised before. What is the idea of the rest of you about that point? To make it more clear: Suppose one transformer circuit were unbalanced so that there was fifty amperes excess load on the neutral and true positive side, while another transformer circuit was unbalanced with fifty amperes on the neutral and true negative side, these being the only two circuits working on the entire system, would any current return over the neutral, or would the thing balance? Editor).

In the question as quoted this, however, does not seem to apply, and the action would be that the apparatus on either side would work in series up to 37 amperes, the load on the motor-arc lamp side, and the other side would have an excess of 40—37 equals 3 amperes, which would return to the generator on that side on the neutral, if this load be on the true positive and neutral side. If the heavier load be on the other side, then the excess three amperes would come out on the neutral.

Very good, Brother Colby. I wish you a Merry Christmas—this is written two days before Turkey Day, so I can do that li'l thing.

Question No. 418—If all wires of an Edison 3-wire system be fused at 60 amperes, and on one side apparatus using 30 amperes be connected, while to the other side apparatus using 25 amperes be connected, would it be possible to, in addition to the above load, connect a 30 ampere projection arc without changing any of the fuses?

Everybody says yes to this one, and every one agrees it is yes because thirty amperes additional would only make a total of sixty amperes on the "heavy" side. But some one blundered. The question I intended to ask was: could a 40 ampere arc be added, the answer being that it would be possible, since only one fuse would be overloaded, and that by only five amperes, and fuses are presumed to stand a ten per cent. overload. Such a connection would not be one to be installed permanently of course, but it could be used as a temporary make-shift, making sure that the fuses made perfect electrical contact, so that no element of mechanical heat would be added.

Question No. 419—How would you proceed to select wire sizes for a given load, using a 3-wire circuit?

Doe says:

The apparatus on a 3-wire circuit works in series, except for any load which does not balance, hence it follows that no more current will flow in any one of the three wires than would flow in a 2-wire circuit carrying an equal amperage load.

I, therefore, would proceed exactly the same as though selecting wire sizes for a 2-wire circuit, insofar as has to do with the outside wires. Then I would install a neutral wire the same size as the outside ones.

To ascertain the correct size wires for a 2-wire circuit, one first ascertains the maximum number of amperes which will be used by the apparatus attached thereto. Then one selects the correct size wires for that amperage by means of a wire capacity table in any standard electrical book, or by means of table No. 1, page 70 of the Bluebook.

And that's that, for it's Christmas week and this is the very day in the evening of which Mr. Claus sets forth from Snowland, the North Pole, and performs the incredible feat of clambering down about fifty millions of sooty chimneys in one night. So I'm cutting it darned short. I've a grandson who is just now vociferously demanding attention. Incidentally, though, I want to most sincerely thank all of you who have sent Christmas cards and remembrances. The mailman here at home is talking about getting out an injunction against me, but I'm very happy—not because of the cards and presents, but because of your friendship, and it's his turn to worry.

Question No. 420—Should all wires have terminal lugs, and how should terminal lugs be attached to the wire?

Hanover says:

No, it would be impractical to put a terminal lug on lamp socket and other similar connections. It is, however, better to use terminal lugs wherever it is practical to do so, even with large wires, since a properly designed lug not only provides a stronger mechanical connection, but also usually makes an electrically better one, too.

Lugs which are to be used at connections, where there is no heat other than that set up by the passage of the current itself, should be soldered to the wire. Lugs to be used where there is mechanical heat, such as at rheostat terminals or inside a projector lamphouse, must be clamped to the wire, or made by compressing the wire between parts of the clamp.

Excellent, Brother Hanover. Excellent. Hope you enjoy your turk E, and that Burlington is no more hilly than it was when I lived there forty-eight years ago.

Remarkable and Instructive Demonstration

EDISON LAMP WORKS of the General Electric Company stages a lighting demonstration which all should see.

A couple of weeks ago the Editor of this department and his friend daughter visited the Harrison Lamp Works of the General Electric Company, over at Harrison, in that "Home of the Trusts," New Jersey, on business, and while there, through the courtesy of J. H. Kurlander and J. C. Kroesen, were shown many interesting things.

For one thing there is a demonstration of the possibilities of lighting, as applied to business, to street lighting, to the theatre and to the home, which is little short of amazing in its thorough completeness. It is a thing which every person in the country ought to see, and may see if they will visit the plant at Harrison, as it is staged at any time, willingly and without cost to the visitor.

Certainly any theatre manager or business man within a hundred miles of Harrison who does not witness it is overlooking a BIG bet. We were both little less than astounded at the difference intensity in lighting makes in the effect in a room or store, and in the appearance of goods displayed. True we see it in stores and on the streets, but do not realize what the effect is until we see the changes made in light intensity right before our eyes, and watch the effect. It often is fairly startling.

In theatre work we witnessed one of the most charming light effects we have ever looked at, made on a plain neutral gray colored curtain. There were at least a dozen effects shown, and the method of applying the color was absurdly simple. It was all done by means of colored lamps immediately above the curtain, but, oh boy! how charming some of the results were. The color blending was little short of marvelous.

This particular thing is intended to synchronize with appropriate music, but may be used without any music at all, if desired.

I feel that it cannot possibly be too strongly recommended that exhibitors visit Harrison and view the demonstration. If it does nothing else it will open your eyes to the tremendous value of proper, intelligent lighting. And mark you well, all this is no mere gush of words—no bouquet for the folks over there, or for the General Electric. I have just told you my impression of what I myself saw, and its reactions upon my mind. Projectionists will also do well to look the demonstration over, and thus gain added respect for the thing they handle—light—and the possibilities in its intelligent use.

THE LAST AMERICAN FRONTIER

ON THE LITTLE BIG HORN

Directed by EDWARD SEDGWICK

Presented by
CARL LAEMMLE

HERE IS A SPECTACULAR, THRILLING PICTURE THAT every red-blooded American will want to see. In it the great plainsman and hero-scout, Colonel George Custer, lives over again, as well as his gallant comrades, and the scenes in which he won his great glory are re-enacted with startling vividness.

IT IS THE STORY OF THE BATTLE OF THE LITTLE BIG Horn and the Custer Massacre in which the crafty villains were Chief John Gall and his treacherous Medicine Man, Sitting Bull. It portrays Custer's heroic efforts to subdue the Indians and defeat the graft-ring in Washington.

DURING THE ACTION, PRESIDENT GRANT, GEN. SHERMAN, Red Cloud and Sitting Bull, as well as various tribes of Indians, troops of cavalry, and several thousand others appear in a series of thrilling scenes. A beautiful love story runs through the play. A great, thrilling, American epic for every theatre in America.

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

A New Moving Picture World Service—
Presentations for Specific Pictures

ONCE again we enlarge the sphere of usefulness of the constructive trade paper through a new service, EXCLUSIVE with Moving Picture World.

For some time Moving Picture World has been the ONLY trade paper publishing a department devoted to the PRODUCTION of presentations for motion pictures.

This department, "The Theatre of Today," edited by Colby Harriman, has created general prologue ideas, diagramed them, devised routine to fit them, told how they may be built, suggested ways and means of achieving effects to fit STAGES of various size and POCKETBOOKS of various dimensions.

Mr. Harriman's department has been eminently useful to the MODERN school of exhibitors and presentation producers.

Beginning with this issue of Moving Picture World, the structure of Mr. Harriman's department is altered to make it more actively useful to many units of the industry.

From now on, in our department, "The Theatre of Today" you will find SPECIFIC presentations for SPECIFIC pictures. The INAUGURAL presentation under the NEW plan is one on F.B.O.'s story of the oil fields, "Flaming Waters."

The presentation for "Flaming Waters," as will be the case with all succeeding presentations, is PRACTICAL and EFFECTIVE. And ELASTIC, besides, so that it may be adapted to fit the requirements of any stage.

The presentation has unquestionably made box-office TRAFFIC heavier. It places the stamp of NEWNESS and AGGRESSIVENESS on the theatre which employs it soundly. It HOLDS the present patron and CREATES new patrons.

The exhibitor who has not gone in for the production of presentations, feeling that they are costly and that perhaps local shops and local craftsmanship could not SUPPORT him, will be surprised to find by consulting Mr. Harriman's department that STARTLING effects may be created at VERY low cost.

We will add that Mr. Harriman will be glad to advise any exhibitor THROUGH THE MAIL on the creation of costumes, stage or lighting effects, or any other problem found in your theatre FROM THE FOOTLIGHTS BACK.

To return to the new Moving Picture World service. The presentation on "Flaming Waters" will be followed by specific presentations on features, BIG and LITTLE.

Here is a real service brought right up to your DOOR. Permitting you, in a definite and progressive way, to campaign COMPLETELY for bigger business on a picture from the MINUTE you book it. Bridging a gap in the successful operation of the modern theatre. Once AGAIN Moving Picture World proves that the field of usefulness of the motion picture trade paper can, when the paper itself is cast in the proper mold, be constantly widened.

CONSTANTLY!

William J. Reilly

Something That Is

"Advance" is Correct on Paramount Press Books

ANY elaboration to the use of the press book must be considered a definitely CONSTRUCTIVE move, and in this instance, Paramount has stepped out with "Advance Text Proofs—Complete Press Sheet Will Follow."

The first impression, after glimpsing one of these advance proofs, takes us back to war days, when the censor "deleted" a lot of things, and ample white space testified eloquently to that fact.

In every way, this specimen is the complete press book, with the exception of the ART WORK. And because it can be thrown out away in advance of the time that would be required to wait for the art work, the text matter becomes INSTANTLY available to the forces in the field, whether they be in the exchanges, in the exploitation division, or in the theatres that have booked Paramount pictures and await publicity matter.

Several of these press sheets have reached our desk. There can be no doubt of their value, from the several points set down above.

In the key cities, for instance, where the Paramount exploitation men throw out their lure away in advance of release dates, these "advance sheets" indubitably prove their worth. Mel Shauer, at the head of distribution, and Russell Holman, at the head of advertising, seem to have hit upon a plan that will prove of even WIDER use than during the early weeks of its innovation.

REVIEWERS in the principal cities find this advance sheet of great value, and as it is instantly available through the Paramount publicity department, its use among the REVIEWERS is increasing.

In laying the groundwork for PUBLICITY campaigns, the advance sheet bridges a gap and makes the first punch on a campaign a thing of ACCURACY, instead of a groundwork of surmises.

Much of the material in the press sheets comes in handy in making up theatre PROGRAMS and HOUSE ORGANS, and in the hands of the motion picture editors of the dailies it gives them material to select from weeks in advance of the time they were enabled to cull from it in the old days.

In the hands of the BRANCH MANAGERS and the SALESMEN, this material again proves a boon. The complete press sheets, containing the art work, would scarcely have an early value compared with the value of the publicity matter, and FACTS, available under the new scheme.

THE advance sheets, for instance, on "Woman-handled," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "The Enchanted Hill, "Mannequin," strike us as being just so many HIGH SPOTS in exhibitor co-operation and in selling the pictures to the public.

And so we say, may BLESSINGS be upon the head of Holman, Shauer, or whoever it was that broke the spell, and released these ADVANCE sheets weeks prior to the final release of the completed press book!

No Nourishment in the "Rag"

PLENTY of people think that BEEFING and chewing the RAG, are the only way to get nourishment into the system of this VAST and, thank the Lord! VIGOROUS, industry.

But every so often a chap comes along who knows that there can be food for thought that needn't include the "beef"—and that you can open your mouth without chewing the well-known rag.

L. O. Davis has become president of the Virginia Amusement Company operating a chain of theatres, by virtue of his constructive ability—his acumen in picking pictures that please his public's palate. That's why, when he presents something CONSTRUCTIVE in the way of a chat about patrons' picture INDIGESTION we are glad to call attention to it. Such a contribution is that from Mr. Davis which you will find on another page of this week's Moving Picture World.

Constructive—By Bill Reilly

Texas Lifts Laugh Month from the Calendar to the Front Page

IT may be just January for some folks, but it is LAUGH MONTH for a lot more. Down in Texas, co-operation between EXHIBITORS and EXCHANGE MANAGERS has secured from Governor "Ma" Ferguson a Proclamation to the effect that January is LAUGH MONTH in Texas.

Colonel H. A. Cole, president of the Texas M. P. T. O. A. and the Laugh Month Committee, consisting of P. K. Johnston, Fox Exchange Manager; Oscar A. Morgan, Pathe Exchange Manager; F. A. Tomes, Educational Exchange Manager, and R. C. McIlheran, Universal Exchange Manager, working in complete HARMONY of effort, proved to the chief executive of the state that LAUGH MONTH was WORTHY of an official Proclamation.

Governor "Ma" Ferguson merits the thanks of the industry. Colonel Cole and the Laugh Month Committee merit the sincerest kind of COMMENDATION for getting together on a big idea for their WELFARE and that of HUMANITY.

Enlarging a Ready-Made Audience

WILLIAM FOX scored ANOTHER fine point in selecting stories when he closed for "Sandy," the charming love story by Eleanor Meherin which follows "Chickie." With more than ONE HUNDRED leading newspapers carrying this serial, millions of customers will be AWAITING the Fox screen version of "Sandy." It is most interesting to observe the attitude of James R. Grainger in this matter. The far-seeing head of the sales organization in the Fox galaxy has decided to throw open EVERY avenue of advertising, publicity and exploitation to help the EXHIBITORS. Grainger will, we believe, OUTDO the nation-wide exploitation ALREADY bestowed on "Sandy."

A Healthy Letter

IN a recent issue we published an EXCLUSIVE story dealing with the fact that the Associated Press has opened its service to MORE moving picture news. A letter, published in this issue, from K. A. Bickel, president of the United Press Associations, states that for years his organization, serving 900 newspapers," has given LEGITIMATE news of the moving picture industry the PROMINENCE it was ENTITLED to." Thank you, Mr. Bickel. AND keep it up.

Hitching the Dodge Brothers Gas Wagon to a Star

DODGE BROTHERS make GOOD automobiles. And through the George Harrison Phelps agency they ADVERTISE them WELL. Reproduced herewith is their latest full page piece of copy, taken from last week's Liberty. The reproduction scarcely does it justice.

In it Dodge Brothers have HITCHED their GAS WAGON to a star—to the great active WORLD of public INTEREST in the moving picture.

The subject matter, as treated by William Meade Prince, is especially TIMELY because of the wide DISTRIBUTION and POPULARITY of current screen epics of the WEST.

Manufacturers and advertising agencies are becoming CONSCIOUS of the power of the motion picture tie-up. It will not be long before THEY will come in respectable numbers to the exploitation men of this business—instead of the exploitation men going to THEM.

The tie-up idea has undergone a great CHANGE since the early days of its practice. Today it is a COMPLETE merchandising plan in itself. It stimulates INTEREST, creates DEMAND, provides the dealer with real sales support AT the point of sale. And, of course, for the producer and the exhibitor, the line-up is sound, sane, and productive.

Dodge Brothers, Mr. Prince, and George Harrison Phelps are to be congratulated on MESHING IN with the vast publicity machinery of the picture industry. Next time, gentlemen, let the EXPLOITATION men in this business STEP IT UP for you before you SHOOT THE WORKS.

A Dodge sedan projects itself into the artist's picture. And more, into the vast, movie-accepting mind of the American public.

Something That Is

"Advance" is Correct on Paramount Press Books

ANY elaboration to the use of the press book must be considered a definitely CONSTRUCTIVE move, and in this instance, Paramount has stepped out with "Advance Text Proofs—Complete Press Sheet Will Follow."

The first impression, after glimpsing one of these advance proofs, takes us back to war days, when the censor "deleted" a lot of things, and ample white space testified eloquently to that fact.

In every way, this specimen is the complete press book, with the exception of the ART WORK. And because it can be thrown out away in advance of the time that would be required to wait for the art work, the text matter becomes INSTANTLY available to the forces in the field, whether they be in the exchanges, in the exploitation division, or in the theatres that have booked Paramount pictures and await publicity matter.

Several of these press sheets have reached our desk. There can be no doubt of their value, from the several points set down above.

In the key cities, for instance, where the Paramount exploitation men throw out their lure away in advance of release dates, these "advance sheets" indubitably prove their worth. Mel Shauer, at the head of distribution, and Russell Holman, at the head of advertising, seem to have hit upon a plan that will prove of even WIDER use than during the early weeks of its innovation.

REVIEWERS in the principal cities find this advance sheet of great value, and as it is instantly available through the Paramount publicity department, its use among the REVIEWERS is increasing.

In laying the groundwork for PUBLICITY campaigns, the advance sheet bridges a gap and makes the first punch on a campaign a thing of ACCURACY, instead of a groundwork of surmises.

Much of the material in the press sheets comes in handy in making up theatre PROGRAMS and HOUSE ORGANS, and in the hands of the motion picture editors of the dailies it gives them material to select from weeks in advance of the time they were enabled to cull from it in the old days.

In the hands of the BRANCH MANAGERS and the SALESMEN, this material again proves a boon. The complete press sheets, containing the art work, would scarcely have an early value compared with the value of the publicity matter, and FACTS, available under the new scheme.

THE advance sheets, for instance, on "Womanhandled," "A Kiss for Cinderella," "The Enchanted Hill, "Mannequin," strike us as being just so many HIGH SPOTS in exhibitor co-operation and in selling the pictures to the public.

And so we say, may BLESSINGS be upon the head of Holman, Shauer, or whoever it was that broke the spell, and released these ADVANCE sheets weeks prior to the final release of the completed press book!

No Nourishment in the "Rag"

PLENTY of people think that BEEFING and chewing the RAG, are the only way to get nourishment into the system of this VAST and, thank the Lord! VIGOROUS, industry.

But every so often a chap comes along who knows that there can be food for thought that needn't include the "beef"—and that you can open your mouth without chewing the well-known rag.

L. O. Davis has become president of the Virginia Amusement Company operating a chain of theatres, by virtue of his constructive ability—his acumen in picking pictures that please his public's palate. That's why, when he presents something CONSTRUCTIVE in the way of a chat about patrons' picture INDIGESTION we are glad to call attention to it. Such a contribution is that from Mr. Davis which you will find on another page of this week's Moving Picture World.

IT may be just January for some folks, but it is LAUGH MONTH for a lot more. Down in Texas, co-operation between EXHIBITORS and EXCHANGE MANAGERS has secured from Governor "Ma" Ferguson a Proclamation to the effect that January is LAUGH MONTH in Texas.

Colonel H. A. Cole, president of the Texas M. P. T. O. A. and the Laugh Month Committee, consisting of P. K. Johnston, Fox Exchange Manager; Oscar A. Morgan, Pathe Exchange Manager; F. A. Tomes, Educational Exchange Manager, and R. C. McIlheran, Universal Exchange Manager, working in complete HARMONY of effort, proved to the chief executive of the state that LAUGH MONTH was WORTHY of an official Proclamation.

Governor "Ma" Ferguson merits the thanks of the industry. Colonel Cole and the Laugh Month Committee merit the sincerest kind of COMMENDATION for getting together on a big idea for their WELFARE and that of HUMANITY.

Enlarging a Ready-Made Audience

WILLIAM FOX scored ANOTHER fine point in selecting stories when he closed for "Sandy," the charming love story by Eleanor Meherin which follows "Chickie." With more than ONE HUNDRED leading newspapers carrying this serial, millions of customers will be AWAITING the Fox screen version of "Sandy." It is most interesting to observe the attitude of James R. Grainger in this matter. The far-seeing head of the sales organization in the Fox galaxy has decided to throw open EVERY avenue of advertising, publicity and exploitation to help the EXHIBITORS. Grainger will, we believe, OUTDO the nation-wide exploitation ALREADY bestowed on "Sandy."

Big Pictures? Yes— But Original Themes, Not Copies, Wanted!

By L. O. Davis

President Virginia Amusement Company

ONCE upon a time—as friend Aesop used to say—there was a Young Idea trotting around, sort of aimless and lackadaisical like, and just wondering where it could horn in on the Movie Game.

So, one day, while Pa Idea was trying to tune in something on the six tube Super-iodine, and Ma Idea was slinging the shirts from washtub to back yard, this Young Idea hiked forth an adventure bent.

And over in the City of Cinematics, which is close enough to the Pacific Ocean to allow its bathing girls to sit on the beach, this Young Idea spotted something. He saw a Big Theme!

"Oh, boy!" he chortled, "There's what I want to be!"

So he rushed home and he told his family all about the Big Theme, about the crowd that followed it everywhere it went, about the praise the newspapers handed it. And Ma and Pa Idea told him for the good of his soul, "Forget it, Infant! You can't horn in on that class—you just grow up to be a good little Program."

But this youngster saw fame and fortune, and forgot everything else. He bought yeast and ate it; he swallowed the white Sedlitz powders and then swallowed the blue ones—a whole raft of these.

And he began to feel swell!

Swell! He blew out bigger and bigger, till all his little buttons flipped into the discard—and he kept on filling out.

But just as he was running to tell dad and ma to look—bam!

And all that was left was the skeleton of a Young Idea—and that did a flop.

If there's any moral, it's left to an exhibitor as astute as L. O. Davis to bring it out—so the Fableist steps down while the practical, go-getter exhibitor steps up.—read and reap.

DURING my time in the show business I have seen many big pictures but have yet to see one of these big pictures make a success without being followed by a whole flock of the same type and kind of production.

With "Over the Hill" came the mother love theme until they gave the box office a pain in the stomach. Then came "Way Down East," "The Four Horsemen," "The Sheik" and "Flaming Youth"; all followed by dozens of each respective type, but very few excepting the originals ever got anywhere.

After these came "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "The Sea Hawk"—followed by many sea pictures with but few of them amounting to much. Then "The Covered Wagon" days until my patrons are beginning to think all pictures are super-westerns. This western epidemic seems to be lingering longer than any of the former ones but my public is now tired of these big westerns and waiting for the next craze to follow (which I have heard is to be the war pictures now being produced). It has been proven that one of these big ones will start a craze and from what I hear of "The Big Parade" it must be the one that will bring the late war back into the limelight.

All these picture epidemics soon die, which is further proof that the public soon tires of the same thing and is ever in quest of the new and novel in entertainment. It is still further proof that the geninus or producer who happens to be the first to bring them one of these big hits is most invariably the only one to clean up on the changing whim of public taste. Seldom do more than one or two successes follow the riginal regardless of how big a hit it may be.

Another angle of these big "type pictures" is the fact that many of our best stars and directors have been made overnight by their success. One of them will make any star or director if they have contributed their part admirably. And on investigation you would find that such films have even made some of our biggest corporations what they are today, besides bringing many a producer to the top of the ladder of success in this industry of ours.

Being an exhibitor and very close to the taste of my public I know from experience that what they are looking for in entertainment is the new and novel. That something they have not seen; that little twist of life they had not thought of: and the man or woman who can create these things first is bound to be a success. It is the man with genius and originality possessing knowledge of what the box office requires that reaches out and produces one of these big hits.

The reason that these big picture themes soon die is that so many producers start making pictures dealing with the same type of story as the original success and when they are all turned loose on the public they soon get filled up on that particular theme and then it is dead forever.

If producers would be original and stop copying these big successes and flooding the market with a lot of imitations, I think you would soon find that these big themes could be brought back every once in a while to a nice profit for everyone concerned. Why not give the public what it wants "in doses" and not feed them the same thing until they're blue in the face? If "Covered Wagons" are selling good why ruin the market for them by everyone making Wagons? Produce something else just as good and we'll all be better off.

As well as theme it's new talent the public is looking for—so I think some of these producers who are trying to force faded luminaries onto exhibitors could do better by bringing new faces to the screen.

As an exhibitor I feel that it would be better for all of us if we could get more of these big pictures dealing with different themes and constructed in conformity to the box office need while reaching for artistic heights in production. They are the lasting stones in the building of our great industry; and after all is said and done the only pictures remembered are these big ones, and by them is measured the progress we make in this industry.

More such would keep our patrons' interest stirred to the highest pitch; more big ones, each different from the other, would keep them always interested in our programs, watching for variety in our pictures instead of losing interest because we have had nothing but wagons or sheiks for months.

New York Governor Urges Abolition Of Censorship in Annual Message

"Al" Smith Consistent in His Stand, Though Has $7,500 Plum at His Disposal— Reason for Much Optimism

By C. L. Grant

GOVERNOR ALFRED E. SMITH has again come out most emphatically in urging the abolishment of the present New York State Motion Picture Commission. In his annual message to the Legislature, delivered personally at the state capitol in Albany, Governor Smith declared that motion picture censorship stands in open opposition to the American idea of freedom and liberty.

Everything points to the wiping out of censorship in New York State during the next few months to come. No place has been made for the Motion Picture Commission in the plan calling for the reorganization of the many state departments and commissions. While this in itself would not necessarily mean that the commission would be abolished, for in the eleventh hour it might be slipped into some department, the fact remains that the Legislature, still Republican in majority, will no longer evince any great political interest in the commission and will not be averse to following the governor's suggestion calling for its abolishment.

At the present time two of the three heads holding $7,500 jobs on the commission are Democrats named by Governor Smith. The state's chief executive can name the third head any time he desires, for the term of George H. Cobb, chairman of the commission, expired on January 1, but Mr. Cobb will hold over until such time as Governor Smith may will.

Thus with the Republicans no longer interested from a patronage standpoint, and with Governor Smith urging the commission's abolishment, and with the reorganization commission facing the problem of finding a place for the censorship board, the chances seem slim indeed for its continuance. If the commission is continued by the legislature, the Republican leaders will see Governor Smith naming a Democrat to the $7,500 plum.

To say the least, Governor Smith is consistent in his demands for the wiping out of censorship in the state. Even though there is at his disposal a $7,500 job, it apparently makes no difference to Governor Smith who, in his annual message, took the first step toward wiping out the commission.

In his message Governor Smith said:

"Foremost among many useless activities of the government is our attempted censorship of moving pictures. Censorship stands in open opposition to the American idea of freedom and liberty. We have sufficient laws to punish those who outrage public decency. If we haven't, they should be enacted.

"The arm of the state must never reach out against freedom of speech or freedom of the press, and the exhibition of moving pictures is not far removed from those fundamental liberties that we have sought to guarantee to every citizen.

"It will be no backward step, because the censorship of moving pictures was caught up in the mad scramble to censor everything only a few years ago. We have retraced our steps from the policy of subjecting our school teachers to a loyalty test as we have likewise turned our back upon the governmental policy of licensing private schools.

"The security of the state does not rest upon its ability to condemn acts before their commission, but rather upon its ability to punish violators of the law."

Warning "Extras"

CASTING agencies making offers to place amateurs in motion pictures have been the subject of complaint to the Better Business Bureau, 280 Broadway, New York, which issued a warning for the benefit of persons with screen ambitions. The agencies in question guarantee in contract form to secure the applicant his or her "first motion picture engagement" in consideration of the payment of a stipulated registration fee, one-half of which fee the agency assures to itself, whether or not an engagement is procured for the applicant.

Except in unusual instances, the best that an inexperienced person can expect in the way of a screen engagement is as an "extra" in mob, crowd and mass scenes. The usual pay for this type of screen work is $7.50 per day. One casting agency has been charging a fee of $35 plus $15 for a special photograph, for their services.

Many of those who have motion picture ambitions and apply to the casting agencies are not of the screen type and cannot even be employed as extras. All of the studios in the vicinity of New York maintain casting directors, to whom direct application can be made for employment, thus saving both the registration fee for the first engagement and the usual 10 per cent. fee charged for single engagements if the applicant has proven satisfactory in the first one.

JACOB STREIMER PASSES

Jacob Streimer, father of Moe Streimer, manager of the New York Exchange of United Artists Corporation, died on December 27, at the residence of one of his daughters at No. 1384 Carroll street, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Streimer was 74 years old. Seven children survive, four daughters and three sons, all of whom are married. Charles Streimer, one of the sons, will be remembered as a prominent figure in the motion picture industry for a number of years. He is now engaged in the brokerage business. Moe Streimer has been handling distribution for United Artists in the metropolitan area since the company was formed. Many letters and telegrams of condolence have been received by the members of the family.

H. D. FINKELSTEIN TO MARRY

Harold D. Finkelstein, director of personnel and music for Finkelstein & Ruben, of St. Paul, will be married the first week in February, to Gladys Ruth Jacobs, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis Jacobs of Minneapolis, according to announcements in the Twin City newspapers.

J. Gordon Edwards Dies Suddenly of Pneumonia

J. Gordon Edwards, chief of the directorial forces of Fox Film Corporation for a number of years, and one of the leading American directors, died on December 31, at the Hotel Plaza, of pneumonia. Mr. Edwards was taken ill on Christmas Day. Mrs. Edwards and a son, Jack, who has played in pictures, survive. He was 58 years old.

Mr. Edwards was planning, after a prolonged absence from the studios, to return to production work.

Born in Montreal, Canada, and educated in Quebec, he became an actor at an early age, and toured America and England with several great stars, afterwards taking up motion picture work in the pioneer days.

Among the pictures Mr. Edwards directed were: "Camille," "Cleopatra," "DuBarry," "The Forbidden Path," "The Soul of Buddha," "Salome," "When a Woman Sins," "The Siren's Song," "When Men Desire," "Wolves of the Night," "A Woman There Was," "The Light," "The Lone Star Ranger," "Heart Strings," "The Orphan," "Wings of the Morning," "The Adventurer," "If I Were King," "The Joyous Troublemaker," "Drag Harlan," "His Greatest Sacrifice," "The Scuttlers," "The Queen of Sheba," "Nero," "The Silent Command," "The Net," "The Shepherd King," and "It Is the Law."

For a number of years Mr. Edwards was in charge of the production of big Fox specials, but lately as an advisor.

Carl E. Milliken Is Appointed Secretary of Hays Organization

Following the resignation, December 31, of Courtland Smith as secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president, to become associated with the Fox Theatres Corporation, William Fox, president; Carl E. Milliken, nationally known churchman and Governor of Maine from 1917 to 1921, was appointed secretary.

Governor Milliken, who has had a large business experience, is prominent also in many activities of the Baptist Church, the Y. M. C. A. and the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America. He is president of the American Baptist Foreign Mission Society and chairman of its Finance Committee; former president of the Northern Baptist Convention, a member for twelve years of the International Committee of the Y. M. C. A., a director of the Playground Association of America and is active in many other civic and religious organizations. In 1911-12 he toured the United States with John D. Rockefeller, Jr., speaking in behalf of the Interchurch World Movement.

Governor Milliken is a member of the Board of Directors of the Religious Motion Picture Foundation. Upon completing his term as Governor, he took up a study of motion pictures as a social force. With a group of Maine men he produced a series of pictures from outdoor stories featuring Maine scenery.

He was born on a farm in Pittsfield, Maine, and holds degrees from Bates College, Harvard, Colby and the University of Maine.

Movie Talks by Movie Men Now Regularly Broadcasted

INTERESTING addresses on current and vital facts concerning the motion picture industry are now a regular part of the radio broadcasting service of the Radio Corporation of America. Each Wednesday afternoon, at 2:45 o'clock, some leader of the film industry or some lay-figure of national importance who is interested in and associated with the motion picture industry as a fan and as a public contact, speaks over station WJZ at Aeolian Hall in New York.

The service was instituted by arrangement between the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president, and the Radio Corporation and early reports on the service indicate for it much success. All details of the broadcasting are being handled by the two organizations, working jointly.

Colonel Jason S. Joy, director of the Department of Public Relations of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, was the first speaker. He outlined the radio service plan and made a strong plea for the constructive co-operation of all groups and individuals in increasing the film's general usefulness and good.

R. F. Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, spoke on January 6 on "The Art of Making You Laugh," as an opening feature of Laugh Month. On January 13 the Rev. George Reid Andrews, chairman of the committee on Educational and Religious Drama of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and general manager and vice-president of the Religious Motion Picture Foundation, will talk on "Religious Motion Pictures," and on January 20 James E. West, chief scout executive of the Boy Scouts of America, will speak on "Why Western Pictures?"

Among others who have already spoken are David Wark Griffith, Mrs. Robert H. Flaherty, collaborator with her husband in the making of such pictures as "Nanook of the North" and "Moana of the South Seas"; Charles A. McMahan, executive secretary of the National Catholic Welfare Council, of Washington, D. C., and John C. Eversman of the Hays' office, who extended a Christmas greeting to the radio world in behalf of the motion picture industry.

SUNDAY SHOWS WIN

Sunday movies will prevail in Ilion, N. Y., from now on, a proposition to that effect having been carried by a majority of 71 at a taxpayers' election. The fight over the question of Sunday picture shows proved to be one of the bitterest in the village and practically every person entitled to vote was at the polls.

Two-Thirty-Three Club Elects Officers for the New Year

ENTERING the new year, the Two-Thirty-Three Club of Hollywood started on the sixteenth month of its existence with newly elected officers, a total membership of 1,265 representative men interested in the motion picture and theatrical profession in Hollywood and organizing a Two-Thirty-Three Club Holding Company to attend the funding of a twelve-story $1,500,000 building which will be unlike any other structure in America and for the designing of which leading architects of the country will compete.

The officers for the year of 1926 will be: President, Edward Davis (re-elected); vice-presidents, Frank Lloyd, John McCormick and Wallace Beery; corresponding secretary, Bryant Washburn; recording secretary, Raymond McKee (re-elected); executive clerk, Fred Douglas; treasurer, Samuel Kress (re-elected); board of directors, George Sargent, chairman; John Ince, Perry Vekroff, James W. Horne, Lewis W. Gill, George Fawcett, Edward V. Rowland, John E. Elliott, David H. Thompson, Louis Physioc, Joseph Goldsmith, Jr., and John LeRoy Johnston. The membership committee is Winfred North, Lewis W. Gill, Mitchell Lewis, Herbert Prior, William H. Turner and David H. Thompson. During the new year the Hilarity Degree will be given by committee headed by Harry O. Dull, Charles Stevens, George Marshall, Paul Hurst and Scotty Beal.

On Christmas Day the club presented Edwards Davis with a Chrysler coupe and appropriated $1,000 to bring Christmas cheer to various members and to inmates of public institutions. Among recent prominent film men to be initiated into the club are Douglas Fairbanks, Monte Blue, Edwin Carewe, Walter Long and Del Lord.

FIRST NATIONAL INSURANCE

The executive committee of First National Pictures has authorized an arrangement with the Connecticut General Life Insurance Company whereby the permanent salaried employees of First National are insured at the expense of the company. This blanket insurance is now in force. The insurance against death and permanent total disability is graded from $500 for employees who have been with the company less than a year up to $5,000 for those who have rendered longer services in important capacities. Employees have been notified that in the event of death at any time or from any cause, as long as they are with the company and during the continuance of the insurance, the amount to which they are entitled will be paid to the beneficiary designated.

FIRE DAMAGE IN FRANKFORT, KY.

The Grand Theatre, Frankfort, Ky., a picture theatre operated by N. K. Pattie, was damaged to the extent of $6,500 to equipment and $2,500 to building in a blaze starting at 6.30 on the evening of December 28. Equipment was insured but no insurance was carried on building, belonging to McKee Harris. The blaze was discovered between afternoon and night shows.

A Fan Bureau

THE West Coast Theatres, Inc., is making itself indispensable to the theatre-going public of California by the installation of an information bureau. The bureau, which is open from 8:30 a. m. to 10 p. m., is for the purpose of answering questions relative to motion pictures, legitimate stage attractions and stars at any local theatres; the hours the performance starts, the names of actors and actresses playing certain roles and other general information concerning the production.

In addition to this service, the attendants on duty will be able to furnish data on previous pictures in which stars have appeared, what productions are being made at the various studios and at what studio your favorite movie star can be found. The bureau fills a long-felt need in Los Angeles.

Cecil B. DeMille is apparently pulling something mysterious with a pack of cards for the benefit of John C. Flinn and Theodore Kosloff while on location with his company for "The Volga Boatman."

This production will be his second personally directed release through Producers Distributing Corporation, of which Mr. Flinn is vice-president.

Harry Carr Appointed Managing Editor of Production

A significant move to give the public a medium for critical influence in the making of motion pictures was taken recently by B. P. Schulberg and Hector Turnbull, associate producers of Paramount, when they announced the appointment of Harry Carr, nationally known newspaperman, as managing editor of production of Famous Players-Lasky Hollywood studio.

Mr. Carr is an editorial power, a noted dramatic critic and writer, and western representative of the Brewster Publications. He is an authority on motion pictures, having been chief advisor to D. W. Griffith and literary advisor to Thomas Ince and other producers.

"Managing editor of production is a new department in motion pictures," said Mr. Schulberg in telling of the new position, "and is designed to provide a critical viewpoint on continuities of screen plays. The reviewer's viewpoint in the past has been obtainable only on a completed production. Hereafter the attitude and reaction of the critic—acting as the voice of the public—will be given us before a picture is made instead of after.

MONTREAL TAX $688,606

An announcement was made at Montreal, Quebec, on December 30 as to the revenue derived from the amusement tax collected on theatre tickets in Montreal during the fiscal year ending November 30. This showed that the total amusement tax revenue for the year was $688,606, this representing 10 per cent on 19,513,128 admission at local theatres. Montreal's population is around 875,000.

OHIO LODGE HALL BURNS

Fire recently destroyed the Jr. O. U. A. M. lodge hall at Withamsville, Ohio, entailing a loss of $16,000. The hall was used as a picture theatre on Saturday nights.

Dillon Sounds New Rally Cry In Urging Hays Affiliation

THE greatest move in exhibitor history," is the way William A. Dillon, president of the Buffalo and Albany zones of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, characterized the request for affiliation with the Hays' organization, in a communication which he has sent to members of the executive body and which infers that the request for affiliation has been approved by the Hays' office. The communication follows:

"Sit tight: Pay no attention to dynamite propaganda sent out by opponents of constructive work.

"The request for affiliation with the Hays' organization is a gigantic step forward. A step into the new day. A new lease on your own property. New pep and new life in your own business.

"This affiliation has been passed and approved by your organization, the members of which have theatre holdings which represent over fifty million dollars. Do you think they would approve of such affiliation unless they thought it was for the best interest of all theatre owners? Your president has acted accordingly with the hearty approval of your Board of Directors. This affiliation will bring to every theatre owner the right (not a request) to present to the Hays organization any grievances that affect your theatre or your business—such grievances will be heard by a member of the Hays organization, and a member of your organization would be there to protect your rights.

"This affiliation in no way affects the Arbitration Boards of your present film contracts, but gives you the greatest arbitration of all, that which is not written in your contract, the right to bring the big and vital questions before the Hays organization for a square deal.

"If there had been such affiliation in Connecticut, they never would have had the present film tax and the theatres of that state would never have suffered as they did. The producers need us and we need them. The industry stands today where it demands whole hearted co-operation, and all connected with it must be reasonable—We have got to work together. Mr. Will Hays for years has preached confidence and co-operation. This affiliation will demonstrate his sincerity.

"For years the exhibitors' organization has been shooting lots of empty shells, hitting nothing and getting nothing. The white flag is up. Let us look the whole industry square in the face and say, 'We are right' until deeds prove we are wrong.

"I have never sold anything but a square deal and never will knowingly. I am convinced that we are right. It's a wonderful advancement and we ask your patience until it has been given sufficient time for a good trial. Let every officer of exhibitors' organizations cease to be badge-holding press-hounds and become real leaders ready to build instead of tear down.

"This is not a challenge, but a request. Hands off until we are proven wrong."

NEW CANADIAN APPOINTMENTS

One of the most important of managerial changes in Canada in recent weeks has been the appointment of Frank Robson as manager of the Royal Theatre at Fort William, Ontario, in succession to Walter Davis, who has been made manager of the Empress Theatre at Edmonton, Alberta. Frank Robson was the manager of the Edmonton Empress Theatre for years. He is a brother of Clarence Robson, Toronto, Eastern general manager of theatres for Famous Players Canadian Corp.

T. J. CHARETTE DIES

Thomas J. Charette, aged 46, died at his home in New Bedford, Mass., December 18, after a brief illness. He formerly was a member of Allen-Charette, Inc., operating a number of film houses in New Bedford. In 1921, Mr. Charette retired from the enterprise. Last spring he formed a new company, Charette, Inc., and bought the theatres from George W. Allen, Jr. There are seven houses. Mr. Charette leaves his wife, three daughters and four sons.

Warners Theatre Opens New Radio Station in New York

WARNER BROS. opened a new radio station, WBPI, at Warners Theatre, New York, the night of December 29. The program, starting at 6 o'clock, continued until after midnight and probably was as varied as was ever offered to an invisible audience. From an entertainment standpoint it was a hurricane, Broadway sending its best musical and vaudeville talent. Irene Rich, the Warner star, was the chief individual attraction but there was speechmaking, too, by some of the best known men in the picture industry.

Will H. Hays, in a long telegram from Sullivan, Ind., declared, "This undertaking is another example of your progressiveness. It is characteristic of your splendid accomplishments." He suggested that "thought be given in 1926 to What's Right With the Movies," and urged that the motion picture be used to bring about lasting peace on earth.

Frank Vreeland, dramatic critic of the New York Telegram, discussed the question, "Do Good Movies Pay?" and struck a note of optimism.

Sam L. Warner explained in his address that WBPI stands for Warner Bros. Pictures, Inc., and Arthur L. Lee, managing director of the Hotel McAlpin, New York, welcoming the new station to Broadway, declared the letters mean "Working Best for the Public Interest." Christie Bonesack, in charge of WNYC, the New York municipal station, extended the city's greetings and other welcoming addresses were made by Mayor William J. Dalton of Long Beach, L. I., Phillip R. Mannis, district deputy grand master of New York Masons, and Major Charles S. Tate, 113th U. S. Infantry.

Telegrams of felicitation came from Harry M. and Jack Warner, both in Hollywood; John Barrymore, Ernst Lubitsch, Syd Chaplin, Kenneth Harlan, Matt Moore, Louise Fazenda and Charles Wellman, announcer at KFWB, the station at the Warner West Coast Studios.

Frank Mallon, in charge of the new station, was master of ceremonies and Horace Beaver began his new duties as official announcer of WBPI.

Laemmle Photoplay University Established at Universal City

UNIVERSAL CITY in addition to its other usual and unusual features is now the seat of a university. Its civic enterprises have been supplemented by the establishment of Laemmle Photoplay University. It is housed at present in the Administration Building, but if the courses increase as rapidly as they threaten to it is planned to extend the curriculum to other arts in addition to acting, and a separate building will be required.

Laemmle Photoplay University is run on a strictly business basis and one which is equitable to all concerned, somewhat like the popular extension universities. The players are paid the regular stock salary and are used in pictures as frequently as possible, receiving their practical training this way. There are entrance "exams" and a set course of training with examinations and promotions on the basis of merit and achievement. At present there are about thirty-five in the various courses. If the students make good in the lower courses they receive five-year contracts at a good salary. If they fail, one of two things happens: they are either let out, or they are put back to their old standing in case the promotion was premature.

Paul Kohner, casting supervisor, acts as entrance board and the various directors as professors of motion picture art. The chairs are occupied by George Summerville, Dick Smith, Cliff Smith, Al Rogell, William Seiter, Harry Pollard, Herbert Blache, King Baggott, Lynn Reynolds, Edward Sedgwick, Svend Gade and Edward Laemmle.

Raymond Keane, George Lewis, Blanche Mehaffey, Barbara Kent, Fay Wray and Clarence Thompson are the ones who have been advancing the fastest, though all Universal's beauty winners are in the classes.

Kansas-Missouri Exhibitors Plan "Social" Conventions

ONE important issue may be decided and the future fate of another determined at a meeting of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri in Kansas City on January 12.

The question of M. P. T. O. K.-M. declining to sit on the Joint Board of Arbitration to hear cases of exhibitors who are not members of the exhibitor body, probably will be first "on the carpet." Then will come the question of admitting managers of producer-owned theatres into the organization as active members. It will be necessary to amend the constitution at a convention before favorable action can be taken, of course, but sentiment expressed at the meeting is expected to be a barometer of the action to follow later.

Then the proposition of holding an annual "social" convention will come up. A meeting, with all exhibitors of Western Missouri and Kansas present, with no business to interfere with pleasure, is looked upon with great favor by the exhibitors. The New Year's party has been called off with the probability that January 15 may be set as the date for the first M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri "social" convention. Exchange members probably would be eligible, the same as exhibitors, at such a convention, C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. K.-M., said.

Incorporations

A slump in the number of motion picture companies incorporating characterized the closing days of last year. The week brought the incorporation of only four such companies, with the Marlboro Pictures Corporation having the largest capitalization. This company, according to papers filed with secretary of state, was capitalized at $75,000, with O. A. Peters, Ridgewood; E. G. S. Powell and H. J. Flavia, of New York City as directors. The other companies formed were: Basil Dean, Inc., $10,000, Basil Dean, Phoebe Feiner, A. G. Scheer, New York City; Neslein Picture Corporation, $3,000, Charles H. Nielsen, Charles Wintirn, Rudolf Hoseas, Brooklyn; Moshulu Theatre Corporation, capitalization not stated, J. L. Geller, J. A. Hirsh, Joseph J. Rosenthal, New York City.

Gotham and Lumas Move the Executive Offices

Sam Sax, president of Lumas Film Corporation and producer of Gotham productions, celebrated the New Year by moving the executive offices of his organization on January 2. The address of the organization, however, remains the same, 1650 Broadway, as the Lumas and Gotham home offices are now located on the tenth floor instead of the ninth. Practically double the old office space will be utilized and ample room provided to allow for the growth of the organization. The space to be taken over will be that formerly occupied by the I. M. P. P. D. A., and embraces a handsome suite of offices.

The new quarters will consist of private offices for Mr. Sax and Mr. Rogers, a large space for the accounting, accessories and stenographic staff and several conference rooms and emergency space for the use of production staff. The publicity, advertising and story department under Lon Young will also be located in the same suite.

CINCINNATI THEATRE ROBBED

Robbers entered the stage door of the Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, Ohio, at 10:30 a. m. the day after New Year's, beat Walter J. Portune, superintendent, into unconsciousness, bound and gagged him and stole approximately $7,200. The money, which was mostly in silver coin and nickels and weighed over 100 pounds, represented receipts of New Year's Day and the day previous, which Portune was preparing to take to the bank. The Palace, of which I. Libson is the executive head and Roy Beattie is manager, plays Keith vaudeville and feature pictures. It is located on Sixth street, one of the busiest thoroughfares in the city. The streets were crowded, and officials of the theatre were in the box office at the time the robbery was committed, but so quietly was the job pulled that the robbers made a clean getaway long before anyone discovered what had happened. The loss is covered by insurance, according to a statement made by Libson.

HALPERIN JOINS PUBLIX

Isadore Halperin, assistant manager at the Central Park Theatre, Chicago, has left to join the executive staff of the Publix Theatres, Inc., of New York City. He has been succeeded by J. Shamsky of the Chicago theatre staff.

Universal, Paramount and M-G-M Divide the German Field with UFA

Loan of $4,000,000 Made by Famous Players and M-G-M—Nicholas Schenck Gives Details of "50-50" Deal

By Sumner Smith

THE UFA deal, which has had the industry in a furore for weeks, is concluded, apparently with three American distributing companies benefitting. Out of a maze of conflicting rumors, with the principals in the deal still overseas and silent, comes a statement to the writer from Nicholas M. Schenk that can be regarded as authentic in every detail.

Famous Players-Lasky and Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer share equally, he said, in lending UFA the sum of $4,000,000, each obtains one-third of UFA's distribution in Germany, with UFA reserving one-third for itself, and each guarantees distribution in this country to five suitable UFA productions. That, in a nutshell, explains the terms of the contract signed with UFA by Sidney R. Kent for Famous Players and Leopold Friedman for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Except for a brief comment attributed to Marcus Loew by the Morning World, Mr. Schenck's statement is the only official announcement thus far issued by any company involved in the UFA deal. Attempts to get other heads to talk met with failure. Mr. Loew told the World of a "fifty-fifty" arrangement between M-G-M and Famous Players, adding: "We had been doing business there (in Germany) but we thought that UFA wanted our pictures more than the money, but apparently they did not, and when we found out about the offer of Universal to loan them money, we were afraid of being frozen out."

Both Mr. Schenck and Paul Gulick of Universal refer to a New York Times wireless dispatch of December 31, written by Lincoln Eyre in Berlin, as containing the true facts of the deal, except that Mr. Schenck declared baseless the suggestion that Paramount and Metro threatened UFA with an announced intention of building theatres in Germany and competing directly with UFA in its own field with American pictures. Mr. Schenck said that there is no truth in this rumor.

When news of the new UFA deal first broke, with Famous Players and Metro apparently shutting out Universal, many friends of Carl Laemmle were inclined to express sympathy for him. That, however, was before any real details were known, and now those same friends are inclined to see the outcome of the deal as of considerable advantage to Universal. Lincoln Eyre, the New York Times correspondent, takes this same view when he says:

"Laemmle withdraws the credit of 15,000,000 marks he was prepared to grant the German company under his original agreement, and, moreover, he is relieved of any obligation to place German films on the American market. Since, on the other hand, he is enabled to supply a considerable percentage of the total number of American pictures UFA undertakes to release in Germany, he appears to have emerged from the deal most advantageously."

This matter of German distribution of Universal pictures evidently is included in the one-third distributing power which UFA retains. In a letter to Moving Picture World, Paul Gulick, director of publicity of Universal, says:

"It would seem that the outcome of the negotiations was a compromise on the part of the three American companies, with Mr. Laemmle being assured a fine representation in the UFA theatres for Universal pictures, without any loan feature or without taking any chances on releasing UFA pictures in American theatres, on his part.

"This, coupled with the advantages conceded to Universal by the other two American companies in the deal for release dates in their houses in America, and particularly in New York City, for Universal pictures, gives Mr. Laemmle all that he sought in Germany in addition to advantages never before enjoyed in America.

"Mr. Laemmle cables that he is entirely satisfied with the final outcome, as he could go no further with the negotiations without overthrowing principles of independence and anti-monopoly for which he has always fought hard in this country. He is resting for a week or so in Germany from the many all-night sessions, before returning to America."

Following is Lincoln Eyre's wireless dispatch to the New York Times:

Berlin, Dec. 30.—The definitive partitioning of the German film market among large German and American producing interesst was completed this morning, following an all-night conference participated in by agents of the Universum Film Aktiengesellschaft, better known as UFA, Carl Laemmle, President of the Universal Pictures Corporation, and representatives of the Famous Players-Lasky and the Metro-Goldwyn companies.

Contracts were signed at the close of this meeting and ratified a few hours later at a general meeting of the UFA stockholders. They open wide the doors of UFA's 130 picture theatres to American screen productions, meet the urgent need of the largest firm in German movies for fresh liquid capital, and improve the prospects of releasing its films in the United States.

Acting in close combination, Famous Players and Metro-Goldwyn have agreed to advance to UFA $4,000,000 in exchange for the

Treated a Village

RESIDENTS of Granville, N. Y., received a Christmas present this year, the like of which has only once before taken place in the United States, to the best of our memory. When Adolph Kohn decided to relinquish the Pastime Theatre in Granville, to be taken over by William Benton of Saratoga Springs on January 1, he conceived the idea of playing host to the entire village. And so shortly before Christmas all residents of Granville became the guests of Mr. Kohn at the theatre.

It was a farewell tribute to those who had been his patrons, as well as all others in the village. He did not forget the children for a free matinee was also given for them. Now Mr. Kohn will wend his way to Florida where he will engage, as everyone else does, in the real estate business.

Associated Appoints Division Head For East

E. J. SMITH, general sales manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has recently announced the first promotion within his organization. Al Blofson, recently appointed Philadelphia manager, has been elevated to eastern division manager with supervision over the Philadelphia, Washington, Buffalo, Albany, New Haven and Boston branches.

Another appointment to the field staff is that of Harry Brown, who at present holds the rank of special representative and who will be assigned to a definite territory in the near future. Mr. Brown has been associated with Universal Pictures Corporation for almost seven years, during which time he managed the Washington branch for three years and their Cleveland office for a year.

BOSTON HAS FIRE SCARE

While a show was in progress at the Modern Theatre in Boston on New Year's Eve firemen searched throughout the theatre for traces of a fire, to which they had been summoned. The audience was unaware of the incident until the show closed and they left the Modern to find apparatus in front. The only indication of fire that could be found was an odor of smoke coming in the basement.

KANSAS CITY HOUSE BURNS

Fire did $3,000 damage to the Elms Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City. The building carried $3,500 insurance, according to Emmett Buchanan of Independence, Mo., owner of the theatre.

Press Backs British National

GREAT BRITAIN'S "Hollywood" nears realization with the recent announcement, given ample space in English newspapers, that British National Pictures will erect eight new studios at Oaklands, near Elstree, in Hertfordshire, which is near London and yet comparatively free from fog. Contracts for two have already been placed with Glasgow engineers, to be completed sixteen weeks after January 1, and six others will be built later.

George T. Eaton, wealthy Australian stock breeder, and J. D. Williams, well-known in this country, are behind the project as moving powers in British First National. Incidentally, they have bought the American rights to the new Herbert Wilcox British film, "Nell Gwynn," and H. G. Ponting's new version of his antanctic film, "The Great White Silence," and will soon bring the films to this country. While here they will seek to pursuade British-born producers and players to return to their native country.

British newspapers regard the studio project very favorably. W. A. M. in the Daily Chronicle says: "This is the first practical outcome of the determination of the British people to see British-made films on British screens." Of J. D. Williams the Daily Express says that he "can do more to set British film production on its feet than any other man." The Daily Mirror looks with favor on the project.

The Story of the UFA Deal

distribution of their pictures in its theatres, which, however, they must share with Universal in return for that corporation's relinquishment of the contract entered into with UFA several months ago by Max Schach, Mr. Laemmle's Berlin representative.

Laemmle withdraws the credit of 15,000,000 marks he was prepared to grant the German company under his original agreement, and, moreover, he is relieved of any obligation to place German films on the American market. Since, on the other hand, he is enabled to supply a considerable percentage of the total number of American pictures UFA undertakes to release in Germany, he appears to have emerged from the deal most advantageously.

Famous Players and Metro-Goldwyn, of course, will provide the bulk of the productions to be shown in UFA houses, which, incidentally, offer by far the greatest exhibition facilities in this country.

They also contract to produce one or two BIZ features annually in collaboration with UFA and to release in their American theatres ten German productions a year on condition that the Germany pictures are "suitable for American taste."

This arrangement, as outlined, averts the menace of insolvency confronting UFA and is the outcome of many weeks of negotiations.

As soon as Mr. Schach concluded his initial contract Mr. Laemmle boarded the Leviathan at New York and Sidney R. Kent, general manager of Famous Players, with the Metro-Goldwyn delegate, set out the same day on the Majestic. Laemmle landed in Cherbourg and arrived here by train ten minutes after Mr. Kent and his companion descended on Berlin in an airplane from London.

Then the battle of words and money began.

According to information reaching the New York Times correspondent, the most telling argument used by the combination desiring to break the UFA-Universal contract was the threat to build as many theatres in Germany as UFA now owns and to show in them at cut-rate prices their finest American pictures.

Such a development undoubtedly would have ultimately stifled UFA-Universal competition and completed UFA's financial downfall.

Speaking through Mr. Schach, Mr. Laemmle told the American correspondents tonight that he never had desired a monopoly of American film releases on the German market and sought only to insure exhibition possibilities for Universal photoplays here.

Consequently, he declared, he had been quite ready to enter into a compromise arrangement by which the UFA houses are shared with Famous Players and Metro-Goldwyn.

Both he and Mr. Kent expressed themselves as well satisfied with the result of the long negotiation, which the Universal head interpreted as destined to bring about a rapprochement of conflicting interests in the United States as well as in Germany.

Except for one or, at the most, two productions to be made jointly with UFA yearly by Famous Players and Metro-Goldwyn, neither American group contemplates producing in Berlin studios.

CARNIVAL ON FEBRUARY 3

The Film Mutual Benefit Bureau will hold its third annual carnival at the Plaza Hotel, New York City, on February 3. Featured on the program will be a preview of a big production scheduled to be shown on Broadway during the coming year. Its identity will be announced later. There will be midnight dancing and carnival features in which film stars and debutantes will perform together. Part of the proceeds will go toward charity and the remainder toward the educational work of the bureau. A portion will also be used for filming a picture on life among the Kentucky mountaineers. This is to be made by the Film Mutual Benefit Bureau early in the spring.

NEW CHICAGO BOND ISSUE

A bond issue of $1,250,000 to run for twenty-five years has been issued by the National Theatres Corporation of Chicago through the Union Bond and Mortgage Company at 7 per cent., to finance the construction of the new Paradise Theatre, store and office building to go up on Crawford avenue near Washington boulevard. The new theatre will front 215 feet on Crawford avenue, extend 209 feet in depth and is expected to cost when ready for opening at least $3,500,000. The house will seat 4,000 and work is already under way on the foundation.

Daylight Saving Remains A Law in Massachusetts

Exhibitors of Massachusetts have met defeat in their effort to have the daylight saving law abolished. Three federal judges in the United States District Court at Boston have ruled against the petition, which was brought by four organizaions representing 500,000 persons.

The theatre men were included in one of the organizations. They brought suit, alleging that the state of Massachusetts had no authority to enact and cause the observance of daylight saving time. The judges, in their decision, pointed out that an appeal may be taken by the petitioners to the United States Supreme Court.

ZEHNER GETS STUDIO POST

Universal City's champion globe-trotter has come to rest and established permanent residence at last. He is Harry H. Zehner, formerly personal secretary to Carl Laemmle, who was recently appointed assistant general manager of Universal City. Zehner occupied the former position for four years, and in that time has made twelve round trips to Europe and innumerable journeys between New York and Los Angeles. He speaks several languages and is regarded within the industry as one of its greatest experts on international film relations.

YEGS VISIT CINCINNATI

Burglars paid a visit to the Liberty Theatre, Cumminsville, a suburb of Cincinnati, and stole a bag containing $15 from the office. Entrance was gained by "jimmying" a side door of the theatre.

A Mother's Smile

Mrs. D. J. Grauman, mother of Sid Grauman, with the solid gold life pass to Los Angeles and Hollywood theatres presented to her at the testimonial dinner given by the industry to her son on December 3 in Los Angeles, in which prominent producers, directors and stars united in paying tribute to Grauman as the "master showman." The pass was given by the Wampas, who sponsored the dinner. It bears the inscription, "To Mrs. D. J. Grauman—because she is the mother of Sid."

Theatre Acquisitions Still Continue

THEATRE acquisitions by large circuits and the protective consolidation of smaller chains continue to feature the news of the industry. Observers predict that the struggle for valuable theatres will be continued without cessation through 1926, and some local seers, like those in St. Louis, look with dismal pessimism upon the possibility of a seriously over-seated condition.

Negotiations for the merger of the Shea Amusement Company and Publix Theatres Corporation are complete. Two suburban houses in Denver go over to the Midwest Theatres Company. Publix gets a half interest in Blank's Rialto, Omaha, and Blank announces definitely that all his theatres will become affiliated with Publix. West Coast Peninsula Theatres, Inc., is acquiring San Francisco houses, and Ackerman & Harris of the same city report plans for a neighborhood chain.

Buffalo

Negotiations have been completed for the merging of the Shea Amusement Company with Publix Theatres Corporation. A new company has been formed to be known as the Shea Operating Company, the officers of which are Michael Shea, president; Harold B. Franklin, vice-president; Austin C. Keough, secretary, and Fred Metzler, treasurer. The board of directors will include Mr. Shea, Mr. Franklin, Sam Katz, president of Publix, and Vincent R. McFaul, vice-president of the Shea company and for several years managing director of Shea's Hippodrome. Mr. McFaul will be associated with Mr. Shea in the physical operation of the Shea houses, which include the Court Street, Hippodrome, North Park, the new Buffalo, scheduled to open January 16, and the new Kensington, now in the course of construction. The new corporation also announces that it will build a new theatre, to be known as the Metropolitan, at 628 Main street, in between the new Buffalo and the house which the Coplon brothers are building and which is to be operated by Fox. Mr. Shea plans to close the Hippodrome for a period this spring to remodel and redecorate it.

Moe Mark, president of the Mark-Strand interests; Walter Hays, vice-president, and Nathan Robbins, head of the Robbins chain of theatres, met in Syracuse the past week to complete the details of the merger of the Strand-Robbins theatres. Mr. Mark denies a new house is planned for Syracuse, but says the Eckel will be made over into a strictly modern house.

It is reported that Marcus Loew has been seeking a site in Syracuse for a theatre. Information has leaked out that he has made several efforts to secure a downtown site.

Denver

Fred P. Brown, sole owner of the Mission and Pearl theatres, suburban houses in South Denver, announced that he has sold these theatres to the Midwest Theatres Company, possession having been given on January 1. Mr. Brown was formerly Denver manager for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and resigned to become a partner with J. B. Micheletti, who had just sold the Folly Theatre. The Mission Theatre was completed last summer and was one of Denver's finest suburban houses. In acquiring these theatres the Midwest

Shea and Publix Deal Now Completed— Other News

Theatres Company has strengthened its position in Denver, as they now operat three threatres in this city, besides two in Fort Morgan, Col.; two in Sterling, Col., one in Rocky Ford, Col., and one in Sydney, Neb.

Frank Culp, who is one of the officers and one of the chief stockholders in the Midwest Theatres Company, announces the completion of a new theatre at West 25th avenue and Federal Boulevard, which he has named the Granada. This theatre is a short distance from the Rex, which Mr. Culp has operated for many years. The Granada seats 600 and is beautifully equipped.

Milwaukee

A new neighborhood theatre to cost approximately $250,000 and to be operated by the Silliman Theatre Corporation of Milwaukee, is to be operated on the West Side of the city. The building will be erected at Twenty-seventh and Center streets and will be one of the largest Milwaukee uptown theatres.

The building will front ninety feet on Center street and have a depth of 120 feet on Twenty-seventh street. The structure will be only forty feet high, due to the fact that the building height limit ordinance will not permit the erection of a building in this section of the city over that height. One of the unusual features will be an amphitheatre effect. The auditorium will seat 1,600.

Plans for the building of a picture theatre on the West Side in Milwaukee were revealed when Peter Grossman of Milwaukee advertised for bids for the building. He announced that the theatre would cost more than $1000,000. It will be located on Center street between Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth streets and will seat more than 1,000 persons.

Detroit

Detroit is to have still another new theatre in the downtown section, according to an announcement from George W. Trendle, general manager of the John H. Kunsky Theatrical Enterprises. Although definite plans are not given out by Mr. Trendle and will not be until all details have been closed, the theatre is to be of large seating capacity, with unique lighting and seating effects and a stage large enough to handle the biggest presentations. An option has been secured on a downtown site. The architecture will be on the type of the new Balaban & Katz-Kunsky theatre which is now being erected on Bagley avenue and which will open in September.

Connecticut

A merger of theatre interests has taken place in New Britain, Conn., in the sale by Peter Parakos, John S., Michael S., and Charles S. Contaras of an undivided one-half interest in the Capitol, Palace and theatre properties to Israel Hoffman of Ansonia and Bernhart E. Hoffman of New Haven. The deal involves $190,000 cash and a mortgage of $180,000. With a new theatre being built in New Britain by the Hoffman brothers, the entire transaction represents an investment of $1,300,000. The firm will be known as the Capital Real Estate Company and will control four of the New Britain theatres. The Hoffman brothers already control theatres in Hartford, Waterbury, Ansonia, Derby and Torrington.

Butterfield Merges Holdings

W. S. BUTTERFIELD, for many years prominent in the theatre field in Michigan and head of building enterprises in various cities, is to merge his holdings in one company to be known as W. S. Butterfield Theatres, Inc., according to an announcement this week from his Detroit offices.

In his various ventures in the theatre field in state cities, Mr. Butterfield has been forced to create several operating theatre companies, all of which will be combined in the new organization. It is proposed that the owners of stock in the companies now existing will accept stock in the new organization.

The companies operated by Butterfield which will be affected by this merger are Butterfield's original venture, the Bijou Theatrical Enterprises Company, the Consolidated Theatres, Inc., at Grand Rapids, Lansing Arcade and Theatre Co., Flint Regent Theatre Co., Saginaw Franklin Theatre Co., Port Huron Franklin Theatre Co., Flint Capitol Theatre Co., Ann Arbor Theatre Co., and the Gull Lake and Allendale Land companies.

Officers of the new organization will be W. S. Butterfield of Detroit, president; E. C. Beatty of Detroit, vice-president; E. C. Shields of Port Huron, treasurer, and H. A. Rowland of Battle Creek, secretary. ... .

Mr. Butterfield came to Michigan twenty years ago, locating in Battle Creek. After starting a theatre there his activities grew until fifteen months ago when he moved his headquarters from Battle Creek to Detroit and now controls a circuit consisting of forty-five theatres with building plans for five new houses to be erected in the near future.

U. P. Values Film News

IN a letter to Moving Picture World, K. A. Bickel, president of the United Press Associations, with general offices in New York City, takes courteous exception to an exclusive article in the December 26 issue headlined, "Associated Press gives film news more prominence in its service." He feels that this article by implication slights the United Press, declaring that the U. P. has for years been giving prominence to legitimate motion picture news. Moving Picture World is very glad to print Mr. Bickel's letter in full, and sees a healthy situation existing when this great news-gathering organization reports its four-year knowledge of the value of real motion picture news. The letter follows:

"My attention has been called to the issue of Moving Picture World of December 26, 1925, page 745, which carries the headline 'Associated Press gives film news more prominence in its service.'

"It seems to me that this article is exceedingly unfair to the United Press Association serving some nine hundred newspapers in the United States and Canada as well as all of the important newspapers in Central America, West Indies, South America, Japan, Philippine Islands, China, etc., in that the United Press has given legitimate news of the moving picture industry the prominence that it was entitled to for years.

"Reading the article the uninformed reader would be led to believe that until the Associated Press started paying some attention to film news that film news had been neglected. This is decidedly untrue. The statement that 'this romance of big business has heretofore been neglected by the great newsgathering agencies' is also a misstatement.

"Naturally, I do not agree with your statement that the Associated Press is the 'world's greatest news gathering organization,' but that has no direct bearing on the subject of the article and it is not necessary to go into that detail at this time.

"I note that you mention Mr. Will H. Hays in connection with this story. No one knows better than Mr. Hayes the fact that the United Press has always paid a great deal of attention to the news of the moving picture industry and distributed it throughout the entire world."

New Theatre Acquisitions

Ohio

The Crown Theatre, North Baltimore Ohio, and the Rex Theatre, at Ottawa, Ohio, have been acquired by H. Starrett, who was formerly with First National as salesman, traveling out of Cleveland. Starrett also is interested in the Star Theatre, Forest, Ohio, in connection with A. B. Craft.

Omaha

Arthur Mullen, Keith Neville, Walter Brandes and John Latenser disposed of their half interest in the Rialto Theatre, Omaha, operated by the A. H. Blank Realty Co., to Publix last week, which now makes Publix joint owners of this theatre with the Blank interests. The deal involved $180,000 cash and other valuable considerations. Direction of the theatre will continue under the Blank company, which also operates the Strand, is building a new first-class theatre and owns and operates forty theatres in Iowa. A. H. Blank, who was present at Omaha when the deal was made, said definitely that the theatres under his direction are to become affiliated with the chain of theatres already operated by Publix.

Members of the World Realty Co., Omaha, and Samuel and Louis Epstein, have announced the formation of a new theatre company to operate the Roseland and Orpheum theatres on the South Side, Omaha. This company is to be known as the Nebrasak Theatres Company. The Corby Theatre, now being constructed at Sixteenth and Corby streets, and other projects under consideration, will be handled by the new organization. The company is also soon to build a modern theatre at Twenty-fourth and N streets.

George O. Monroe has purchased a site consisting of 100-foot frontage at Forty-fifth street and Military avenue, and will construct a picture theatre building to be completed by August 1, 1926.

San Francisco

With a capital stock of $1,000,000, the West Coast Peninsula Theatres, Inc., has been incorporated, the directors being Ellis J. Arkush and Doretta M. Arkush of Burlingame, May K. Griffin of Redwood City and Jacob Samuels of San Francisco. West Coast Theatres, Inc., recently secured the controlling interest in the chain of theatres operated on the San Francisco peninsula by Ellis J. Arkush and associates and the new concern has been organized to operate these houses.

Ackerman & Harris, San Francisco, have announced plans for the erection of a chain of neighborhood theatres in this city. The first will be the University Theatre in the University Mound district, a house which will have a seating capacity of 1,500. This concern has disposed of its lease on the Broadway Theatre, in course of construction at Portland, Ore., to the North American Theatres Corp., the deal having been closed with Harry C. Arthur, vice-president and general manager of this concern, who was a recent visitor at San Francisco. The deal in a way is an amalgamation of interests, Ackerman & Harris to have charge of the vaudeville interests of the new house, and North American Theatres the film end.

San Diego

A new theatre to cost $500,000 will be built in San Diego on a site covering the entire block of C street between Third and Fourth streets. According to Adolph Ramish, vice-president of the West Coast Theatres, Inc., a 25-year lease has been taken on the site and the rental for that period will run well over $1,000,000. A new theatre company, the identity of which is withheld, is behind the project. However, it is an open secret that William Fox is interested in the enterprise and Ramish himself intimated that although the West Coast Theatres are in no way connected with the plan at present they may be interested at a later date.

Chicago

Lubliner & Trinz expects to experience the best year in its history in 1926, also the $19,000,000 building program will increase realty values in the immediate vicinities of the new theatres by $60,000,000, according to an estimate by leading realtors. It is expected that in 1926 Lubliner & Trinz will announce the building of more theatres.

"Lubliner & Trinz are looking forward to the biggest year in their history in 1926," declared Emil Stern, vice-president and general manager.

"In the month of February alone, according to tentative plans, we are opening three new houses, the Tower, Belmont and Grove. The Grove will be among the finest exclusive picture theatres in the city, while the Tower and Belmont will be among the finest de luxe houses in Chicago. We have just experienced a remarkable year, having opened up two theatres, the Harding and State, and having under construction several others."

Louis Frank has sold the Aristo Theatre at 2650 Lincoln avenue to C. W. Spanuth and his associates. Spanuth is one of the veteran exhibitors of the city, starting eighteen years ago with the Loop houses. Other houses will be added to the circuit from time to time. Officers af the new company are C. W. Spanuth, president, and John B. Mussato, secretary.

ROTHSTEIN HOST TO KIDS

Nat G. Rothstein, director of publicity, advertising and exploitation for F. B. O., was host to a big comedy movie entertainment at the Convalescent Home for Crippled Children at Rockaway Park on December 29. Twelve reels of hilarious comedies and cartoons were shown, and the kids enjoyed every moment of the entertainment. Among those who contributed to the occasion by supplying pictures were F. B. O., Universal, Fox, Educational and Pathe.

Frances Marion to Devote All Time to Goldwyn Productions

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has just completed an agreement with Frances Marion, as one of the most famous scenario writers, by the terms of which Miss Marion will devote her time exclusively to the Samuel Goldwyn productions. Heretofore Miss Marion has been associated with Samuel Goldwyn in a free lance capacity, having written the continuities for all of the eight pictures that this producer has made since entering the independent field. Miss Marion also has devoted much of her time to writing for various other organizations.

It is asserted that above all others this writer enjoys a tremendous income from her free lance work. It is reported that last year Miss Marion disposed of fifteen manuscripts at a regular price of $15,000 each. Under the new Goldwyn contract she will probably receive the highest salary ever paid a scenarist, it is said.

"The work accomplished from Miss Marion's scenarios," said Samuel Goldwyn, "is so directly to the point, whether of comedy, dramatic or novelty values, that I feel we have solved one of the great problems of film production by securing her uninterrupted association."

Miss Marion has completed a story for another organization and went over to the Goldwyn forces on January 7, thereafter devoting her time to the construction of stories for such stars and directors as Ronald Colman, Vilma Banky, Belle Bennett, Henry King, George Fitzmaurice, etc. With only a limited number of stories to prepare each year, Miss Marion will be able to devote more time and attention to the story as it is filmed.

JEROME BEATTY

"Famous" Buys United Studio In Hollywood, Lasky Reports

TO enable it to carry out the most ambitious production program in its history, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has purchased the United Studio in Hollywood, it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president in charge of production.

The United Studio, which is one of the biggest in the business and now houses the production activities of several companies, will be taken over by Famous Players this Spring when Paramount production activities will be transferred from the Lasky Studio in Vine Street, Hollywood, to a new producing center.

"Although our studio in Hollywood has long been considered the best equipped plant in the country," said Mr. Lasky, "it is not big enough to take care of the productions which we have scheduled for this coming year. The United Studio has nine stages and its 26 acres will enable us to expand our activities to take care of the production program we have in mind."

For the present, said Mr. Lasky, there will be no disposition made of the Lasky studio property, which is in the center of Hollywood. It is probable that some production will continue at the Lasky studio throughout the Summer as it is not expected that the necessary additions to the United Studio can be made in time to take care of all of the Paramount production activities for some time to come.

Jerome Beatty Named a Successor to Smith

JEROME BEATTY has been appointed an assistant to the president of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc. He will assume many of the duties heretofore in charge of Courtland Smith, who has resigned to join the Fox Theatres Corporation.

Mr. Beatty was loaned to the Hays organization last April by Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, to conduct the Greater Movie Season Celebration. Arrangements were made by Mr. Hays to make the loan permanent, and since the end of Greater Movie Season Mr. Beatty has been in charge of various activities of the association.

After ten years of newspaper experience throughout the United States, Mr. Beatty entered motion pictures as publicity director in 1915 for Essanay. Following that he was with Thanhouser, McClure Pictures and six years with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as advertising manager, then director of publicity and advertising and later as representative of the Department of Distribution in the Lasky Studio in Hollywood. He left Famous Players to join Preferred Pictures, and upon the dissolution of that company went with Universal as director of exploitation. He has been a frequent contributor to magazines.

Chicago Bandit Gets $10,000 From McVickers

A LONE bandit held up Edgar Doob, treasurer of McVickers Theatre of Balaban & Katz, Chicago, on New Year's evening and escaped into the crowds of Madison street with $10,000 in bills from the safe of the house. Doob and his wife were in the mezzanine floor offices when the lone bandit appeared, forced the treasurer at the point of a gun to stuff the bills from the safe into a Gladstone bag and warned him not to make an outcry. While the hold-up was in progress, Willet Warren, an assistant floor manager, appeared at the entrance of the offices and was covered by the robber.

On New Year's night bandits forced their way into the Crystal Theatre of the Schaefer circuit between the closing of the theatre and 8 a. m. and took safe and contents amounting to almost $2,000.

There were several theatre robberies in Chicago last year, the largest being that of the State Lake Theatre when a lone robber made away with about $14,000.

Adopt New Policies For Warners Theatre

WITH the opening of the world premiere run of John Barrymore in "The Sea Beast" on January 15 Warner Bros. will put into operation new policies affecting almost the entire conduct of Warners Theatre, New York.

For one thing, Warner's will cease to be a continuous performance house. "The Sea Beast" is a big production, both the size and importance of which make it almost necessary to limit showings to two a day. With other unusually important pictures ahead it is proposed to follow the new arrangement permanently.

Tentatively, Warner Bros. have decided to start the regular week-day afternoon performance at 2:45, the evening program at 8:30 and that of Sunday afternoons at 3 o'clock.

A revised schedule of admission prices calls for an evening top price of $2 and an afternoon top of $1. Evening prices for all pictures will be $1, $1.50 and $2, and matinee prices 50 cents and $1.

GUMBINER BRANCHING OUT

The Gumbiner Enterprises, which controls ten theatres in Chicago including the Bryn Mawr, Star and Paulina, is branching out into the country territory and last week organized the Illini Amusement Company with a capital of $10,000 to take over the Illini Theatre at Mount Sterling, Ill., from George L. Greenough and W. A. Weeks of that city. Other houses will be added to the country circuit of the company in the near future. Max Gumbiner, Albert Goldman and Victor P. Frank are the principals in the Illini Amusement Company.

Paramount's Exploitation Dept. Reorganized; Kantner in Charge

A REORGANIZATION of the exploitation department of Paramount, following the resignation of Claud Saunders as manager, has just been announced by George W. Weeks, general manager of distribution.

Under the new plan Oscar Kantner, formerly exploitation representative in San Francisco, has been transferred to the home office to supervise the activities of the field force. Leon J. Bamberger, formerly assistant to Mr. Saunders, has been appointed manager of special exploitation with national campaigns under his supervision.

Since Mr. Saunders' resignations there has been a realignment of the field force which now comprises sixteen men. This staff will be enlarged immediately, however, under Mr. Kantner's direction.

The present field representatives and their assignments follow:

Lee Balsley, Columbus—Columbus and Cleveland territories.

Albert Birch, Denver—Denver and Salt Lake territories.

John Callahan, Boston—Boston, New Haven and Maine territories.

Ed. Corcoran, Philadelphia—Philadelphia and Wilkes-Barre territories.

Earl Cunningham, Kansas City—Kansas City and St. Louis territories.

William Danziger, Chicago—Chicago, Milwaukee and Peoria territories.

Curtis Dunham, Dallas—Dallas, Oklahoma City, San Antonio and New Orleans territories.

Harry Eagles, Seattle—Seattle and Portland territories.

Kenton Franklin, Atlanta—Atlanta, Jacksonville, Charlotte and Memphis territories.

George Gambrill, Cincinnati—Cincinnati, Indianapolis and Louisville.

Russell Moon, New York City—New York, Albany, Buffalo and Jersey territories.

Luther Putnam, Minneapolis—Minneapolis, Sioux Falls, Des Moines and Omaha territories.

William Robson, Pittsburgh—Pittsburgh territory.

Harry Swift, Los Angeles—Los Angeles territory.

Edward Wall, Detroit—Detroit territory.

Irving Zeltner, Washington, D. C.—Washington territory.

"Exploitation," said Mr. Weeks in his announcement, "is one of the most important phases of our business. Next to the pictures themselves it has done more than any other one factor in making the theatre an institution.

"In placing Mr. Kantner and Mr. Bamberger in charge of different phases of the exploitation department we are expanding our service. To the exhibitor this expansion will mean, 100 per cent. assistance in winning 100 per cent. patronage for his theatre.

"Exploitation has two logical divisions. The one must direct its energies toward national campaigns. These create an advance interest in pictures, an interest which is sustained through all engagements of the productions. The second division is the field force, the individuals of which form a point of contact between the theatre and the public.

"Members of the field force must do more than merely exploit the individual picture. It is within their power to create good will for the theatre and for the industry itself."

R. A. Rowland Goes West For Conference With Producers

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, general manager of First National Pictures, has left for the West Coast Studios where he will remain several weeks in conference with producers and directors associated with First National. This is Mr. Rowland's regular mid-winter visit to the West Coast.

Before leaving, Mr. Rowland said that the production plans of the company at both the eastern and western studios were well ahead of schedule and that everything is set for the release of the greatest array of pictures ever distributed by First National. He expressed himself as delighted with the work done by George Archainbaud and his company starring Milton Sills, recently returned from Birmingham where exteriors were made for "Men of Steel," which will be one of the big specials of the coming year. On his arrival at the West Coast Mr. Rowland expects to see a complete print of "The Viennese Medley," a heralded June Mathis production.

While in Los Angeles the general manager will confer with John E. McCormick, western representative of the company, who is presenting Colleen Moore in the strongest series of starring pictures the popular young actress has ever had. He will also have an opportunity to consider in detail the plans of the allied producers whose product is being handled by First National, including Joseph M. Schenck, Sam Rork, M. C. Levee, Marion Fairfax, John M. Stahl and E. M. Asher, all of whom are contributing product to the new year's program.

"I believe that the coming year will prove more conclusively than ever the box office value of popular stars," said Mr. Rowland. "A production may be artistic, the story may have dramatic value and there may be the appeal of a good box office title; but without a star whose name means something to the public, the actual worth of a picture will not be realized. This is not theory but fact, as shown by exhibitors' reports on pictures without stars and those with them.

"In handling the First National product exhibitors are assured of a profit, not only because of the story values we are offering but also by reason of the unbeatable list of stars assembled under the First National banner. There are no more popular players on the screen today than Norma Talmadge, Colleen Moore, Corinne Griffith, Constance Talmadge, Richard Barthelmess, Milton Sills, Harry Langdon, Leon Errol and Johnny Hines."

In and Out of Town

Lee Marcus, general sales manager of F. B. O., left on January 5 for a swing around the exchanges. He will be gone one month.

Ben Lyon has gone to Florida. He will shortly sail for the West Indies with "The Savage" company.

Kenneth J. Bishop, president of Tennek Film Corporation, is in Los Angeles increasing the capacity of his production units.

Helen Lee Worthing has completed "Wives for Rent" for Universal and is in New York.

Cliff Broughton, manager of Mrs. Wallace Reid Productions, is in New York.

Frank Keenan has returned from a trip abroad.

Arlette Marchal has gone to the West Coast.

Rowland V. Lee has sailed for a vacation in Europe.

Louis A. Sarecky, business manager of the Herbert Brenon unit, has sailed for France.

Monte Blue is vacationing in New York.

Thomas Meighan and company have returned from location in Florida.

WALTER EBERHARDT MARRIES

Mrs. George Bruce Brooks announces the marriage of her sister, Miss Harriet Howard Kimball, to Walter Faber Eberhardt, in charge of national advertising for First National Pictures Corporation and one of the most popular members of the A. M. P. A. on December 30 at the Church of the Transfiguration, New York City. Mr. and Mrs. Eberhardt are now at home at 19 West Sixteenth street.

WEINBERGER APPOINTED

Arthur M. Weinberger has been appointed office manager by the United Artists Corporation. Mr. Weinberger held a similar position with Famous Players-Lasky's New York Exchange for six years, and was also office manager for First National's New York Exchange for two years prior to joining United Artists.

G. A. BOVYER DIES

George Arthur Bovyer, 40 years of age, who is well known on the Pacific Coast and who recently handled the exploitation of Grauman's Egyptian Theatre, Los Angeles, died last week. He leaves a host of friends.

RICHARD A. ROWLAND

"Ben Hur" Premiere

The Screen's Most Stupendous Picture Opened at the Cohan Theatre, New York City, Dec. 30

By Charles Edward Hastings

"BEN HUR" was given its world premiere at the George M. Cohan Theatre, New York City, on Wednesday night, December 30, 1925.

The last hours of the closing year saw the first glimpse of the most stupendous picture the screen has known.

Fred Niblo directed this Louis B. Mayer production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, under an agreement reached with Florenz Ziegfeld, Charles Dillingham and A. L. Erlanger, who control all rights to the novel, by General Lew Wallace.

The George M. Cohan Theatre had been "done over" for this premiere, and the first night audience, made up of leading figures in the motion picture industry, greeted the unfolding of the picture with great applause.

Among those at the premiere were: Will H. Hays, Mr. and Mrs. Marcus Loew, A. L. Erlanger, David Warfield, Major and Mrs. Edward Bowes (Margaret Illington), Francis X. Bushman, Alice Joyce, Mr. and Mrs. Adolph Zukor, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse L. Lasky, Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Schenck, Mr. and Mrs. Jules Brulatour (Hope Hampton), Mr. and Mrs. J. Robert Rubin, Mr. and Mrs. Vincent Astor, Rupert Hughes, Ray Long, Richard A. Rowland, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Loew, Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Wallace (grandson of the author of "Ben Hur," now assistant secretary of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, Inc.), Rev. Dr. Stephen S. Wise, Mr. and Mrs. David Loew and a score of bishops, priests and ministers representing all denominations in the metropolitan district of New York City.

Keen lovers of the silent drama, the majority of those present at the premiere were keyed up to a high pitch, after waiting three years or more for this picture.

That first audience applauded all the way through the twelve reels in which "Ben Hur" is offered. A cast of exceptional merit, with great artists appearing, nameless, in small roles, was a commanding factor in the applause, but the massive sets, great throngs, the galley scenes, the chariot race, the subdued sequences, a vastness overshadowing everything—all of these things contributed to the crowning glory of a marvelous achievement in the cinema art.

The director, and Mrs. Niblo, were present. The director was given an ovation.

Writers on motion picture events for the New York newspapers praised "Ben Hur," without exception.

"It is a great spectacle," the "Daily News" said. "The photography is marvelous. It is an exhilarating sight. We get only a glimpse of Betty Bronson as the Madonna, but that glimpse is as lovely as anything we have seen on the screen."

"For ten years 'Ben Hur' has been planned," says the New York American. "For three years it has been in production. We hasten to say that it has been well worth waiting for."

The New York Times says: "Ordinary conventional methods have been discarded by Mr. Niblo, who, while he has availed himself of every iota of photographic worth in the thrilling episodes, nevertheless, finds it pleasant to get in trenchant streaks and positively sublime poetic touches. And when the march to Calvary is depicted it is done with such solemnity and quiet respect that one feels impelled to bow one's head."

The Evening Journal says: "Beautifully presented, magnificently made, 'Ben Hur' opened at the George M. Cohan Theatre. People forgot they were in a theatre, and cheered as the twelve teams of four horses raced around the arena."

FRED NIBLO

Whose direction of "Ben Hur," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer screen classic, places him high among the creative geniuses of the motion picture industry.

Fred Niblo Joins Rank of Master Directors As a Result of Splendid Work in "Ben Hur"

FRED NIBLO joins the rank of master directors as a result of his work with "Ben Hur."

It will be remembered that when Niblo took up the direction of this powerful story, the clay had been well thumbed. But he went to work anew, with fresh tools, and turned out his own splendid creation.

Not a frame of anything that came from the laboratory prior to Niblo's taking charge has found its way into the colossal spectacle at the George M. Cohan Theatre.

Arriving in New York City a few hours prior to the opening, Mr. Niblo was deeply affected by the reception accorded "Ben Hur."

In a chat with a representative of Moving Picture World, Mr. Niblo pointed out that in supervising the cutting of "Ben Hur," many scenes which he had taken were deleted, in order to make a picture that would meet with the approval of the great majority of screen lovers. But sufficient has been retained of incidents in the Holy Land to appease all who see the picture.

"Directing the chariot races was," Mr. Niblo said, "my most harrowing experience. We had to take every precaution to protect the lives of our players, and the splendid horses used in those shots. I lived sleepless nights, dreaming of possible catastrophe! One morning my attention was directed to a 'spill,' some distance down the course from where we were standing. When I saw six chariots piled up in the crash, my heart stopped beating. Mercifully, however, when the mass had been disentangled, we found nobody had been hurt, and the horses escaped. Six of my forty-eight cameras, scattered about the Circus Maximus, had been grinding on every incident of that smash, and it will readily be seen how very fortunate we were. Frankly, I had planned to 'stage' a crash, but this wholly unforeseen event made this unnecessary."

Mr. Niblo was amused to find that high production executives who saw "Ben Hur" refused to believe that Ramon Novarro and Francis X. Bushman actually drove the chariots in some of the most exciting scenes in this sequence.

"The fact is that both Novarro and Bushman actually drove those horses. I had splendid 'doubles' ready to throw in, but once those boys got used to their horses, nothing could drag them away. Why," Mr. Niblo added, with gusto, "they went careening about the Circus quite disregarding me, at moments. They were thrilled with their work."

Mr. and Mrs. Niblo will set out for Europe, shortly, and spend several months on the Continent, resting. Mr. Niblo is taking several manuscripts and books with him, to peruse for future pictures.

"A Magnificent Achievement"

"BEN HUR" is a magnificent achievement. It is a real contribution to society and it will be received accordingly by all peoples everywhere. Every person who has any part in the exhibition, distribution or production of motion pictures will rejoice with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and all those associated in its production. The entire industry is to be congratulated.

Cops Guard Kansas House After Printed Warnings

A special guard from the police department and sheriff's office has been assigned to guard the Bowersock Theatre of Lawrence, Kas. The move followed a request by G. W. Dickinson, owner of the theatre, who owns a string of houses, after a circulation of handbills throughout the town warning the public that those who attended the theatre would "do so at their own peril."

The theatre has experienced several labor difficulties since November 15, 1924, when the house went on an open shop basis.

CANADA CENSORS ACTIVE

Considerable attention is being paid once more to the subject of censorship. In Nova Scotia and New Brunswick the boards were recently organized, and now in British Columbia a warm debate has taken place in the Provincial Legislature at Victoria, B. C. This was started when C. A. Walkem, one of the members of the House, advocated the establishment of one central board of censors for all Canada on the ground of economy, in place of the present arrangement of one board for each of the nine provinces. Attorney-General Manson supported the suggestion, but disagreed with an idea that film censorship was entirely unnecessary.

One Cent on a Dollar for Chicago Theatre Investors

According to the Herald Examiner, the post office inspectors report the investors in the defunct Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation will realize about one cent on a dollar of their investments in the enterprise. It was believed at first that F. H. Bruenberg and the other indicted officials of the company would be able to produce assets that might total quite a bit more than the above on the losses, but the report says that the directors and officials unloaded their holdings while the prices were good and got out with their bonds and stocks.

Loew—the Great Indian!

"BEN HUR" premiere. Three little words. Yet it took over TWO YEARS to write them into the picture record! Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has etched them deep on a GOLDEN page of moving picture history.

All the money that has gone into "Ben Hur" will return—and a lot more. All the heart-ache that went into it is being rewarded. All the craft and artistry that went into it is receiving the tremendous ovation it deserves.

Back in the days when they couldn't put out the "Deerfoot" series and the Frank Merriwell stories fast enough to suit our devouring taste, we fastened on "Big Chief One Blanket" as the name par excellence in Indian lore. "Big Chief ONE Blanket" rang a bell with us. There was something about it that hinted of scornful indifference to the perils of clammy "canyuns" and snowbound forests. One blanket was ROYAL RAIMENT when worn for Young America's sake.

From "Big Chief One Blanket" grows another name. It is "Big Chief MANY Pictures"—Marcus Loew. We are sure that if Marcus Loew were to be made a member of an Indian tribe, such would be the name bestowed upon him. Lo, the poor Indian is Loew the Great Indian.

On the motion picture reservation today the CHIEF who takes to his TEPEE after making one good picture soon has his wigwam in hock. "Big Chief ONE Picture" sits at his council fire alone.

A POPULAR discussion today is "Which do you think is the GREATEST picture ever made—'The Big Parade' or 'Ben Hur'?" What could be sweeter music to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer—to Marcus Loew and to Louis B. Mayer?

To the latter we would apply the Indian name, "Young Man Not Afraid of His Horse." Mayer is not afraid to RIDE the PRODUCTION horse because he has the Indian sign on it.

"Ben Hur" is majesty in celluloid form. It is like a statue done in heroic size. It leans over anything in its vicinity, near or far.

Ben Hur's chariot might have been a "chariot of gloom. IT ISN'T. In it the officials of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, with Fred Niblo, Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy, Betty Bronson, Carmel Myers, Claire McDowell, Kathleen Key, Nigel de Brulier, Mitchell Lewis, Frank Currier, June Mathis, Carey Wilson, Catherine Hilliker and H. H. Caldwell have galloped to fame that will long outlive them.

"Ben Hur" premiere. The three greatest words that have yet been written in production history.

WILLIAM J. REILLY.

Reviews from the Screen Viewpoint of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

By Gray Strider

"The Dybbuk"

ANSKY'S "The Dybbuk" has become the dramatic sensation of New York since its opening at the Neighborhood playhouse. In this mystic melodrama Ansky shows the spiritual side of the Ghetto as it existed up to the beginning of the twentieth century. Its earnestness, its sweetness, its sacredness are heartbreaking.

Leah, a beautiful Jewish maiden, and her predestined husband, Channon, an eminent student, are not permitted to marry because of Channon's poverty. The boy dies untimely and the Dybbuk, the soul of the student, enters into Leah's body and prevents her from marrying the rich dolt of a bridegroom selected by her material father.

The Dybbuk—the spirit—laughs, beseeches, sobs, demands, curses, pleads, hovers, implores, penetrates, prays, exalts, caresses, vibrates until Leah, answering the call of her beloved, falls dead on the Synagogue floor.

This is a magnificent triumph of acting and of interpreting the Hebraic life, faith and superstition. It is a thing of the spirit, too terrifyingly supernatural to be placed upon the screen.

Mary Ellis as Leah and every other separate actor and actress lived rather than acted his part.

"Dope"

HERMANN LIEB has taken Medill Patterson's old playlet of some fifteen years ago and expanded it into a melodramatic conception which is guaranteed to send the children of any movie audience howling into the street and to cause even the most stalwart young man to feel shivers running down his spine as THE WOMAN WITH THE BLUE VEIL is found poisoned back of the drug store.

"The Unconscious Comedian"

IF there's any moving picture actor in these United States who is willing to swap off his virile young manhood in favor of a real acting part, the role of a mature husband of thirty-five, step right up to the literary shop window and page Eduardo Zamacois whose peerless comedy "The Opinion of Others" is outstanding in Spanish literature.

So far as we are concerned over here, Zamacois might be a ditch digger or a bootlegger. But he's not. He's not only the contemporary of Blasco Ibanez whose story "The Four Horsemen" has poured over every screen in the land, but he is the MASTER of Ibanez. Ibanez floods. Zamacois etches.

"The Opinion of Others" is the story of Higinio Perea, the ordinary Spanish husband of modern means. He gets up at the same hour, drooping mustache, yellow teeth, increasing paunch, drinks the same kind of coffee; eats the same bean and potato soup, kisses his wife with the same placid moderation, meets at the same Casino with the same cronies, listens to the same risque stories, the same braggadoccio, and goes home to the same wife and the same bed.

One day this changes. Perea wins the lottery. FIFTY THOUSAND PESETAS! His wife persuades him to go to Paris to buy her a really fashionable fur coat; his sister-in-law wishes one of the new style corsets; and his friend, Don Cenan, whispers that he has long yearned for a cigarette case with an unadorned female engraved upon it.

Filled with high hopes of potential romantic adventures Perea starts out. He attempts some little familiarity with a French lady in the railroad carriage and gets his face slapped for his pains.

In Paris he stops at a second rate hotel, has second rate adventures and all the genuine excitement that he has comes through the newspapers as he reads of a celebrated murder case. The police have only been able to establish the bare fact that an unfortunate man met his death in a duel at the hands of his wife's lover who immediately disappeared.

Perea goes home bitterly disappointed. Life stabs at him. His youthful hopes refuse to die despite his dun exterior. He returns to the same Casino and listens to the same cronies telling the same yarns. Finally, the injustice and ennui of life rouse him; he decides to tell some lies himself. Standing in the center of the room, he announces: "Gentlemen, you know the scar that I carry upon my body. You have all thought it came from a childhood accident. My honor has forced me to keep silent but now—I tell you how I—Higinio Perea, consumed by love and immortal passion, killed in Paris the husband of————in a duel."

He strips and shows the old scar. The half-drunk, half-wit local doctor agrees that the bullet never came out and must be lodged inside. Perea assents and says he would not permit the Parisian surgeon to remove it.

Overnight Perea breaks his aenemic chrysalis. He becomes the great Casanova. His wife is now his slave. He saves a girl from a burning house. The women in the town fawn upon him. All the illegitimate children of the village are attributed to him, the greatest of LOVERS and HEROES.

Years pass. This ageing Don Juan overeats and drinks too much. He suffers from rheumatism and takes to bed. Pains spread to his abdomen. It swells. The country doctor is summoned. This old sawbones proclaims that the trouble is not rheumatism but is caused by the ancient bullet—which must be taken out.

Perea fights this diagnosis. His heart is weak. He knows there is no bullet and that the chloroform will kill him.

To die a hero or to live a coward by acknowledging himself a liar—these thoughts confuse him as he is wheeled into the operating room. With a last tremendous bluff—in memory of his supposed hopeless attachment—he raises himself on the stretcher and says: "If anything should happen, my only request is that my body be enveloped in the French flag."

This unconscious comedian dies before the knife can reveal his secret.

UNIVERSAL BUYS FOUR NEW STORIES

UNIVERSAL has purchased screen rights to two stories, a play and a musical comedy to produce for the 1926 program, according to announcement by Edward Montagne, scenario editor.

"Doubling for Daphne," from the short story by Peggy Gaddis, is being adapted by Melville Brown as a starring production for Laura La Plante. Brown will also direct the picture under a new contract which elevates him to directorial rank.

"Too Many Cooks," from the play by Frank Craven, has also been purchased and the adaptation has been written.

"Take It From Me," a recent musical comedy success, has been purchased as a starring vehicle for Reginald Denny, and probably will be directed by William A. Seiter.

Edward Sedgwick will direct "The Rocky Mountain Flier," based on a series of railroad stories by Frank O. Spearman. Curtis Benton is writing the adaptation.

WANT BULLOCK BACK

According to reports received from Cleveland, Ohio, and emanating from sources believed to be reliable, it looks as if the popular Sam Bullock, erstwhile field representative of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, will be reinstated to his former post. At least, the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, in the original organization of which Bullock was the leading spirit, is sponsoring a movement to bring about this result, petitions having been circulated for signature of the local members, which documents will subsequently be circulated throughout the state. Many of the present improved conditions enjoyed by the Ohio exhibitors are due to Bullock's ceaseless activities when he was field representative of the association, which position he occupied until about six months ago.

"MET" POLICY CHANGED

The policy of the Metropolitan Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the leading downtown cinemas, has been entirely revised following a decision on the part of H. M. Thomas, Western Division manager of Famous Players, to discontinue the presentation of complete vaudeville programs at the theatre. The Met. is now showing pictures exclusively under the direction of Charles Straw, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre at Brandon, Man. It is playing up its music along with the screen presentation. A. Demkies being in charge of a ten-piece orchestra and two prominent local organists, Walter Dolman and H. J. Naftel, presiding at the pipe organ. Prices were given a shake-up, the evening scale being 25 to 50 cents, and all seats at matinees 25 cents. Children pay 10 cents at all times.

RHODE ISLAND FIRE PANIC

Two boys were trampled upon and injured in a near-panic caused by a fire in the Strand Theatre at Woonsocket on New Year's Day. The blaze was confined to the second floor of the block housing the theatre and caused a loss of $30,000. There were 1,500 persons in the Strand when the fire was discovered and there was a mad rush for the exits when dense clouds of smoke filled the theatre.

NOT THE LEAST FASCINATING SCENES in Cecil B. DeMille's "Braveheart," featuring Rod LaRocque, are those depicting the Indian settlement, shown here. Alan Hale directed this picture, with Lillian Rich, Robert Edeson, Tyrone Power and Jean Acker in supporting roles. Producers Distributing Corporation will release this feature.

Producers International Corp. Establishes New Exchanges in Europe; Closes Big Deals

WILLIAM M. VOGEL, general manager of Producers International Corporation, returned from Europe last week after an absence of almost three months, during which time he visited England, France, Switzerland, Germany, Sweden, Italy, Czecho-Slovakia, Austria and Hungary.

Mr. Vogel reports that the affairs of Producers Distributing Company, Ltd., throughout the United Kingdom were in the most gratifying condition, with the eight British exchanges lining up play dates at a rate equivalent to that of the older established distributing companies.

Speaking of the pre-release engagement of Cecil B. De Mille's "The Road to Yesterday" at the Tivoli Theatre, London, which is to open January 11th, Mr. Vogel says that the trade generally is highly enthusiastic about Cecil B. De Mille's first personally produced special after seeing it at the trade shows, and predict for it a successful run at that West End playhouse. Twelve of the first series of fourteen Pro-Dis-Co productions have now been trade shown, but owing to the advanced booking system, regular releases will not start until March. Incidentally the British theatres are again doing a splendid business; larger, apparently, than even that of last year.

"When I arrived in Germany," said Mr. Vogel, "I found that the public there was very much interested in the improvements taking place in the theatre field within the past three or four months. Some more new first run theatre construction has been started and a number of leading old fashioned film theatres were modernized along American lines, notably the Ufa Palast, Berlin's largest motion picture theatre. Whereas, until recently, this theatre had the atmosphere of a barren, cold walled enclosure, with a classical orchestra that rendered music usually unrelated to the subject matter being screened, with one minute stops between reels, while its one projection machine was being threaded, today this theatre has a seventy-five piece orchestra under the direction of Erno Rapee, rendering music that interprets the photoplay and synchronizes with its action. Mr. Rapee is introducing American presentation methods on each program and the public is readily patronizing this theatre in increased numbers and in other ways expressing its approval.

"In Czecho-Slovakia we are opening our own distribution exchange with Jan V. Musil as general manager and M. Z. Chrastil as sales manager. Up to this time Messrs. Musil and Chrastil were co-partners in Famous Films, Prague, where they also handled a number of important Pro-Dis-Co productions. The new P. D. C., Ltd., of Prague has taken over the Famous Films exchanges.

"I arranged for the opening of our own exchange in Geneva for distribution in Switzerland. There we have appointed as manager, Mr. Joe Marius Boimond, who two years ago opened the Fox office in Switzerland with a very successful record while he remained in charge.

"We are also opening our own office in Brussels to handle distribution throughout Belgium in association with Mr. Georges A. Boucksert, who for the last several years has run his own exchanges in Brussels under the name of Etabl. Dumarteau. Our Belgian organization will probably bear the title of Belge Producers Distributing Corporation, S. A., and will take over the Etabl. Dumarteau.

"Sweden is another territory where we are operating our own exchange. While in Stockholm, we acquired control of Film Aktiebolaget Tule, our former distributor there. Mr. Lars Bjorck is taking charge of the management and will preside over Pro-Dis-Co distribution in all Scandinavia, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

"In Holland we closed an extensive contract covering the distribution of our current product with Loet C. Barnstyn of the Hague.

"Outright sales of the Pro-Dis-Co. releases have been made in practically each of the remaining countries of Europe—it being our preference to sell direct to native exchanges wherever any market can purchase an adequate quantity at prices that justify our recognized standard of production value.

"In retrospect, this trip proved a very busy and constructive one, as it resulted in establishing Producers International Corporation in many of the most important territories in the European market."

Six New Players Added to "Paris at Midnight" Cast

Brandon Hurst, Jocelyn Lee, Mathilde Comont, Carrie Daumery, Jean DeBriac and Fannie Yantis have been added to the cast of "Paris at Midnight," Frances Marion's screen version of the Balzac classic, "Pere Goriot," for Metropolitan Pictures. Jetta Goudal, Lionel Barrymore, Mary Brian, Edmund Burns and Emile Chautard portray the leading roles under the direction of E. Mason Hopper.

CORNERED—A tense moment for Richard Talmadge in F. B. O.'s "The Blue Streak."

"The Cub" Stars Johnny Hines, His Second Comedy for F. N.

JOHNNY HINES has realized his boyhood ambition. In his second feature comedy to be released shortly through First National Pictures Hines is the star of "The Cub," a stage production he saw fifteen years ago in New York.

Johnny Hines then sat in the gallery of a Broadway theatre and saw Douglas Fairbanks in the role of the cub reporter assigned to "cover" a feud in a little town in Kentucky.

"I'll never forget that show as long as I live," commented the screen comedian the other day. "Fairbanks was great in it—I think it gave him his real start as a comedian and helped him get a start in pictures."

About that time Johnny Hines got a part in "Alias Jimmy Valentine" on the legitimate stage and eventually got into motion pictures.

A year ago, just when First National Pictures signed contracts with C. C. Burr, producer of Johnny Hines comedies, for the making of three special features, Hines suggested that "The Cub" would make a good film.

Negotiations were begun for purchase of the film rights to "The Cub," they were approved by First National, and Johnny Hines and the scenario staff got to work immediately on the continuity.

Now, "The Cub" has just been finished. it will be released as a photoplay, however, under the name of "Rainbow Riley."

"Why did we change the title?" asked Johnny Hines. "Well, you see, it was the rainbow I'd chased fifteen years and finally got it. Riley is the name of the cub reporter. And, believe me, I hope 'Rainbow Riley' has the proverbial pot of gold at the end. I've worked hard on it, and I think it is the best picture I've made, worthy of release by First National Pictures."

Production work on "Rainbow Riley" was completed last week at the Jackson studios in the Bronx. Most of the exteriors were made at Delaware Water Gap. The film is now being edited and prepared for release probably the middle of January as one of First National's contributions to the concerted program of producers and distributors to make January "The Laugh Month" of the season.

Sax Signs Ralph Lewis

In the line with his announced policy of advanced preparation and expansion for the coming season Sam Sax, producer of Gotham Productions, and president of Lumas Film Corporation, gave out the information that Ralph Lewis had been placed under contract to be starred in at least two special Gotham productions during the 1926-27 season.

Brown To Direct For "U"

Melville Brown, who has been a member of the Universal scenario staff for almost three years, has signed a contract to direct features with that company. He will begin production for his first picture "Doubling for Daphne" soon.

Paul Powell to Direct "The Prince of Pilsen"

Allan Forrest Signed to Play Title Role With Anita Stewart in Featured Feminine Part

With the selection of Paul Powell as director, A. H. Sebastian's production "The Prince of Pilsen" will soon be started at the Metropolitan Studios.

The announcement is also made of the engagement of George Sidney for the part of Hans Wagner, the leading character role of the picture.

Another selection for "The Prince of Pilsen" is Allan Forrest, whose recent appearance in the principal male role of the latest Sebastian Production, "Fifth Avenue," established him as a leading man of exceptional qualifications. Forrest will play the title role in "The Prince of Pilsen" with Anita Stewart opposite him in the featured feminine role. Photography will be in charge of J. C. Van Trees, one of the industry's leading cameramen.

Bartlett Joins Kane

Randolph Bartlett has joined Robert T. Kane Productions in the capacity of production editor. After the work which Mr. Bartlett did on "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," Mr. Kane immediately took steps to make him a permanent member of his organization.

Mr. Bartlett has titled and edited many of Famous Players-Lasky's biggest pictures. He has made a specialty of this peculiarly distinctive type of work for many years. Mr. Bartlett's headquarters will be at the Cosmopolitan studio in New York where the Kane productions are made for release by First National.

Acord Returns From Location

Art Acord, Universal western star, and the company filming "The Tuneful Tornado," under the direction of Arthur Rosson, have returned from a week's location trip to Lon Pine, California. The remainder of the picture will be filmed at the studio. Olive Hasbrouck is playing the feminine lead opposite the star.

MARION DAVIES

The M.-G.-M. star has the title role in "Beverly of Graustark," and also impersonates the crown prince of that mythical kingdom. Here is your crown prince. Nifty!

To Print Novelizations Of Warner Features

Warner Bros. have effected an exploitation tie-up with the Jacobsen-Hodgkinson Corporation, publishers, of 1440 Broadway, New York, whereby the latter is to publish novelizations of several of the Warner pictures.

The first to appear will be "Other Women's Husbands," from a story by E. T. Lowe, Jr. This picture is now in production, with Erle Kenton directing, and Monte Blue, Marie Prevost, Huntly Gordon, Phyllis Haver and Marjorie Gay in the cast.

The novelization will appear in the "Popular Plays And Screen Library" series, a collection of paper-bound books. The books sell at ten cents each. They have a tremendous circulation, for they are on sale in all five and ten-cent stores in the country and in every railroad station in which there is a newstand, besides thousands of regular book stores.

Sterling to Play Featured Role In Big Paramount Film

Announcement has been made by Hector Turnbull, associate producer for Paramount, that Ford Sterling will play a featured role in "Miss Brewster's Millions," the starring vehicle for Bebe Daniels which will go into production at the West Coast studios within a few days.

"Miss Brewster's Millions," will be the comedian's first picture under his new long term contract, which he signed following his work in the two Paramount pictures, "The American Venus" and "Stage Struck."

Big Universal Booking

Reginald Denny's next three Universal Jewel pictures have been signed up by the Big Metropolitan Theatre, the F. P. L. first run house in Los Angeles, it is reported from the Universal home office. The three pictures are "What Happened to Jones" "Skinner's Dress Suit" and "Rolling Home."

Thomson to Make Several Big Productions for F. B. O.

STARTING with "The Tough Guy," Fred Thomson's forthcoming Western feature shortly to be released by F. B. O., the Thomson attractions will be made on an even bigger scale than in the past, according to advices from J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production, now at the coast studios of the company.

So swiftly has Thomson risen to the heights as a box office star, and so insistent has been the demand from exhibitors for his well made attractions, that F. B. O. has decided to increase the production budget for all future productions in which the big Western hero is to be starred, along with his famous horse, Silver King. No expense whatever is to be spared in making each succeeding Thomson attraction bigger and better than its predecessor.

Under the supervision of Milton Gardner, production manager for Thomson, a corps of writers is at work on stories for future Thomson productions. Thomson, too, takes a direct and active interest in the preparations of all his stories for the screen, carefully analyzing every angle of the script, and insisting at all times upon the inclusion of showmanship for the benefit of the exhibitor.

Edna Marian Chosen by Wampas

Edna Marian, star in Century Comedies, and one of the leading box-office attractions of the Century Comedy release schedule, has been selected by the Western Associated Motion Picture Advertiser — the WAMPAS—as one of the thirteen young screen players who show the most promise for the coming year.

Vital Managers Meet

The branch managers' convention of Vital Exchanges, Inc', assembled at the Hotel Astor, Broadway and 45th Street, New York City, lasting from December 19 to 21, and called for by David D. Hochreich, president of Vital Exchanges, Inc., has just been brought to a most successful conclusion.

A banquet was given in honor of Leo A. Price, chairman of the Board of Drectors of Vital Exchanges, Inc., on the evening of December 21 at the College Hall of the Hotel Astor.

Garfield with Nat Levine

Herman Garfield, pioneer distributor, whose association with the industry dates back to the days of 1909, is now in California conferring with Nat Levine and Sam Bischoff for the handling of next year's output.

To Star Margaret Livingston In "Hell's Four Hundred"

Because of her work in "Havoc," "Wages for Wives," "The Wheel" and "A Trip to Chinatown," Margaret Livingston has been elevated to stardom by Fox Films in "Hell's Four Hundred," to be directed by John Griffith Wray. This is an adaptation from Vaughn Kester's novel, "The Just and the Unjust."

"Hell's Four Hundred" is the story of a cabaret girl who goes forth hunting "big game" and lands her quarry among New York's blue blood society. Later she discovers that her find is slipping financially.

F. B. O. Completes 9 Gold Bond Pictures; "When Love Grows Cold" Being Edited

NINE of the twelve Gold Bond productions on the F. B. O. 1925-26 program have already been completed.

Shooting on "When Love Grows Cold," the well known Laura Jean Libbey romance in which Natacha Rambova (Mrs. Rudolph Valentino) is starred, has been concluded and the film is now in the cutting room in the final stages of cutting and editing. Daniel Carson Goodman, who personally supervised the production, and Harry O. Hoyt, director of the film, expect the production to be ready for a preview showing in a few days. The production is a gripping drama of modern life. Although the action of the story adheres closely to the Libbey plot, the costumes and mountings have been modernized. Miss Rambova provided herself with a very gorgeous wardrobe during her sojourn abroad, and gowns, hats and shoes from the smartest coutourieres in Paris will be seen in profusion in the film. Clive Brook played opposite Miss Rambova, while Sam Hardy, Kathlene Martin, Kathryn Hill, Johnnie Gough and little Russell Griffin supported the star. The story was adapted by John C. Brownell, home office scenario chief, with continuity by Harry O. Hoyt. "When Love Grows Cold" is the one picture on the 1925-26 program which was produced in the east.

"Flaming Water," a melodrama of the oil fields, produced for F. B. O. by Associated Arts Corporation, is another of the nine Gold Bonds already completed. Harmon Weight, who recently won laurels by directing "Drusilla With a Million" for Associated Arts again served as director.

"Flaming Waters" is based on an original story by L. Lloyd Sheldon. The continuity comes from the pen of Fred Kennedy Myton, of the F. B. O. editorial staff. Prominent in the cast are Mary Carr, Pauline Garon and Malcolm McGregor. A flood of flaming water and oil provides the thrill scene of the production.

Final scenes on "The King of the Turf," a melodrama of the racing world, were shot at the F. B. O. studios. Kenneth Harlan and Patsy Ruth Miller shared the burden of romance, while James Hogan directed. The story is by Joseph Louis Vance and John C. Brownell, and supporting Miss Miller and Mr. Harlan are Mary Carr, Eddie Phillips, David Kirby and George Irving.

"The Midnight Flyer," a railroad melodrama, based on stories by Arthur Guy Empey, and directed by Tom Forman, has already been previewed by the F. B. O. executives in New York, and is ready for distribution. Dorothy Devore and Cullen Landis are co-starred. The story was adapted by J. Grubb Alexander.

"The Last Edition," a tribute to the profession of journalism, is one of Emory Johnson's contributions to the 1925-26 program. "The Last Edition" comes from the pen of Emilie Johnson, the young director-producer's mother, who is responsible for all of her son's picture successes. In the cast are Ralph Lewis, Lila Leslie, Ray Hallor, Rex Lease, Frances Teague and Adamae Vaughn, sister of Alberta.

"The Last Edition" has already played hundreds of first run houses.

"The Keeper of the Bees," the F. B. O. picturization of Gene Stratton-Porter's famous novel, is creating an enviable record for first run bookings in practically every first run house in the country. The story ran as a serial in McCall's Magazine prior to its book publication, and the picture was widely advertised in leading magazines and newspapers. J. Leo Meehan, Mrs. Porter's son-in-law, directed the film from his own continuity. Prominent in the cast are Robert Frazer, Alyce Mills, Clara Bow, Joseph Swickard and little Gene Stratton, the grand-daughter of the famous novelist.

"Parisian Nights," a Gothic production in which Elaine Hammerstin and Lou Tellegen were co-starred, is one of the earlier of the current year's Gold Bonds. The story deals with the romance of an American sculptress in Paris, with the climax occurring in a battle between rival Apache factions. The film is an original by Emil Forst, with adaptation by Doty Hobart. Alfred Santell directed.

"If Marriage Fails —?," another of the earlier Gold Bonds, is based on an original story by C. Gardner Sullivan, well known author, scenarist and producer, and concerns the love life of a beautiful girl fortune teller. The cast is headed by Jacqueline Logan and includes Clive Brook, Belle Bennett, Donald MacDonald, Cissy Fitzgerald, Jean Hersholt and Mathilde Comont. John Ince directed.

"Drusilla With a Million," a picture in a million, is the first Gold Bond on the current season's program. "Drusilla" has already made screen history in its record of first run bookings. Based on a novel by Elizabeth Cooper and adapted by John C. Brownell, home office scenario chief, it has been acclaimed one of the twelve best pictures of the year by press and exhibitors. Prominent in the cast are Priscilla Bonner, Kenneth Harlan and Mary Carr. F. Harmon Weight directed.

The three remaining Gold Bond productions still to be filmed are Laura Jean Libbey's "A Poor Girl's Romance," Edeson Marshall's "The Isle of Retribution" and Emory Johnson's second production on the 1925-26 program tentatively titled "Happiness."

"The Isle of Retribution," a novel by Edeson Marshall, will also be started shortly after the first of the year. The book has already run into many editions. It is an outdoor story with a strong melodramatic flavor.

M-G-M Make Tentative Plans for Production of Over 40 Pictures

FOLLOWING conferences between Marcus Loew, Nicholas M. Schenck and Louis B. Mayer, Metro-Golwyn-Mayer production plans for 1296 have been tentatively laid out and a schedule of over forty pictures made up for the first several months of 1926.

Among the New Year releases will be the Lillian Gish production production of "La Boneme" which is now nearing completion under the direction of King Vidor, whose "The Big Parade" has placed him on the topmost ladder of fame. John Gilbert plays the leading male role opposite Miss Gish in the screen version of the famous opera which was adapted to the screen by Harry Behn. Renee Adoree will be seen in one of the prominent roles.

Marion Davies, in Cosmopolitan's "Beverly of Graustark" will be on the M-G-M 1926 schedule together with "Ibanex Torrent", another Cosmopolitan production with Ricardo Cortez, Greta Garbo and Gertrude Olmsted.

"Bardleys the Magnificent", starring John Gilbert, is another picture to go into early production. This screen version of Rafael Sabatini's famous story will be done entirely in Technicolor. Claire Windsor will lend her beauty and talent to the leading feminine role.

"The Barrier", the famous Rex Beach story, will be another 1926 release. In it Norman Kerry, Henry B. Walthall and Lionel Barrymore will play the principal roles. It is to be directed by George Hill from a scenario by Harvey Gates. Marceline Day, chosen one of the Baby Stars of 1926, has been cast for the feminine lead.

Hobart Henley will direct and offer "The Auction Block", another Rex Beach favorite, as one of his first contributions to the M-G-M 1926 schedule. Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman head the cast and other important roles will be played by Sally O'Neil, another Baby Star of 1926, Ernest Gillen and David Torrence. Frederick and Fanny Hatton adapted the story.

Lon Chaney in Tod Browning's "The Mocking Bird" will be one of the very first 1926 M-G-M releases. It is an original story by Browning with continuity by Waldemar Young. Others in the cast include Renee Adoree, Owen Moore and Polly Moran. The locale is the famous Limehouse district of London.

"The Exquisite Sinner," based on "Escape" by Alden Brooks, is set for January release by M-G-M. Conrad Nagel, Renee Adoree, Mathew Betz, George K. Arthur, Frank Currier and Ford Sterling are the principal players.

Benjamin Christianson's initial production for M-G-M, "The Light Eternal," is also set for January 1926 release. It stars Norma Shearer with a supporting cast that includes Carmel Myers, Claire McDowell, Charles Emmett Mack and John Miljan.

"Money Talks," a Rupert Hughes story, will be directed by Archie Mayo with Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor in the leading roles and is also set for January release. Frederic and Fanny Hatton are responsible for the scenario.

Included in the exceedingly valuable screen material owned by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and which plans are being made to produce at the Culver City studios during 1925 are:

"Altars of Desire", by Maria Thompson Davies; "The Back Slapper", by Paul Dickey and Mann Page; "Bellamy the Magnificent", by Roy Horniman; "Brown of Harvard," the famous stage play by Rida Johnson Young; "The Charity Ball", based on the David Belasco success; "The Cigarette Maker's Romance", by F. Marion Crawford; "The College Widow", by George Ade; "Coney Island", by Austin Parker; "The Dead Command", by Vicente Blasco Ibanez; "The Four Stragglers," by Frank L. Packard, author of "The Miracle Man"; "Frisco Sal", by Arthur Alfred Cohn; "The Gambling Chaplain", by Gerald Beaumont; "The Garden of Eden", by Max Brand; "The Hairpin Duchess", by Alice Woods; "The Haven", by Dale Collins; "I Can D. It", by Max Marein; "In His Arms", by Lynn Starling; "In Praise of James Carabine", by Donn Byrne; "Jason", by Justice Myles Forman; "Lovey Mary", by Alice Hegan Rice; "A Message to Garcia", based on Elbert Hubbard's story; "Monte Carlo", an original story by Carey Wilson; "The Mysterious Island", by Jules Verne; "The Mystery Lad ', by Robert W. Chambers; "Nocturn" by Frank Swinnerton; "The Ordeal", by Dale Collins; "Paris", by Carey Wilson; Lillian Gish in "The Scarlet Letter", by Nathaniel Hawthorne; "The Span of Life", by Sutton Vane; "Strange Bedfellows", by Barry Connors; "The Temptress", by Ibanez; "Tongo", by John Balderston; "The Virgin Flame", by Ernest Pascal; "Women and Wives", by Harvey Ferguson; and "You Too", by Roger Burlingame.

During 1926 Metro-Goldwyn will release what promises to be the finest production Rex Ingram has ever made, "Mare Nostrum" (Our Sea), by Vincente Blasco Ibanez.

Complete Cast For Menjou's "I'll See You Tonight"

The cast for "I'll See You Tonight," Adolphe Menjou's next picture for Paramount, which Malcolm St. Clair will direct, has been completed with the addition of Josephine Drake and Ida Waterman.

The featured players in support of the star are Greta Nissen and Louise Brooks. Others in the cast are Chester Conklin, Freeman Wood, Roger Davis and Hugh Huntley.

"I'll See You Tonight" was written expressly for Menjou by Monte M. Katterjohn. Pierre Collings prepared the continuity.

Lee Garmes will be chief cameraman. Production will start at the Paramount Long Island studio on December 21.

SHE DON'T LOOK SCARED even though it's Jack Hoxie looking down—and it's "The Demon" he's called in Universal's western of that title.

H. H. Van Loan, Screen Writer, Signs Contract with Universal

A CONTRACT has just been signed by H. H. Van Loan, the noted screen author, and the Universal Pictures Corporation, under which Van Loan is to write original stories for seven big Universal pictures. Two of these will be for Reginald Denny, Universal's meteoric comedy-drama star, and one each for Laura LaPlante, Mary Philbin, Norman Kerry, Hoot Gibson and Jean Herscholt.

The contract, according to information made public at the Universal Home Office, is the most extensive ever made by that company with an author. Under the agreement, Van Loan is to start to work right away on a big Denny special, to be called "So's Your Old Man."

Van Loan is a veteran of the Universal organization, having worked in the publicity department of that organization under Paul Gulick, director of publicity, more than ten years ago. Since he gave up publicity work to enter the original story field, he has written more than fifty successful photoplays.

Van Loan's first contract with the film industry was through a small news and publicity syndicate which he operated prior to 1915. Associated with him were Miss Agnes Kessler, as woman's feature writer, and Arthur Jacobson as office boy. When Van Loan gave up his syndicate in the spring of 1915, Miss Kessler accepted a position in the Universal publicity department. A few weeks later Arthur Jacobson joined Gulick's department, too, as office boy. Van Loan visited Gulick later and was surprised to see his former employes.

"You have all my office force, why not take me, too?" he asked the Universal publicity head. He was engaged on the spot.

Van Loan wrote his first film story several months later. It was "Vive La France," produced by Thomas H. Ince. His next was a five-reel comedy, one of the first of that length. It was produced by Universal as "Where Do You Get That Stuff?" After he had left the Universal organization and had devoted his entire time to film story writing, he sold Universal another story, "The Virgin of Stamboul," one of Priscilla Dean's most successful Universal-Jewels.

"Blue Streak McCoy," a Harry Carey Universal western, and "The Clean-up," a Herbert Rawlinson Universal picture, also were from Van Loan's pen.

Among the other outstanding pictures he has written are "The Great Redeemer," "Fighting Mad," "Nellie the Beautiful Cloak Model," and "The Siren of Sevill."

It is likely that Van Loan will do his Universal writing in the East, although it is possible he will make frequent trips to Universal City to confer with the Universal studio executives.

"So's Your Old Man," the first Reginald Denny picture, will be a farce comedy built around the adventures of a young scion of wealth who is forced to start at the bottom in his father's department store—literally in the oy deparment in the basement. How he wins success, and a wife, and at the same time shows the old man a few tricks, makes a fast-action comedy and an ideal Denny vehicle.

New First National Pictures

Two new pictures have entered production on First National's West Coast studio lot. Edwin Carewe began filming "Twentieth Century, Unlimited," using the famous Busch gardens in Pasadena as his opening "shot." Carew's cast is a splendid one, headed by Mary Astor and Lloyd Hughes, with Dolores del Rio, Rita Carewe, John T. Murray, Alec Francis, Edwards Davis, Clarissa Selwyn, Charles Sellon and others. Lambert Hillyer started work on "The Second Chance" with Anna Q. Nilsson in the leading feminine role and Huntley Gordon and Charles Murray with featured male parts.

80-Page Press Book on "The Skyrocket"

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., have issued an elaborate press book on their Peggy Hopkins Joyce special, "The Skyrocket," which will shortly be released as a super-attraction.

"It's big" has been the slogan which has characterized the production of the initial Peggy Hopkins Joyce picture and this aptphrase is equally applicable to the exhibitors' aid prepared to assist them in the staging of a proper campaign on the eagerly awaited attraction. Eighty pages of real exploitation and publicity matter have been placed in a beautiful Tiffany cover printed in gold and the contents bound together with gold cord. A novel segregation of the contents has been employed, which makes simple the task of locating instantly the particular information desired by the exhibitor. It is really ten ordinary press books in one and the unique manner in which it is printed makes its contents much more available than is customary in press books that possess only a portion of the material contained therein.

The campaign book is printed in five "skyrocketty" colors and is a thing of genuine beauty in addition to the extreme utility that is its chief characteristic. After the introduction, synopsis, cast and an outline of its extraordinary box office angles, there is a page of beauty articles in which Peggy Hopkins Joyce reveals the secrets of her loveliness. These are arranged in series so that they may follow each other on subsequent days and will provide newspapers with a personal and exclusive news feature for which they would gladly pay a syndicate. There follows a page of fashion articles by the ultra-stylish Peggy Hopkins Joyce. These will prove of paramount interest to every woman and are illustrated with photographs of Miss Joyce wearing the beautiful gowns that enhance her incomparable figure in "The Skyrocket." These special pages are followed with a dozen pages of the usual publicity material, such as current and advance stories on the production, reviews, shorts, catchlines, etc.

Unusual care has been lavished on "The Skyrocket" advertising material. There are five pages of display ad copy in all sizes from a one column cut to a half-page layout and all have been designed and arranged so that they are interchangeable. This innovation will prove of great assistance to exhibitors having to meet local conditions as to suitability of material and permits them every leeway in the amount of space they desire to use. The campaign book closes with eight pages of the pictorial accessories reproduced in their original colors. There are two 24 sheets, two 3 sheets, two 1 sheets and a 6 sheet, in addition to two styles of heralds and several groups of lobby cards, window cards, etc.

Malcolm MacGregor in Serial

Malcolm MacGregor, Hollywood's busiest "free lance," who made a decided hit with Pauline Frederick in "Smouldering Fires," last season, has signed to appear in his first serial. It is "The Sky Skidder," produced by Nat Levine. It is in ten episodes written around the loves and hates of a police dog. In support of Mr. MacGregor will be Louise Lorraine and Thur Fairfax. William J. Craft is directing.

"The Sky Skidder"

George Morgan, author of many Universal serials, is the author of "The Sky Skidder," a ten-episode serial starring Klondike (temporary name), the prize German police dog. "The Sky Skidder" is now being produced by Nat Levine and Sam Bischoff at the California Studios. The supporting cast includes Malcolm MacGregor, Louise Lorraine and Thur Fairfax, while William J. Craft is the director.

"Dangers of a Great City"

Pauline Starke has been given the featured role in "Dangers of a Great City," in production on the Fox lot in Hollywood under the direction of Chester Bennett. Rockliffe Fellowes, the villain with May McAvoy in "The Road to Glory," will play the leading male role opposite her. Johnnie Walker, Grace Darmond and Mickey Bennett play the important supporting parts. The picture is based on an original story by Howard Hawks. L. G. Rigby wrote the scenario.

First National Month

Branch Managers Breaking Records In First National Month Bookings

WITH reports coming in daily of new bookings in all sections of the country, the Distribution Department of First National Pictures announces that at the present time it is far ahead of estimated returns on First National Month. Up to the first day of January, it is reported that one hundred and thirty-five theatres had booked First National pictures solid for the weeks covered by the campaign.

The results, up to date, are particularly gratifying to the new Sales Cabinet headed by Samuel Spring as chairman, A. W. Smith, Jr., Eastern Sales Manager, Ned Marin, Western Sales Manager and Ned Depinet, Southern Sales Manager. Recently these executives made a tour of their respective territories giving branch manager, salesmen and exhibitors a detailed summary of the product First National is offering for the new season. The Sales Cabinet was assured of the fullest co-operation of the selling force and the ready response of exhibitors as shown in bookings provides complete evidence of the sincere spirit behind their co-operation.

More than $8,000 in prizes will be awarded branch managers and their employees. After all the returns are in through January 30th, the first, second and third branches will share in the distribution of prize money. The manager, assistant manager, salesmen, head booker and head cashier or bookkeeper all will receive substantial remuneration. And going down the line each employee in the first branch will receive a sum equal to three weeks' salary, in the second branch, two weeks' salary and the third branch one week's salary. In view of this liberal impetus to increase effort, the Sales Cabinet has enlisted the heartiest support of every individual connected with the First National organization.

From the exhibitors' standpoint, one of the most interesting features of First National Month is the Exploitation Contest in which First National is offering prizes totaling $2,000 for the best exploitation, advertising and publicity in connection with the Month.

In order to give every exhibitor a chance in his own class, theatres have been placed in three classifications:

1. Theatres of over 1,500 seating capacity.
2. Theatres of from 1,000 to 1,499 seating capacity.
3. Theatres of less than 1,000 seating capacity.

The prizes offered by First National are:

For the best complete campaign in each classification	$250
For the second best campaign in each classification	150
For the third best campaign in each classification	100
For the best newspaper advertisement	50
For the best lobby display	50
For the most original stunt	50
In addition, one prize of $50 will be awarded for the most effective newspaper stunt used by any theatre in any classification	50
Total of prizes	$2,000

All returns must be received by the Contest Editor, First National Pictures, Inc., 383 Madison Avenue, New York City, not later than midnight, February 21st, 1926.

In submitting their exhibits, it is important that exhibitors make them as complete as possible, givng a full description of the campaign conducted and supplying photographic illustration whenever feasible. In the event of two or more contributions being deemed of equal merit, the prize tied for will be awarded to each entrant.

First National is fortunate in securing the editors of trade papers to act as judges in the contest. They are: William A. Johnston, Editor, Motion Picture News; Joseph Dannenberg, Editor, Film Daily; Martin J. Quigley, Editor, Exhibitors Herald; Willard C. Howe, Editor, Exhibitors Trade Review; Norbert E. Lusk of the Morning Telegraph, and William J. Reilly, Editor, Moving Picture World.

"Molasses"

M. C. Levee is preparing to start production on "Molasses" for First National release. According to present plans, shooting on the picture will begin about the middle of February under the direction of Alfred A. Santell. William H. Clifford has written the continuity on "Molasses," which is now in the hands of Mr. Levee and Mr. Santell who are planning the details for an elaborate production. Important roles are Charles Murray, George Sidney and Vera Gordon;

Columbia to Make Several Productions In England; Unit To Do Own Financing

WHEN the proposed English film contingent loomed as a reality and the certainty of its effect on American-made pictures was evident, Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, took the first available boat for England to size up the situation and make the necessary arrangements for the continued distribution of Columbia Pictures abroad.

Mr. Brandt has just returned from Europe and the impressions he gained while abroad, and the production arrangements Columbia Pictures have made abroad, are interesting.

"There is no real animosity toward American-made films as far as the trade and the major part of the general public are concerned," said Mr. Brandt. "But there is enough of the British population whose attitude is reflected in some of the London daily papers who resent, what they term, the Americanization of the British screen.

"The attitude of that wing of the British government which is fostering the idea of 'fathering' the British film industry is that the British screen at least should present a percentage of British-made films, utilizing British capital and British employees.

"An interesting side light of this situation is the oft repeated comment that the more or less exclusive showing of American-made films is having an effect on the social and domestic life of British inhabitants, and because of this a safe percentage of British productions must be presented to offset it and retain British individuality. The real basic idea behind all the agitation is that the motion picture industry is a splendid commercial asset, as well as a most important social factor, and as such Great Britain is entitled to a fair share of the motion picture production and representation on the screens of the world of its scenic splendors, its customs, and its people.

"Although the British government has not as yet placed a statutory regulation on its books to provide for a fair proportion of British-made films for exhibition on the domestic screen there is enough influence behind the legislators who are fostering the movement to make such a regulation an almost certainty, and in my opinion, some law will be passed to satisfy the demand for such a statute.

"In making plans for the production of Columbia Pictures for the season of 1926-1927, and upon the arrival in London of Vice-President Harry Cohn, we entered into an arrangement whereby a separate producing unit would make several Columbia pictures in England using British actors, actresses, technical help, with possibly one or two American stars in the cast to give these productions the necessary international aspect which will make them acceptable throughout the world.

"The British Columbia Picture unit will have its own financing organization, and the profits of these productions will accrue to the benefit of those British capitalists who are fathering this venture.

"Within a very short time the entire personnel of the English-Columbia financing pictures unit will be announced, and when announced its sincerity of purpose will be evidenced by the stability of the people who are responsible for this project.

"At the present France is so keenly occupied with the stabilization of its finances that the film contingent idea is forced into the background, but one newspaper, Le Matin, is acting as spur to a few selected French lawmakers who have a fixed idea that France too must protest against the monopolization of its screens by American pictures. Anticipating the ultimate adoption of such a policy, Columbia Pictures have entered into a tentative arrangement whereby should French legislators eventually adopt this idea a Columbia producing unit will also operate in Paris. I am not at liberty at this time to divulge the names of those who are ready to financially support the French Columbia producing company, but their responsibility is beyond question and they are at present definitely identified with the motion picture industry.

"It was with a great sense of gratification," continued Mr. Brandt, "that I found Columbia pictures being exhibited in about every large city throughout Europe. When I visited Amsterdam I saw several Columbia pictures presented. Also in Berlin, Paris, Milan, Prague, Nice and other cities. Mr. Harry Cohn and myself had the pleasure of seeing our product well received.

"When I canvassed these territories and the various offices handling our product I was elated to find that Columbia pictures so generally distributed were giving such genuine satisfaction to our foreign distributors. In Great Britain particularly Columbia pictures have 'caught on' and have received wholehearted praise wherever shown; in London, Glasgow, Leeds, Sheffield, Liverpool, Blackpool, Stratford, Brighton, Dublin, Newport, Sutton, Oldham, Middlesborough, Aberdeen, Bristol, Plymouth, Queenstown, Birmingham, Sunderland, Newcastle, Worcester, Nottingham, Barnsley and Hull.

"Our plans for 1926-1927 production are well under way and upon the return in January of Mr. Harry Cohn, who is still in Europe, Columbia Pictures will announce the splendid books, plays and stories, by many prominent authors as well as many of the stars selected for next season's output."

"LET 'EM COME, BOYS! LET 'EM COME! We can handle 'em," says Hoot Gibson in the big Universal production, "Arizona Sweepstakes."

I'll Say It's Tough!

Dorothy Cumming, who has been trying to take a vacation for several months, has been thwarted again. Every time she plans to get away for a few weeks' rest, some director calls her for a part. Word comes from the coast that she has just been signed for Corinne Griffith's picture, "Mlle. Modiste," which has been started under the direction of Robert Z. Leonard. Specializing in society roles, this part will give Miss Cumming a splendid opportunity of showing some very exclusive things in gowns.

Rolland Flander Signed

Rolland Flander, who has completed one of the juvenile leads in the Universal Production, "Peg O' New York," under the direction of George Cochrane, has been engaged for the Macfadden picture, "Hearts," which Hugh Dierker put into production last week.

Fox Corporation Ready to Begin on Big Production Program for Next Season

WITH the end of this season's production schedule in sight as the result of the finishing of three more supreme attractions at the West Coast Studios of Fox Films, everything is now in readiness to start actual filming on some of the most important of next seasons' releases before the end of January, Winfield R. Sheehan, the Fox general manager, wires from Hollywood.

Mr. Sheehan has been at the West Coast Studios for the past four months preparing for this momentous occasion. The status of the present season's schedule is due to his work in augmenting every unit of the production staff. Since his arrival in Hollywood the Fox executive has supplemented the Fox stock company of players with the best talent available in the West Coast film colony and he has strengthened the Fox directorial staff immeasurably by the addition of such success makers as Raoul Walsh, Irving Cummings, Howard Hawks and Harry Beaumont.

Hawks and Cummings were put right to work ere the ink on their contracts was dry, and two of the supreme attractions just finished are their "aces" for the Fox organization. Cummings has just finished "The Johnstown Flood," a thrilling epic based on that greatest of American catastrophes which from the "rushes," has caused the Fox West Coast officials to enthuse in an unprecedented manner. Some of the officials go as far as to say that it equals "The Iron Horse," in its sweeping proportions. George O'Brien, Florence Gilbert and Janet Gaynor, new Fox discovery, have the leading roles in the film.

Hawks' first contribution to the Fox release schedule, "The Road of Glory," is based on an original scenario written by himself. Mr. Hawks attempts in this production to show that "the road to glory" in addition to leading to the grave, is the devil's own highway when traversed by the unwitting and gullible. A splendid cast, headed by May McAvoy, was selected for the leading roles in this production. The others are Leslie Fenton, who plays opposite the accomplished Miss McAvoy, Ford Sterling, Rockliffe Fellowes, Mills Davenport, John MacSweeney, and Hank, the dog.

The other production announced as finished in Mr. Sheehan's telegram is "A Trip to Chinatown," the first of the celebrated old Charles Hoyt comedies to be made by the Fox company. This picture is expected to rival "The First Year," another picture only recently completed, which Fox officials predict will be the laugh sensation of the year.

Margaret Livingston and Earle Foxe have the leading roles in "A Trip to Chinatown" with a supporting cast which includes such mirth provokers as J. Farrell MacDonald, Anna May Wong, Gladys McConnell, Harry Woods, Marie Astaire, Charles Farrell, Wilson Benge, George Kawa and Hazel Howell in the other humorous roles. Robert P. Kerr wielded the megaphone over the filming of this feature comedy under the personal supervision of George B. Marshall, the Fox comedy king.

In spite of the fact that these productions are now in the cutting room, there is not an idle stage in the gigantic Fox studios. Mr. Marshall has comedy units scattered all over the place making Imperial, Helen and Warren, O. Henry and Van Bibber two reelers. The Van Bibbers were renewed in production with the finish of "A Trip to Chinatown" and the release of the star, Earle Foxe, from the Supreme Attractions. "The Reporter" is the title of the latest of the comedy sensations.

Production does not stop at comedies, however. On the big stages there are six Supreme Attractions in work and four more about ready to be started.

Of surpassing importance among the pictures now in production is "Siberia," an adaptation of Bartley Campbell's melodramatic stage success of the same name. Victor Schertzinger is directing this production with a cast that includes Alma Rubens, Edmund Lowe, Lou Tellegen, Vadin Uraneff, Paul Banner, Tom Santschi, James Marcus, Daniel Makarenko, Monty Collins, Samuel Blum, Helena D'Algy and Lilyan Tashman. The pretentiousness of this cast should be convincing evidence that the Fox company intends to make this production the outstanding melodramatic triumph of the season. Eve Unsell, who wrote the scenario for this production, is said to have exceeded herself, with the result that throughout it is full of strong dramatic situations which will keep one engrossingly interested from start to finish.

Tom Mix and Buck Jones are both working on new Westerns. Tom's latest is "Tony Runs Wild," which, as the title indicates, is a vehicle in which the great western star can give his intelligent wonder play, Tony, a wide range in which to do his stuff. In this production, Tony is called upon to play the part of a wild horse.

The human support in this picture is of high calibre and includes the beautiful Jacqueline Logan in the leading role opposite Mr. Mix, Lawford Davidson, Duke Lee, Vivian Oakland, Edward Martindale, Marion Harlan, Raymond Wells, Jack Padjan, Richard Carter and Arthur Morrison. Tom Buckingham is directing this production.

Buck Jones' new vehicle, which, incidentally, is his last for the current season, has the admirably fitting title, "The Fighting Buckaroo." N. William Beill is continued as the Western Ace's director with the following support: Sally Long, recently named Wampau star, Lloyd Whitlock, Frank Butler, E. J. Radcliffe, Ben Hendricks, Ray Thompson and Frank Rice.

"The Dixie Merchant," "Hell's Four Hundred" and "Dangers of a Great City" are the remaining Supreme Attractions in work. Frank Borzage is directing "The Dixie Merchant," which is adapted from Barry Banefield's novel, "The Chicken Wagon Family," with Madge Bellamy and Leslie Fenton in the leading juvenile roles and J. Farrell MacDonald in the title role. Margaret Livingston achieves stardom in "Hell's Four Hundred," an adaptation of Vaughan Lester's popular and controversial novel, "The Just and the Unjust," which will be directed by John Griffith Wray. Pauline Starke, Johnny Walker, and Rockliffe Fellows have the leading roles in "Dangers of a Great City," which is expected to be a melodrama of parts.

The productions about to go in work are:

"Sandy," from the popular newspaper serial story by Elenore Meherin which is now running in one hundred of the leading dailies of the country.

"Yellow Fingers," from the best seller by Gene Wright.

"Rustling for Cupid," from a story by Peter B. Kyne, and "Corncob Kelly's Benefit," (temporary title) also from a Kyne story.

"ME FOR SIMPLICITY," says Pauline Starke, as a chorus girl leaning toward rural life. "Can I build on that?" asks Charles Ray, the architecturally ambitious farmhand, in "Bright Lights," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Color Personality" Sought in Fairbanks' "The Black Pirate"

COLOR photography has eveloped something new in the way of psychology for the screen, according to Albert Parker who is directing Douglas Fairbanks in "The Black Pirate," Doug's next United Artists production.

"We have made the discovery," said Parker "that a new type of personality, or at least a new angle of personality, is required for color photography. Players who register well in black and white do not always show up to advantage in color. In fact, in some cases it is not possible to use them at all despite the fact that they are unusually talented—even players with big screen followings.

"Douglas Fairbanks, fortunately, has color personality as well as black-and-white personality. This is not strange, however, when you consider his versatility. But all actors are not so bountifully blest."

One of the greatest problems experienced in casting "The Black Pirate," Parker stated, was the matter of finding film artists with color personalities. This was especially the case in the quest for a leading lady. Out of three hundred young women, including novices as well as experienced screen actresses, only twelve were found who show color personalities, and the degree in which they possessed this quality varied greatly. The one who showed it most was Billie Dove, who was finally chosen. Not only did she possess a color personality but she also had to her credit the experience of previous color work. She had appeared before the camera and had also worked with the cutting and editing of the film, absorbing much that was vital to her acting from this experience.

"As yet," said Parker, "it is impossible to define a color personality. We know only that it is an inherent attribute—a quality of the soul, if you like. A black-and-white personality is more material. By that I mean it is based largely upon the principle of mathematics, depending upon the contour and angles of the face. A person with a good camera face is sure to have a black-and-white personality. Not so with color, however. Lines, angles and contours seem to have nothing whatever to do with it. And at present we do not know what the ingredients are that make a color personality. We are all baffled, yet we know it is there and no doubt in time we will be able to define and catalogue it."

Because of this new problem of personality, camera tests were made of every individual who appears in "The Black Pirate," from the most humble extra to the star.

Director for Douglas Fairbanks' "The Black Pirate."

A First National Hit

"Clothes Make the Pirate" Scores in First Run Theatres in Key Cities

Backed by strong exploitation campaigns, Sam Rork's hilarious comedy, "Clothes Make the Pirate," presenting Leon Erroll, is scoring phenomenal records in first run houses in key cities and some of the smaller points. No picture of recent months has received a more emphatic endorsement from leading showmen in all parts of the country.

While the success of "Clothes Make the Pirate" is primarily owing to the superior quality of the picture, due credit must be given the strong exploitation campaign with which it is being supported. These campaigns are prepared well in advance by Allan S. Glenn, supervisor of exploitation for First National and his assistants who were assigned to various cities for the first run engagements. Reports from the cities in which the picture has been shown testify to large audiences on the opening day and a steady increase of patronage during the engagement of the attraction.

Among the cities in which "Clothes Make the Pirate" has been received as one of the biggest comedies of recent months are New York, Boston, Cleveland, San Francisco, Kansas City, Troy, Toledo, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Des Moines, Brooklyn, Lawrence and Brockton, Mass., and East Liberty, Pa. Elaborate preparations are being made for the opening at the Eastmas Theatre, Rochester, January 10th.

George Sidney Signed for Lead in "Prince of Pilsen" for P. D. C.

GEORGE SIDNEY, veteran actor of the stage, and lately a remarkable success in the Potash and Perlmutter pictures, "Partners Again" and "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood," has been signed by A. H. Sebastian for a leading role in "The Prince of Pilsen."

Sidney spent thirty years as a stage comedian, appearing at one time as the stage partner of Harry Von Tilzer; later joining Ward and Vokes, then the leading comedy entertainers of the day; and creating the part of Busy Izzy, which he played in various productions for fourteen years. His first "legitimate" engagement was with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Show Shop."

The romantic lead in "The Prince of Pilsen," the part of The Prince, will be played by Alan Forrest, whose work in the principal male role of the latest Sebastian production. "Fifth Avenue," established him as a leading man of exceptional qualifications. Forrest appeared in the male lead in "Dorothy Vernon of Haddon Hall," opposite Mary Pickford, and has had featured roles in many recent productions of similar importance.

Kane Signs Cain

Robert Kane, producer, has added Robert Cain, actor, to the cast of "The Dancer of Paris" which he is producing at the Cosmopolitan studio in New York for First National release. What complications this will lead to, particularly in regard to telephone calls, are now being estimated by a corps of experts. It is reported that the Cosmopolitan studio will install an additional telephone operator whose sole duty it will be to receive incoming calls for Robert Kane and Robert Cain, assort them properly and deliver each one to its proper receiver. Robert Cain, the actor, is cast in the role in "The Dancer of Paris" which was first awarded to Lowell Sherman. Mr. Sherman has withdrawn from the cast. Dorothy Mackaill will have the title role.

Robert Edeson Cast In "Whispering Smith"

Robert Edeson, well known Cecil De Mille player, has moved his make-up case to the Metropolitan Studios where he is portraying the role of President Bucks in "Whispering Smith," a picturization of the novel of the same name by Frank H. Spearman.

Jane Jennings Signed

Jane Jennings, Cameo Mother of the Screen, has been engaged for one of the roles in "New Klondike," the Thomas Meighan production now being filmed at the Famous Player-Lasky Studios in the East, under the derection of Lewis Milestone.

"Puppets" Selected

Milton Sills Cast for First National Picture, with A. L. Rockett Supervising

A. L. Rockett, recently elevated to the rank of a production manager by First National, has selected "Puppets," a stage play by Frances Lightner, as his first picture to be made under the First National banner.

Milton Sills will be cast in the starring role and production will not be started until the completion of "Men of Steel," a First National "special" in which Sills is being starred. George Archainbaud will direct and John Fish Goodrich is writing the continuity. No other members of the cast have been chosen as yet. "Puppets" was produced last year at the Selwyn Theatre in New York as a stage play.

When "Puppets" is placed in production it will mark the start of a new policy at First National's New York studios inaugurated by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of First National Pictures, whereby Earl Hudson will supervise one unit making four pictures a year and A. L. Rockett will supervise a like unit making the same number of pictures.

Sidney to Retire After "Million Dollar Handicap"

Scott Sidney, director of "Charley's Aunt," "Madam Behave," "Hold Your Breath" and "Seven Days," plans to retire upon the completion of "The Million Dollar Handicap." Previous to the filming of this Metropolitan Picture, Sidney was with the Christie Studio for eight years. His original intention when he left Thomas H. Ince to join Christie was to learn to put comedy into dramatic pictures. After the eight year "lesson" he applied the knowledge he gained to "The Million Dollar Handicap."

"The Amateur Gentlemen"

"The Amateur Gentleman," a popular novel by Jeffrey Marnol, has been purchased by Inspiration Pictures as a vehicle for Richard Barthelmess. It will be a First National release. Mr. Barthelmess has just returned from a vacation in Florida and is preparing to start production on "The Kid from Montana" in which he plays a Western cowboy who falls in love with an Eastern society girl. It will be directed by Sidney Olcott. "The Amateur Gentleman" will be placed in production in the early Spring, also under the direction of Mr. Olcott. The continuity is now being written.

Tremendous Exploitation for Fox's Production of "Sandy"

"SANDY," the new newspaper serial story from the pen of Elenore Meherin, author of "Chickie," has been purchased by Fox Films to supplement its already powerful group of Spring releases, according to an announcement by James R. Grainger, general sales manager of the Fox organization.

Because of the success of "Chickie," there was some very spirited bidding among the various producing organizations for the screen rights to Miss Meherin's latest effort. It is agreed by all who have read "Sandy" that it by far outstrips the popular writer's earlier work in motion picture possibilities.

Upward of one hundred newspapers in the United States are running "Sandy" serially and billing it as the greatest newspaper serial ever written. In addition to all its other attributes, therefore, "Sandy," when it is ready for release by Fox Films, will have an audience of millions waiting to see it. One of the important facts considered in purchasing this story for the screen was that ninety per cent of the people who read it in the newspapers are motion picture fans and will go to see it as a picture at the first opportunity that presents itself.

Not stopping here, however, Mr. Grainger announces that he intends to outdo the already great publicity and advertising campaigns behind the story and place the entire Fox advertising, publicity and exploitation staffs to work on one of the greatest campaigns ever put over in connection with a motion picture.

In an effort to make "Sandy" a sure fire artistic and financial triumph, Mr. Grainger also announces that every detail of its production will have a strong box office appeal. A cast of all star proportions will be chosen, and a director of proven merit will be selected to handle the megaphone over the filming. The scenario will be the work of one of the most capable adapters in the business.

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Films, who has been at the Fox West Coast Studios for the past four months, will personally supervise the production details. He is now considering three directors preparatory to making the final selection and has instituted a careful search for the best type of girl to bring to the screen the vivid personality of "Sandy" McNeil, the beautiful young girl of nineteen who is the heroine of the story.

The story of "Sandy," incidentally, is quite unlike anything ever before adapted to motion pictures. It is infinitely more vital and amazingly more daring. "Sandy" McNeil is the modern girl in revolt against conventions. She is a flapper of the present day, typifying youth aquiver with the love of life, flaunting itself with that abandon which has brought the modern girl more prominently into the public eye than ever before in the history of America's social activities. "Sandy" in serial form grips the reader page by page. In the motion picture version to be produced by Fox Films, advantage will be taken of every opportunity presented by the wide variety of thrilling episodes to bring to the screen the most colorful picture of the 1926 girl, her ideas of life and all the complexities of the modern social order.

Top this off with a plot which sees "Sandy" forced into marriage by her parents, who think that by so doing they will save her from the fate toward which they think she is hurrying, and one can immediately see what an engrossingly interesting picture can be made from Miss Meherin's story.

New De Mille "Discovery"

Julia Faye Steps Easily from Siren Roles to Splendid Comedy

Apparently Al Christie isn't the only movie magnate in Hollywood capable of discovering comediennes, for Cecil B. De Mille comes forward with the announcement that he has found a comedy genius among his players in the person of comely Julia Faye.

Miss Faye has made a specialty of silken siren roles in previous Cecil B. De Mille productions. But Julia, the alluring has been transformed into Julia, the laughable, in "The Volga Boatman." Her antics as a colorful, swaggering Russian peasant girl carry most of the comedy-relief in a picture dealing with the stark realism of the Russian Revolution.

Capitalizing on Julia's newly discovered flair for the funny, De Mille has twisted his story around considerably to give Julia plenty of opportunity to make the public laugh.

Ray Hallor Signed

Ray Hallor, who played opposite Constance Talmadge in "Learning to Love," is announced by Cecil B. De Mille as one of the cast of "Red Dice," Rod La Rocque's starring vehicle.

"Forbidden Waters" Selected For New Priscilla Dean Film

PRISCILLA DEAN was given but a few days' rest over the holidays before she was called back to the studio to begin work on "Forbidden Waters," her second production for Metropolitan Pictures.

Like "The Danger Girl," the initial Dean feature for Metropolitan, "Forbidden Waters" is a comedy melodrama, with the star appearing as a Reno divorcee who cannot keep out of the new love affairs of her ex-husband.

Walter McGrail has been signed for the role of the ex-hubby and Casson Ferguson, De Sacia Mooers and Dan Mason also have important roles.

Alan Hale, former screen villain, who has climbed steadily up the directorial ladder through his megaphone work on "The Wedding Song," and "Braveheart" for Cecil De Mille, has been borrowed from De Mille to direct the second Dean picture.

The story was written especially for the star by Percy Heath, and Charles A. Logue is credited with the screen play. Georges Benoit, who photographed "The Danger Girl," is again presiding at the cameras.

The Note Book

"EBEN HOLDEN" that beloved fictional character given us by Irving Bacheller, said in his homely philosophy that the progression of our lives might be compared to that of being fitted for a new suit of clothes. We go along wearing a suit until we outgrow it. The suit doesn't fit, becomes tight, we are cramped for room, and then, after we have discarded the old suit and have put on the new garb, we go on with a better feeling because we are properly clothed. The suit fits.

That is the feeling which we are experiencing this week. This department has a new suit. We are changing the style of things to more adequately meet the demands the producers have made upon us. We know that this department has filled a long felt need in the work-a-day scheme of things in the motion picture theatre. We have listened attentively to the suggestions of our many friends. We have carefully read the hundreds of letters we have received, advising us in matters of policy, and we believe that we have struck a balance and a standard form for this department which will prove a benefit to all. We are constantly striving towards a consistent program, concise subject matter, authoritative information, in fact we are determined to lead all others in the matters of rendering a genuine aid to our fellow producers and all those who are interested in the advancement of motion picture theatre programs, especially in the development of prologues and presentations and better music.

We intend to limit ourselves to this column in which to express the resume of the activities pertaining to us, reserving it as the section for personal opinion.

The News Galley

WITHIN this column we will print the interesting news items of persons, productions, and all matters pertaining to this particular department. It is our desire to publish items of genuine interest, and to secure these it will be necessary to have the cooperation of our readers throughout the world. We want to have as many first run news items as we can possibly obtain. We want you to look to this column for such interesting information as you will not find in other periodicals or trade papers.

When you have an item of extraordinary interest the editor of this department will appreciate it if you wire it to him in a day or night letter collect. We want to record new things and if it is concisely told in 25 or 50 words, it is far more interesting to a reader than reams of the commonplace which we can find printed in most any publication. We are particularly interested in what is happening in the other countries, Europe, Australia, China, South America, Canada. All are making tremendous strides in the development of their motion picture programs. They are not exactly copying American methods. One will find genuine showmanship manifested in the theatres of other countries, and a brief chronicle of their activities will prove desirable.

When anything is well done, when a new idea has been developed, a new policy inaugurated, new materials discovered, new products offered on the market, new stage and electrical devices invented, WE WANT TO KNOW IT FIRST, and we pledge our correspondents that we will cooperate with them in achieving such helpful publicity.

The Mail Bag

DURING the past year we have received many communications from producers and managers which have been in the nature of personal expressions on matters concerning presentations and music. We have published such letters whenever we found the opportunity, but owing to our lack of a definite space for such communications we overlooked one of the most impelling features of this department.

This department is not a one-man affair. To succeed it must be cooperative, and the only evidence that we have of cooperation is the constant interchange of thoughts and ideas between this department and its readers. Therefore we are going to devote this column to reprinting such helpful letters, ideas, criticisms and other memoranda which we feel should be passed on to the producing fraternity. This column will be "your editorial department."

We have no set program or style for such communications as we do not wish to restrict one's thoughts, to curb one's argument, to stifle one's expression. "What the other man thinks" is vital and important. We want to encourage such communications. We will do our best to start controversies to be conducted in a good spirit and on a friendly basis. But, when the producer or manager has a bit of constructive criticism or has developed in practice or conceived in theory a new idea, this column should be his mouthpiece. Again, may we add that this column will succeed insofar as our readers cooperate with their communications.

We want to particularly emphasize the fact that we can use only such communications as are exclusively intended for us.

A Prologue to "Flaming Waters"

F. B. O's Fiery Oil Drama

Specially Devised for F. B. O. by Colby Harriman

(A Prologue or Presentation for a Specific Picture to be Published Each Week)

THIS prologue suggestion is offered to exhibitors and managers of large and small theatres, with the conviction that it will prove a satisfactory stage creation, serving as a prelude to a picture filled with action. This prologue is atmospheric and also impressionistic. We have found that prologues to a picture have succeeded and "clicked" with audiences when they have suggested the theme of the picture rather than attempted to duplicate a scene.

The Setting

The accompanying sketch furnishes the general stage and scenic makeup. The various units comprising the set are so simple in their construction that they can be adapted to practically any stage. The entire set may consist of six units or two, this according to stage limitations. In this instance it would be quite unnecessary. The principal units are hanging pieces, and the accompanying sketch identifies the position of these. They may be itemized as follows:

A cut drop painted to represent the under structure of an oil well; an intermediate or silhouette drop hung upstage back of which oil-well cut-outs are silhouetted.

Detailed data follows:

1. Cut Drop

This drop should be painted to represent the girders of an oil well. It should be hung at the curtain line. The drop should be cut and the girders opaqued so that they will stand out in bold relief, contrasting with the highlighted background. If desired, a scrim or bobbinette may be used to fill the opening. The reason for this is that the bobbinette may be used as a screen upon which the first titles of the picture can be projected.

2. Intermediate Drop

This should be painted or dyed a light blue for an effective sky, not opaqued. It should be hung in about three so as to permit flood lights back of it. It should be high and wide enough to mask.

3. Set Pieces

The outline of a shack or house situated on an uneven ground line should be painted on profile or compo-board and cut out, and set in front of the intermediate drop. The house may be painted to lend a touch of realism to the scene, and the accompanying ground rows may be painted accordingly. Back of the intermediate drop some profile or compo-board cutout fashioned to represent oil wells should be placed in a manner permitting them to be silhouetted against the sky.

4. Construction Data

To the producer in the large theatre who has a scenic artist and construction crew available it will not be necessary to suggest the manner in which this prologue may be mounted, but to the producer in the small theatre who does not have the opportunity of professional assistance and must mount the set himself, the following suggestions may be helpful.

The cut drop at the curtain line may be made from any old drop or a frame construction of battens may be put together and either crepe paper or canvas strips used to form the outlines of the superstructure. The ground rows and shack may be cut out of wall board or card board and given a flat tone. Any water color such as alabastine may be used in the painting of this. Intermediate drop may be made up with thin blue cloth, such as cheese cloth or muslin dyed a blue. The set pieces, back of the drop, may also be made of cardboard. It is really an inexpensive set to put together but will prove highly effective.

5. Lighting Treatments

The cut drop at the curtain line should be highlighted a green-blue from the borders and foots. One floor olivette should be placed back of the intermediate drop, the lamp placed at center so as to silhouette the set pieces against the drop. An olivette should be placed right and left in front of the intermediate drop with the lamps turned downstage to highlight the performing area. Spots hung on a batten back of the cut drop may also be used to highlight this area. Blue green and orange amber should predominate. A flame effect should be set offstage and focused on the intermediate drop. This is brought up towards the finale of the act as the olivette back of the intermediate drop is dimmed down to about one-quarter, the lights in the foreground being changed to red. To secure this effect two olivettes with red mediums should be placed right and left in one.

The Routine

The action which may be used in this prologue should typify the "good time" evening of a group composed of people from all walks of life who have come to this new country in search of riches.

Review Policy

REPORTING the various presentations appearing in Broadway houses has proven helpful to a certain degree. Occasionally we have been favored with descriptive matter of a presentation produced in a theatre outside of New York. We have never intended that the review page should entirely feature Broadway presentations, and we have requested at various times through the medium of this department and through personal solicitation, that more descriptive articles be forwarded to us.

It has been found that publishing the program only does not give the benefit to a producer which he derives from a brief description of the production. We have spent the time since the inception of this department towards the development of the review or presentation reporting section, and it has been decided after our analysis that we will record here only the outstanding features of a program specializing in describing productions that are marked for their originality, novelty and artisticness.

Want to Record Progress

We cannot understand why some producers, either through their timidity or lack of interest, refuse to acquaint the professional world with what they are doing in stagecraft. How are we ever to progress if we keep ourselves hidden from the gaze of our co-workers. Progression and development do not come from a corner we may have on local or provincial favor, but reaches its potency when we enlarge the area of our acquaintanceship. A man cannot be a miser with his ideas, especially in this business. When you develop an idea you do so for the good of all. Your suggestions will be used by your fellow producer as you have used his. The only original thing we find is the stamp of one's individuality which marks the various productions. We can always be helpful because the show business is one vocation or profession in which perfection can never be attained; there are new angles constantly presenting themselves. Whatever is worthwhile, and whatever is well done we want to record here.

"Flaming Waters" Prologue

A mixed ensemble may be discovered in the set with a soloist rendering a ballad. Ensemble may join him for the chorus, one of the girls may be introduced as the "belle of the country," and with a partner, render a little dance which is heartily applauded by others in the group. An old man in a character makeup may be introduced into the dance for a comedy finish. At the peak of hilarity a red glow on the horizon foretells of impending trouble. The glow heightens and flames become apparent. There is confusion, which action is emphasized by a spirited orchestral accompaniment. The commotion becomes terrific as the flame effects cover the entire back drop. The main titles of the picture are flashed in upon the scrim toned with the flame effects as the lights on the set dim out into the opening scenes of the feature.

Broadway Presentations

SOME interesting features mark the presentation programs at the three leading houses on Broadway.

THE CAPITOL THEATRE is offering three units of a balanced variety introducing a singer, a pianist and a dancing ensemble. Carlo Ferretti, baritone, gives an excellent rendition of "Lolita Serenade." He appears dressed in a red Spanish costume, the setting consisting of black plush curtains hung in heavy folds with an opening at center masking a cut-out window of Alhambric design. The backing of semi-transparent material on the window is toned green. The curtains are drawn aside at center with orange colored cords; a painted cut-out border is hung in one suggesting a Moorish design. This unit is followed by a cartoon comedy which is given a very unusual treatment. The title of the comedy is "At the Rainbow's End" and just before the curtain opens on the screen a rainbow is projected on the close-in curtains. This rainbow is cut down to fit the frame and is an artistic relief to the black and white of the film subject. Julia Glass renders "Concerto in D Minor—Rubinstein" and appears in a sumptuous fabric setting. Heavy folded drapes hung across stage with a narrow opening at left center through which the lower part of a white and mahogany staircase with a cluster of flowers at the base is visible. Black plush is used as a backing and a small pendent crystal chandelier highlighted with amber is hung above the staircase. The drapery in the foreground is flooded a blue green. The grand piano is at right center. The Dance Ensemble entitled "Bal Masque" is one of the most attractive dance units we have seen at the Capitol, its most effective scenic feature being an arrangement of streamers and varied sizes of balloons which fill the top portion of the set in one and two, hanging about 8 to 10 ft. above the heads of the dancers. The Pierrot, Columbine and Harlequin theme is introduced in this unit. During the action the balloon and spiral cluster is highlighted various colors and at the finale when the characters leave the stage, Pierrot is left alone, kneeling at center, all lights in the set are dimmed and the cluster of balloons and streamers flooded a green blue contrasting with the dark set at the base of which a spot picks out Pierrot.

THE MARK STRAND THEATRE is introducing a second week's version of Joseph Plunkett's Mark Strand Frolics of 1926. Some of the outstanding features of last week are used in the current production. "The Bellmakers" scene is one of the most effective. The scene is painted to represent a large cave in which huge bells are placed. As the attendant or keeper strikes the bells the tops are pulled away from the base revealing dancers who appear in silver cloth costumes. Lights are placed in the top of the bells and are used to flood the dancers. One of the most popular units is entitled "Daguerreotypes." Two large double frames painted on a wallpaper drop, each frame bearing a life-size painting of one of the dandies of the 80's. The heads are cut-out and from the openings the heads of the members of the Mark Strand Male Quartette are protruded each man in a character makeup consistent with the painting or daguerreotype. They render two old-time numbers and for novelty it is one of the outstanding features of the Fralocs.

THE RIVOLI THEATRE which has inaugurated the new Publix policy with John Murray Anderson as the director of presentations is offering entertainment features of a revue type, which resemble a musical comedy unit rather than a presentation production. The scenic investure of the opening production "The Melting Pot" is very modest and limited, the chief source of attention focused on the costuming and the spirited dance finale of the ensemble punctuated with clever individual artists.

SEATTLE THEATRE OPENS

Warner Bros. opened one of the finest picture houses in the Northwest on Christmas Day when it dedicated Warners' Egyptian Theatre in Seattle. This is a $250,000 building, built in the Egyptian style throughout. The house seats 1,300. It has the largest organ in Seattle and a ten-piece orchestra. L. K. Brin is managing director. Among the unique accommodations are a "crying room," a glassed-off enclosure, a smoking room also glass-enclosed.

FLORIDA REAL ESTATE

Ansel Brown, formerly in charge of the Albany bureau of the New York State Motion Picture Commission, is back from Florida and will open a real estate office in Albany, specializing in Florida holdings. George H. Cobb, chairman of the commission, whose term of office expired on January 1, was in Albany last week spending a day or so at the bureau there but making no comment as to whether he expected to hold over until such time as the reorganization plans decided as to the outcome of the commission.

SLIGHT FIRE DAMAGE

Fire in the basement of the building occupied by the Elite Theatre, 1304 Green Bay avenue, Milwaukee, threatened to do considerable damage to the interior of the house this week. The fire started about 5 p. m. and dense clouds of smoke filled the basement and began to pour into the auditorium. Prompt action on the part of the first department was responsible for the slight loss suffered. The fire did not interrupt the showing of the program that night, as a result the theatre suffered only a small loss caused by smoke and water.

TOUGH ON SANTA CLAUS

Water damage from a fire destroyed considerable property in First National Exchange at Dallas, Texas, December 26, a large number of Christmas presents also being destroyed.

STAGE SETTINGS

Switching the Spotlight to the Exhibitor

Edited by Sumner Smith

Meyers Purchases Schenectady Theatre

UNABLE to persuade his landlord to enlarge the theatre he was renting, John L. Meyers, an exhibitor in Schenectady, naturally did the next best thing and bought the house. He now plans to enlarge it considerably. The theatre is located in the residential section and seats 247, running seven nights a week. Mr. Meyers is taking his son in with him and they plan to add about twenty-five feet to the width of the house and double that on the rear. Mr. Meyers has a unique way of booking his pictures and dating them in, and one that keeps peace in the film family among the exchanges. For instance, his plan calls for Universal pictures on Monday night, Paramount on Tuesday, Metro-Goldwyn on Wednesday, and so forth. Mr. Meyers has found that westerns are well liked and he sprinkles at least one of these in each week. When it comes to the over-boisterous boy, his method is to give him the air until such time as he is willing to announce his intention of remaining quiet and orderly.

Friends of Mr. and Mrs. A. E. Milligan, well known and well liked exhibitors of Schuylerville, extend through these columns their thanks for the New Year's greetings that roached them on January 1.

Bill Shirley of Schenectady is perfectly content these days to sit tight and steer clear of Florida real estate. Bill made his pile when he sold his interest in the Schenectady theatres, and is said to have added considerably to it through his deals in Florida land. He has sold everything, however, in the South, and being an active sort of a man, it would not be strange if he was heard from some of these days as the owner of a large theatre somewhere in New York State.

The other day Mr. Sanschagrin, who is opening a new theatre in Saranac Lake, was talking with Austin Interrante, local manager for Warner Brothers. Mr. Interrante, in discussing his rather unusual name, said that it meant "travel on earth." Not to be outdone, Mr. Sanschagrin stated that his name meant "without grief." So the two men shook hands and declared the combination a good one as they could travel life's highway without trouble.

A. E. Pearson, who formerly ran the picture theatres in Norwood and Winthrop, is now a full fledged resident of Clayton, having moved his family there, and is now operating the theatre there.

Walter Roberts, the sheik-like manager of the Troy Theatre, is sporting a dressing gown, the gift of his employees. Mr. Roberts is planning to buy a new car in the near future and his conversation these days smacks largely of spark plugs, carburetors and upkeep.

The quietest and most retiring exhibitor in all New York State, is probably Frank Briggs of the Clinton Square in Albany. Mr. Briggs is proving himself a good showman, and rarely, if ever, goes further in conversation than a "yes" or a "no."

Carl Phillips of Watertown, who recently bought the Antique Theatre in that city, is planning to take over the house on March 1 and run it himself. The theatre has been one of the Robbins group in the northern town.

The Plaza in Chestertown, which has been run by H. C. Richardson, has been taken over by the American Legion of that village.

M-e-o-u-w!

TONY VEILLER, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, has been having his troubles these days with cats. Sometime ago, Mrs. Veiller found a black kitten on the street and immediately adopted it. It had to have a companion, so a gray and white was added to the family. The latter wandered away, however, and Tony replaced it with a beautiful Angora which cost him a portion of his week's salary. The little black fellow died on Christmas Day, but has been replaced by one which Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand houses in Troy and Albany, brought in from the country.

With two cats again in the household, Tony has just received word that his father intends to send him a bull pup as a present. Now the question is will the cats stay or will the bull pup reign supreme, or will peace be declared and all three become members of the Veiller household.

A black cat crossed the road in front of Morris Silverman, owner of the Happy Hour and Pearl Theatres in Schenectady, as he was leaving Albany, late one afternoon last week. The sequel of this lies in the fact that during the seventeen miles between the two cities, Morris suffered only three blowouts and the distance was covered in a trifle over two hours. Mr. Silverman, supperless, arrived at his theatre at 7:30 o'clock.

The Regent of St. Regis Falls, run by D. C. Aldrich, has closed for the winter.

M. Paul Meyer, who runs the Woodlawn in Schenectady, plans to spend about $10,000 this year on a new house that will occupy the same site. Mr. Meyer figures out that there are about 6,000 residents in the section of the city where he is located, and that with the bigger and more attractive house he will get more business. His present theatre seats 425 and being run this winter for the first time in its history. He intends to reserve a considerable area in the rear of the house for the parking of cars.

It was a regular New Year's carnival at Mike Freedman's house, the Rialto, in Schenectady, on the last day of the year. Mike decided to blow himself with an unusually good bill of entertainment, and the way the people flocked to the theatre was a caution.

Two women, Mrs. Elizabeth Fonda and Gertrude Meyers, are running the Grand Theatre, a 300-seat house in Scotia, and doing very well, thank you. Mrs. Fonda does the buying and her sister Gertrude acts as manager. The house is operating six nights to the week and ran last summer for the first summer in its history.

A new wrinkle was tried out with considerable success at the State Theatre in Schenectady, New Year's week. A midnight show was given, starting at 11:30 o'clock, and with an advance sale of reserve seats at regular prices. The idea of an advance sale is something new to the city and assured late patrons of a seat.

Unless business picks up in Schenectady the chances are that Morris Silverman may not erect a new theatre he has planned and which would replace the Pearl. Mr. Silverman had been planning to invest about $40,000 in the new house.

Thirty employees of the Farash Theatres in Schenectady voted James Roach, manager of the chain, a prince of good fellows the other night when he played host at a dinner which got under way at 11 o'clock and lasted for two or three hours. Incidentally, the Broadway Theatre, which is being renovated by Mr. Roach, will reopen on February 1 as a 15-cent house.

Miss Betty Feuer, who runs the Crescent in Schenectady, presided at a Christmas party given at the theatre for the employees. Of course Miss Feuer has been busy these last few days between her theatre and the many parties in the Electric City.

The Robbins houses in Watertown, observed anniversary week with exceptionally good bills. The anniversary marked the advent of Nate Robbins in the northern city.

According to all reports, George Dwore, a well know exhibitor in Schenectady and secretary of the Albany Zone, is planning to open a law office in the spring but will still retain his interest in the theatres.

In these days of $35,000 or more gross for the week, a little residential house in Schenectady presents a marked contrast. It occurred during one of the cold nights a week ago, and right after Christmas when patrons were few and far between. The young man in the box office ran over to the owner of the house and remarked:

"Get me some nickels."

"How many are there in the till?" inquired the exhibitor.

"One," said the cashier.

"It's enough," came back the answer.

No turkey for Frank Braymaier, manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, when there is a rabbit in sight. Mr. Braymaier had rabbit on Christmas Day, and possibly tucked away the left hind foot, for right afterward came the announcement that he would handle the advertising and exploitation of all six Farash theatres in Schenectady.

McKane & LaRoque have taken over the Columbia Theatre in Moira, which has been operated by Lawrence & White.

If the bowlers among the Troy theatres are as good as they declare themselves to be, there is an opportunity for an interesting little match with the pin topplers from the Schenectady theatres. In other words, Claude Fish, owner of the American in Schenectady, would like to hear from the Troy crowd for a series of three or more games. And speaking of Mr. Fish, he received a pleasant little surprise Christmas morning in the shape of an umbrella and a pen and pencil set from his employees. The umbrella will come in particularly handy as someone made off with his other one a few weeks ago.

Monday night is the big event of the week in the life of Edward Walsh of the Albany Theatre in Schenectady. He announces each of the amateur acts, and when all of the amateurs have finished it's Mr. Walsh who walks out on the stage and holds the prize above the heads of each and then listens to the applause before deciding the winner.

Boston Honors Newhall with Banquet

ALLEN B. NEWHALL, managing director of the Mark-Strand Theatre in Lynn, Mass., was honored at a testimonial banquet in the Copley-Plaza at Boston, to mark the completion of his twenty years of service with the Mark theatres in Lynn. The event was arranged by Boston exchange managers and salesmen and more than 100 persons were present. A diamond ring, valued at $2,500, was presented to Mr. Newhall by Moe Mark, head of the Mark-Strand chain of theatres, on behalf of himself and the Boston exchange executives. It was one of the greatest—if not the greatest—tributes ever paid to an exhibitor in Massachusetts, whose rise in the theatrical world reads like a Horatio Alger story.

Twenty years ago Mr. Newhall went to work for the Mark Brothers as a singer of illustrated songs at the Mark-Comique Theatre, Lynn. Later he was made manager, and when the Mark-Strand was opened ten years ago he was made managing director of that house and the Comique.

Among those who paid tribute to Mr. Newhall in speeches were Moe Mark, Jacob Lourie, head of the Lourie circuit; Thomas Spry, New England manager of First National Pictures; Joseph M. Levenson of the Lynn Strand board of directors and many other exhibitors and exchange men. Mr. Spry was toastmaster.

Al Somerby of the Old Howard and Bowdoin Square Theatres, Boston, and Lew Wallace were in charge of the entertainment. Moe Silver, auditor for the Mark-Strand in Lynn and Worcester, who with Mr. Newhall is known among the Boston film exchanges as "Potash and Perlmutter," was chairman of the arrangements committee, assisted by Sam Moscow and Al Somerby.

Jacob Golden, manager of Proctor's Griswold Theatre in Troy, N. Y., is in a Roxbury, Mass., hospital recovering after a breakdown in health. Mr. Golden was visiting his parents at Somerville when he became so ill it was deemed necessary to remove him to the hospital. While "bed-ridden," Jake, who formerly worked on the same news sheet with ye scribe, is doping out new stunts—of which he has an inexhaustible fund—to swell the box office receipts at the Griswold.

"Once a newsboy, always a newsboy," says Sam Katse. The popular and big-hearted Dorchester exhibitor never has forgotten the days he used to sell papers so he gave the newsboys of his district a big treat by inviting them to a big special Christmas show.

Gold pieces were given to the employes of the Mark-Strand, Comique and Waldorf theatres in Lynn as Christmas gifts.

Frank H. Dowling has been named assistant manager of the Olympia Theatre in Lynn, one of the former Gordon houses acquired by Paramount. He will bring a vast experience in the theatrical world to aid Manager James Moore in keeping everyone of the 3,200 seats filled all the time.

Thugs opened the safe in the Broadway Theatre and clipped its contents of $200.

Abraham Spitz of Providence, R. I., has had ground broken for a theatre at Wollaston, Mass. There will be 1,500 seats, all on the main floor. Mr. Spitz is noted for his promotion of theatre projects in all parts of New England.

Alden Peterson is the manager of the new Keith-Albee St. James Theatre in Boston, which recently was opened. A feature picture and five acts of vaudeville comprise the policy. The St. James, formerly George A. Giles' stock company house, has been transformed into a beautiful playhouse. E. F. Albee seeing to it that the atmosphere is decidedly homelike.

Montreal Man Treats To Sleigh Ride

ABBIE WRIGHT, manager of the Princess Theatre, Montreal, gave his theatre staff a unique treat for the holidays when he gave his employes a sleigh drive up and around the Mont Royal, the local mountain pet, after which they sat down to an old-fashioned dinner at Kraussman's Cafe.

To commemorate the completion of the Lord Selkirk Highway, running from Winnipeg, Manitoba, to the U. S. Border, Manager John T. Fiddes staged a special program at the Playhouse, Winnipeg, consisting of speeches by prominent men, including Mayor Ralph Webb, and the showing of pictures of the new highway. The speeches were broadcast, giving the theatre an excellent boost.

The new Classic Theatre has been opened at Winnipeg, Manitoba, by George Graham, an outstanding independent exhibitor of the West. The new house, a fine suburban cinema, replaces a former theatre of the same name which was partially wrecked last summer during moving operations.

B. M. Garfield, manager of the Rialto Theatre, Montreal, was the recipient of a handsome electric floor lamp from the theatre staff at a Christmas party, the presentation being made by Eugene Maynard, musical director.

Manager Charles A. Meade of the Lyceum Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, had a special presentation during the holiday week of a news reel review, "Life's Greatest Thrill," depicting big events during the past ten years as shown in news weeklies. Mr. Meade presented it as a special attraction and secured considerable publicity.

Program features and special numbers are being regularly broadcast from the stage of the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, every Sunday afternoon for an hour under the direction of Harry Dahn, manager of the theatre.

Penn. Stork Flies

John Eckhardt, house manager of the Howland and Colonial Theatres, Wilkinsburg, Penn., got a real Christmas present in the shape of a baby boy which arrived December 22. This is the first-born in the Eckhardt household.

The Rialto, Erie, recently played "Little Red Riding Hood" and staged a prologue. Baby Marion Stillwell, daughter of Phil Stillwell, projectionist at the Rialto, was the star of the stage presentation. The young lady played Little Red Riding Hood and also did a dance which made a big hit with Erie audiences.

Dedicate Cedar-Lee In Cleveland

THE Cedar-Lee Theatre, located at Cleveland Heights, a Cleveland suburb, was formerly dedicated just before New Year's day. The new house is owned and operated by the Broadway circuit, of which Dr. B. I. Brody is president. It is designed in the Adams style of architecture and has a seating capacity of 1,200.

Plans for remodeling the Sorg Theatre, Middletown, Ohio, so as to seat 1,000 on the main floor and 500 in the balcony, have been announced by Theodore Chifos, manager.

The Palace Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, one of the Keith-Albee "ace" houses, will give up vaudeville and pictures for the week of February 14, when the Chicago Opera Company will take over the house for an operatic program. John Royal is manager.

John Pekras, who is at the head of all theatres operating in Elyria, Ohio, has taken over the Dreamland at Columbus, Ohio.

The Strand Theatre, St. Paris, Ohio, which has been run by Webster and Gallagher, has been sold to Ethel Cooper.

Manager R. S. Wenger of the Miami and Victory Theatres, Union City, Ind., just across the Ohio line, entertained the children of the city at a theatre party at both houses as a Christmas treat.

Manager Granger of the Kaypee Theatre, Mt. Gilead, Ohio, in connection with several of the leading business men, gave a series of theatre parties to the kiddies during the holidays.

Plans have finally been completed for the new theatre to be erected at corner of Beecher street and Gilbert avenue, Cincinnati, by Eli Frankenstein. The house will seat 900 in the auditorium, according to the present lay-out.

Niagara Falls House Now Opened

THE FALLS, the newest theatre in the Cataract City, was opened New Year's Day on the site of the old Eugenia Theatre, East Falls street and Portage Road. The house seats 1,250 on ground floor, balcony and mezzanine. It is owned and will be operated by Sam Trapasso & Co. Mr. Trapasso and Frank De Fozio will be active in its management.

The new picture theatre which George Biehler has been building in Hamburg, N. Y., for over a year, will have its grand opening on the evening of January 14. Mr. Biehler has operated the Palace in this town for many years.

The Lyceum in Ithaca, after being closed for three weeks, has reopened with pictures, which it is planned to show all winter. The equipment in the booth has been modernized. Stock has been playing the house.

J. B. Whitney, former Buffalo film salesman, who for a year or so has been managing Schine houses in Lockport and Medina, has come to Buffalo as manager of the Olympic in Lafayette Square, also a Schine theatre. He succeeds Ray S. Averill, who is reported about to join the Comerford interests in Pennsylvania.

The Monument Theatre Corporation, which operates the Lafayette Square Theatre, Buffalo, has purchased a site at Court street and Clinton avenue, Rochester, on which it is planned to erect a theatre to seat 3,500. The contract for the real estate has been closed. It involves a sum of $1,150,000. It is understood that A. H. Fennyvessy of Rochester is interested in the project.

The Capitol, newest link in the Schine chain, was opened in Newark, N. Y., at midnight, December 31. It seats 1,300 and cost $150,000. It replaces the old Opera House, which burned last April.

St. Louis Theatre News

Charley Vollmer has taken charge of the Ashland Theatre for the Laventhal Circuit. For several years he was manager of the Midway Theatre, Grand boulevard at Washington. Walter Thimmig has taken over the Midway.

The Palace and Majestic have been added to the Goldman & Laventhal down-town circuit.

Exhibitors in from out-of-town included John Marlowe, Herrin, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Alton, Ill.; J. R. Pratt, Fulton, Mo., and G. M. Luttrell, Jacksonville, Ill.

Chicago Holiday Business a Record

THE New Year's and Christmas holiday business of the theatres of the Chicago territory was the heaviest in the history of the houses. Owing to the enforcement of the old fire laws, many of the Loop houses, as well as the big deluxe neighborhood theatres, had their hands full trying to keep the crowds of theatre patrons in line, so they could get into the theatres as fast as the crowds inside came out. The lobbies of the houses were not permitted to fill up by the fire authorities as in the past on the holiday business, and plans are being rapidly made to secure some changes in the old fire ordinances and bring them up-to-date so as to permit the houses to take proper care of their patrons.

The Powers Amusement Company has been organized by H. E. Brandell, Lawrence C. Traegerm and Wallace E. Shirra. The company will take over the management of the Iris Theatre at 5743 West Chicago avenue, seating 1,500, and will make some improvements. The house is booked by the Midwest-Lubliner & Trinz circuit and John Powers is president of the new organization.

The new Maltz Theatre has been opened by Fitzpatrick & McElroy at Alpena, Mich., and Edward R. Saether has been named as managing director. The new theatre seats 1,200 and has a unique lighting system.

Jack Miller, business manager of the Chicago Exhibitors Association, and his associate, Vincent Lynch of the Lynch circuit, will open the new Lido Theatre at Maywood, Ill., this month. The house seats 2,500.

The proceedings brought by the National Theatres Corporation to enjoin Chief of Police Collins and Fire Commissioner Connery from enforcing the fire ordinance was dismissed by Judge Oscar Hebel on Thursday and the theatre circuit will file an amended bill.

A. B. McCullum is moving to Hoopston, Ill., from Dwight. He is operating the Lorraine and Hoopston theatres and reports business as good.

George MacDonald, formerly of the Vic Theatre, has been appointed manager of the Forest Park of the Ascher circuit.

The opening of the Terminal Theatre of the Ascher circuit on the northwest side which was set for Christmas Day has been postponed until early in January owing to inability to finish the house in time for the scheduled opening. Edward Nikoden will be managing director.

The Grand Theatre at Madison was destroyed by fire recently and George W. Sparks, owner, is having plans drawn for a fine new house that will seat 1,800.

Among exhibitors seen along Film Row were H. T. Loper and Herbert Walters of the Lyric Theatre at Springfield, Ill.; E. L. Merkley of the Ramsdell Theatre at Manistee and O. J. Lambiotte of the Tivoli at Mishawaka.

The Great States Theatre Company has taken over the booking of pictures of the Terminal and Capital theatres of Feder & Halper.

The Grand at Monmouth, Ill., has been fixed up for the winter and the house has been renamed the Fine Arts Theatre. L. M. Ring is the manager.

R. Atkinson has sold to the Gland Brothers circuit the New Oak Theatre at Western and Armitage avenue. They also have the Ashland Theatre.

C. L. Bishop has bought the Family Theatre at Mt. Carroll, Ill., from the Sigfried management.

The boys are extending congratulations to Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer on his election as president of the Idlewild Country Club.

Albert Berger of the Theatre Equipment Company was married last month to Miss Dorothy Ginsberg.

Kansas City House Books P. D. C.

WILLIAM AND N. J. FLYNN, owners of the Globe Theatre, downtown house of Kansas City, last week obtained a franchise for the showing of all Cecil DeMille productions and others of P. D. C. The deal, which places the Globe in the first rank among Kansas City houses, was closed by the Flynn brothers, O. T. Hill of St. Louis, special representative for the DeMille interests, and C. A. Schultz, Kansas City P. D. C. branch manager.

With the wrestling "rage" still at its height in Kansas City, Fred Spears, manager of the Empress Theatre, Kansas City, still is finding it profitable to stage short wrestling bouts as specialty numbers each Friday night.

A lease of rather unusual merit—a "sandwich lease"—was bought in Kansas City by Schuyler Ashley from E. C. Sooy, the location of comparatively few feet adjoining the Shubert Theatre. The lease will pay $2,500 a year for seventy-nine years.

The following new theatres and changes in management in the Kansas City territory during the last week have been announced: Lucy & Wilkinson are constructing a new theatre at Hoisington, Kas.; S. D. Huyter, formerly of the Highland Theatre, Kansas City, is constructing a new theatre in Kiowa, Kas.; the new Westport Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City, seating 1,000, has been opened by Frank Amos at Forty-third and Mercer streets; the new Rialto Theatre, Kansas City suburban house, was opened by Edward Rhodeman; Earl Hayes, who has been assisting Jack Truitt in the management of the Grand Theatre, Moberly, Mo., has resigned to take over the management of the Marshall Theatre, Manhattan, Kas., owned by the Dickinson Circuit; "Happy" Franks, formerly with the Junior Orpheum Booking Offices in Kansas City, has been made manager of the Tenth Street Theatre, Kansas City, Kas.

Denver Visitors

Exhibitors visiting Denver the past week were B. P. McCormick of the Liberty Theatre, Florence, Col., also operator of the Opera House, Canon City, Col.; M. C. Gerhart, owner and manager of the Empress Theatre, Fort Collins, Col.; Ed Schoelkoph of the Opera House, Idaho Springs, Col., and A. G. Diaz of the Isis Theatre, Boulder, Col.

Wisconsin Theatre News

A. J. Meiniger, formerly connected with the Ascher Brothers in Chicago, has been appointed manager of the new Saxe Brothers Retlaw Theatre at Fond du Lac, Wis. He arrived in the city two weeks before the opening night and personally supervised the preparations for the elaborate program. Mr. Meininger was manager of the Merrill Theatre at Milwaukee for several years. He also managed theatres for Asher Brothers in Chicago and Manitowoc, Wis.

More than 750 Milwaukee newsboys were given the greatest treat of the holiday season when they accepted the invitation of Tom Saxe, head of the Saxe Amusement Enterprises, and S. P. Kennedy, manager of the Merrill Theatre, to witness Jackie Coogan in "Old Clothes."

Parkersburg, W. Va., Theatre Planned

The Smoot Amusement Company, Parkersburg, W. Va., contemplates the erection of a new theatre to cost approximately $150,000 on the present site of the Hippodrome. Contracts will probably be let in February. Completion is expected by October. The house will play both pictures and vaudeville. The main floor will seat about 600, while a mezzanine floor will care for 150 and the balcony 350. This is a third more than the capacity of the present Hippodrome.

Fielding K. O'Kelly, one of the best known exploitation and publicity managers in the country, lately of Morgantown, W. Va., is again back in the Altoona section, having just assumed charge of the position of exploitation director of the Natopoulos enterprises in that town and Johnstown. Mr. O'Kelly has been singularly successful in this line of work and great things are expected of him in his new position.

Charlie Feinler, owner of the Virginia and Colonial Theatres, Wheeling, W. Va., played Santa Claus to several of Pittsburgh's film exchangemen as usual. The employees of Mr. Feinler's theatres presented their boss with a magnificnt watch and chain.

A. E. Booth has leased the Strand on Chestnut street, Ceredo, W. Va., to the Strand Theatre Company, which was recently formed by C. H. Wellman, W. H. Lowe, F. M. Webb and Garfield Maynard. The theatre was leased for a period of three years. Garfield Maynard was made president of the new organization and M. Webb manager.

Cameo "Looks Up" in San Francisco

WHEN C. L. Toepfer and E. J. Roemheld came from the East a few weeks ago to take charge of the Cameo Theatre for Carl Laemmle, they found a house that was proving a liability rather than an asset. Too frequent changes in policy had caused dry rot to set in and the crowds were passing it by. Within a month's time the house has been placed on its feet again and is now making its own way.

Sam Levin has taken over the Palace Theatre on Union street, San Francisco.

Friends of Charles Mehrten, formerly of the Varsity Theate, Berkeley, and for years treasurer of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Association of California, will be pained to learn of an accident which befell him recently at Marced, Cal., resulting in the breaking of several bones.

Alexander Pantages has arranged to erect a large theatre at Fresno, Cal.

Dr. John Wesley Cline, builder and owner of the Cline Theatre, Santa Rosa, Cal., passed away at his home in that city December 24, following a long illness.

Sam Gordon, who conducts two theatres at Napa, Cal., is erecting a business block near the Hippodrome Theatre.

Detroit's Traveler In Hollywood

H. S. GALLUP, Michigan's sight-seeing exhibitor, who recently returned from the Orient, has gone to Hollywood where he will remain several months looking over the studios. Mr. Gallup is head of the Delft Theatre, Inc., with headquarters in Marquette.

A unique manner of celebrating Christmas with his friends was tested the day before Christmas when Henry Koppin, head of the Koppin Theatres, held open house in his office in the Barlum Building. Vaudeville acts and various novelties supplied entertainment for the drop-ins.

Wayne, a suburb of Detroit, is to have a community theatre, as a result of a company launched by a group of business men headed by C. K. Miller. The theatre, which will be erected at once, will seat 1,200.

Along Exchange Row

With the Men Who Sell the Pictures

Albany

J. H. MacIntyre, manager of the Famous Players exchange in Albany and chairman of the entertainment committee, expects about 200 persons in attendance at the dance to be given by the Associated Film Clubs of Albany at the Hotel Ten Eyck on the night of January 15. Dancing will start at 9 o'clock. There has been a heavy demand for tickets.

The southern tier in New York State will be covered for Warner Brothers from now on by Ted Hayes, who had previously been connected with the First National exchange. Walter Vadney, who has been succeeded by Mr. Hayes, will devote his attention to his theatre in Watervliet.

Joe Miller, who looks after the interests of Renown, was in Albany last week calling on various theatre owners.

Alfred Marchetti has been elected as president of the local First National Club. Miss Carrie Himmelberger has been chosen as secretary, Ella M. Rourke as treasurer and Renee Craven as chairman of the entertainment committee.

All the salesmen in the First National office sported new memorandum books the first of the year, gifts from A. W. Smith.

Employees of the Famous Players exchange tendered a farewell dinner last week to Tom Murray, prior to his departure for New York City, where he will make his home from now on.

J. H. MacIntyre, manager of the Paramount exchange here, spent his Christmas at his home in Boston but returned here on Saturday and left a day or so later for a selling trip through Northern New York.

No one has yet been appointed as manager of the local Bond exchange in place of Jack Krause.

San Francisco

Members of the San Francisco Universal exchange, thirty-two in all, cast business cares to the wind on the afternoon of December 24 and enjoyed a Christmas party. Presents of a comic nature were exchanged and the rest of the afternoon was given over to dancing. Employees joined in presenting Manager Carol A. Nathan with a handsome foot-stool.

Lou Metzger, western division manager of Universal, with headquarters in New York, spent the Christmas holiday at San Francisco, conferring with District Manager L. J. Schlaifer and Local Manager Carol A. Nathan.

Harold Moore, formerly San Francisco city salesman for F. B. O., has been transferred to Portland, Ore., where he has been made branch manager.

Fred Voight has taken over his duties as manager of the local exchange of Associated Exhibitors and is rapidly becoming acquainted with the product of this concern. Jack Marpole has been added to the staff in the capacity of booker.

The lure of San Francisco attracted several members of the Los Angeles film exchange colony during the Christmas season, among these being Jack and Betty Brower of First National, Mell Hulling of Warner Bros. and George Knowles of the Pathe Exchange.

Mike Coyne, for some time connected with United Artists, has been made manager of the San Francisco exchange of this organization.

Earl Cohen of the E. L. C. Co. is doing the proud-papa act these days, a bouncing boy having arrived to make things lively in the Cohen household.

A. J. Moeller of the Moeller Theatre Service, New York, was a recent visitor at San Francisco.

Buffalo

Members of the various committees which planned for the annual Movie Ball staged Monday evening, January 4, in the Hotel Statler, are to be congratulated on the success of the event, which was the largest attended in the history of these dances. The ball, which was staged by the Film Board of Trade, attracted a huge throng of exhibitors and exchange men, not only from Buffalo but from surrounding towns.

John M. Sitterly, Associated Exhibitors' representative, has engaged F. A. Maxwell as city salesman. E. J. Smith, general sales manager, was in town last week for a brief conference with Mr. Sitterly, stopping off in Buffalo on his way home from Toronto where he went to confer with Frank S. Hopkins, representative in Canada.

Robert T. Murphy, one of the best known exchange men in Western New York, has left Universal to assume his duties as manager of Shea's North Park. Bob took over the managerial reins on Sunday, January 3.

Manager Basil Brady of Pathe has engaged George Ross, formerly with Bond and Fox as cashier, at the Pathe office, to succeed Louis Schindler, who has been appointed booker.

Harry T. Dixon, manager of the F. B. O. office, is still trying to figure out who is trying to make a golf bug out of him. He received a whole outfit for Christmas but to date has never swung a niblick.

Colonel Howard F. Brink received a beautiful toilet set for Christmas from the employees of the Educational exchange. It includes everything but the bath tub. Jack Lyons, salesman, is confined to his home with the grippe. Wants to be in style.

Canada

Formal announcement has been made of the appointment of I. H. Allen of Winnipeg, Manitoba, as Western Canada manager for Vital Exchanges of Canada, Ltd., by R. J. Romney, president and general manager of the Canadian company, the head office of which is at St. John, N. B. This completes the organization of Canadian district representatives, Bill Melody having been made manager at Toronto and James A. Kirkpatrick at Montreal. Mr. Allen has opened offices in 302 Film Exchange Building, Winnipeg, to handle Western Vital distribution.

W. A. Sault, one of the veteran film men of Canada, has been appointed branch manager for Canadian Universal at St. John, N. B., succeeding Joe Lieberman who has been in charge of that branch for some time.

Harry Manheim of Toronto, for some years publisher of a Canadian picture trade paper, was arrested recently through the efforts of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on a charge of printing fictitious whiskey bottle labels, having turned these out in large quantities, it is alleged.

J. P. Bickell of Toronto, vice-president of Famous Players Canadian Corp., has made a business trip through the Canadian West. H. M. Thomas of Winnipeg, Western Division manager for Famous Players, has been paying a visit to the head office of the Canadian Famous at Toronto.

Leo M. Devaney, Toronto, Universal sales manager, has returned from a business trip through Eastern Canada, going as far as Halifax and St. John.

Fred W. Crosbie has been appointed exploitation manager for Canadian Universal in Western Canada and has been doing excellent work with "Phantom of the Opera."

Pittsburgh

G. C. Porter was elected president of the Universal Club, a social organization composed of members of the Universal exchange force at the Charleston, W. Va., branch. Other officers elected were: Boyd Eskew, vice-president; Miss Margaret Porter, secretary; Fred Eddington, teasurer, and Ralph Smith, sergeant. Members of the entertainment committee named were: Russell Hunt, Miss Lee Eperthener, Miss Lavina Burdette and Ralph Smith. Finance committee—Fred Eddington, Earl Goff and Miss Bessie Meadows. N. E. Shiren of the home office was elected a member of the club. Mr. Shiren is a personal representative of Carl Laemmle and is here for an extended stay to make a survey of conditions in West Virginia. J. E. Daly, manager of the local exchange, was presented with a beautiful leather set by his employees, and Mr. Porter, who is a salesman and known over the territory as the "little man with the big cigar," was given two cigars that resembled small baseball bats in size.

Manager J. J. Maloney, of the Pittsburgh Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer branch, has just fitted out his private office in such tasteful manner that it is about the prettiest on the local Film Row. Walls painted battleship grey, draperies on the windows and rugs on the floor. Very classy.

Manager R. S. Wehrle, of the First National exchange, is again hard at work after having spent Christmas Day at the old home in Bluefield, W. Va. "Russ" is right at home in the Mountain States, he having served for five years on the road for F. N. in that territory, plor to his being named manager of the office.

Harry Grelle, of the Supreme Photoplay Company, Pittsburgh's oldest film man in point of service, suffered a broken left arm on Christmas Eve. Harry fell in a public garage, and fractured a small bone near the elbow, as well as badly spraining his wrist.

The employees of the local Pathe exchange played Santa Claus to their boss, "Bert" Moran, by presenting him with a Pathex camera and projector.

The home office of the P. D. C. presented their Pittsburgh branch with a projector for Christmas. Now Manager Jack Cohen is happy. He can screen his product for interested exhibitors.

St. Louis

Jack Weil has moved into his new offices at 3314 Lindell boulevard. The exchange was formerly used by Producers Distributing, which several weeks ago moved into ground floor space in the Plaza Hotel Building.

George William Gambrill, Paramount exploiteer here for three years, has been transferred to Cincinnati. He will serve Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis.

William Goldman has added Jimmy Gately, formerly assistant manager for United Artists, to his staff of theatre managers.

Hall Walsh is Warner Brothers' new city salesman, succeeeding John Morphet. Walsh was with Universal. Morphet goes with Producers Distributing.

A. H. Klein, booker for Warner Brothers, has gone to Memphis, Tenn., to book for Fox there.

R. O. Drummond, assistant comptroller for United Artists, visited the local office during the past week.

Bill Collins is now booking for United Artists. He was with Universal. Miss Thelma Shirley, formerly bookkeeper for Universal, has also joined the United Artists office as cashier.

Associated Exhibition

CAMILLE OF THE BARBARY COAST. (5,308 ft.). Star, Mae Busch. A fairly entertaining picture, that will come and depart and just fill in the day with no comment either way. Weather fair. Good attendance. Average program picture. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

GOING UP. (5,886 ft.). Star, Douglas MacLean. Very good thrill comedy, but not up to what I had expected from the advertisements. The last reel gives enough stunts to keep them up in the air for that length of time at least. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

HIS BUDDY'S WIFE. Star, Glenn Hunter. This is a show that pleased about 90 per cent., especially the ladies. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. 90 per cent. appeal. J. M. Blanchard, Lone Rock, Kossuth County, Iowa.

KEEP SMILING. (5,400 ft.). Star, Monte Banks. Plenty of laughs in this and that's what the picture was bought to accomplish here. Good cast and produced well, would advise exhibitors to play this, it will get by in any town. It's clean and funny. Weather fair. Excellent attendance. A good comedy program picture. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MANHATTAN MADNESS. (5,560 ft.). Star, Jack Dempsey. What business you are going to do is solely on Dempsey's name and then when you get them in this picture won't entertain. It didn't here, but this is a particular town, Dempsey can't act a lick, didn't do what he does best, fight. If I had it to do over again I wouldn't have played the picture, the squawks were many and in my opinion justified. If you ballyhoo this you can get them in, if you don't care how the audience feels after you've counted up, play it. Estelle Taylor can act, but she never had a chance in this except to run in and out of doors. I wouldn't call this even a program picture. Fair weather, good attendance. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

F. B. O.

GALLOPING VENGEANCE. Star, Bob Custer. Not very good. The story didn't hold interest. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

HEADS UP. Star, Lefty Flynn. This is about the worst Flynn that I have ever run of him. I think that F. B. O. is trying to kill him as they don't put him in the stuff he should belong in, which is western type. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

JIMMIE'S MILLIONS. (5,167). Star, Richard Talmadge. Any of Dick Talmadge's shows please our crowd. Buy all of his pictures you can. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. 95 per cent. appeal. J. M. Blanchard, Lone Rock, Kossuth County, Iowa.

LAST EDITION. (6,400 ft.). Star, Ralph Lewis. Step on this one, boys. Emory Johnson's greatest bar none. A real good bond and gold mine for the exhibitor if exploited right. New print. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. R. A Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Use these tips and send some from your own experience.
> "OUR GANG."

LAST EDITION. (6,400 ft.). Star, Ralph Lewis the grand old man of the screen back with Emory Johnson in a real honest to goodness picture, of the type of "In the Name of the Law" and "Third Alarm" and is just as good as any of these. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LAUGHING AT DANGER. (5,442 ft.). Star, Richard Talmadge. Packed with stunts, action, and daring adventures. Also has adequate comedy. A few of my patrons kick because all of Dick's stuff is so unreasonable but the majority like him fine. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, Graham, Texas.

LET'S GO GALLAGHER. (5,182). Star, Tom Tyler. Best Western on market; plenty of comedy and action. The little boy with his pony and dog will help make you like it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. 100 per cent. appeal. Draw farmers, town of 150. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre, (250 seats) Loyalton, South Dakota.

NO MAN'S LAW. Star, Bob Custer. Here is a chap that is sure batting one hundred per cent. Bow Custer is making some real westerns at last. This one was pronounced a real bet by all. Tone and appeal, good. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

PARISIAN NIGHTS. (6,278 ft.). Star, Lou Tellegen. Just a fair program picture with all sorts of scraps and supposedly thrilling adventures that make little impression here. Only a fair program picture. Fair weather, attendance not good. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

TEARING THROUGH. (4,714 ft.). Star, Richard Talmadge. Not as good as his former pictures and very short. Not over four thousand feet of film. Business a little below normal for Saturday. He usually goes big for me. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

TEXAS BEARCAT. Star, Bob Custer. A good western picture full of action, that will please all western fans. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720). Star, Fred Thompson. Up to the Thompson standard, which is a good recommendation. Tone, good. No for Sunday and as special. Appeal 80 per cent. Draw farmers, small town oil field, town about 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

WHITE FANG. (5,600 ft.). Star, Strongheart (dog). The worst dog picture I have played. Strongheart was okay but the picture and cast fell down. Special, no. Not much appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

THREE WISE CROOKS. Star, Evelyn Brent. Two days to fair business. This picture is just the old crook hokum. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

WHITE THUNDER. Star cast. Satisfactory western, but not as peppy as most persons want in action film; as a matter of fact it is not a Western until near the end. Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

WYOMING WILDCAT. (6 reels). Star, Tom Tyler. "Let's Go Gallagher" with Toy Tyler was a knockout. "The Wyoming Wildcat" is all the title implies. Action, thrills, and romance. For Western fans great. Tone and appeal, good. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

First National

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 ft.). Star, Milton Sills. One of the best liked pictures shown here in months. Gets the business. Paper good. Easy to advertise. Wish could get more like it. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

BRASS BOWL. Star, Edmund Lowe. Very good mystery story. Keeps you guessing who is who most of the time, better than the average mystery fiction. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CLASSIFIED. (6,925 ft.). Star, Corinne Griffith. This is one of the most pleasing pictures Miss Griffith ever made and if she is a drawing card with your audience she certainly will please them in this one. Slightly out of her class but nevertheless a very fine picture that will do business and please your patrons so what could any exhibitor want. Tone, O. K. Sunday, O. K. Special, yes. 100 per cent appeal. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

CLASSIFIED. (6,927 ft.). Star, Corinne Griffith. Very good and just what the people like her in; this is a story with a foundation whereas few others of her output have the slightest semblance of a sensible theme. Tone, spicy. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 95 per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

CLASSMATES. (6,982 ft.). Star, Richard Barthelmess. The authentic West Point atmosphere and action in this makes it a production that will greatly interest everyone. I pushed this one hard but didn't clean up as the weather and a county basketball tournament was against me. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Strong appeal. Village and rural class town of 400. Admission 15-30. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

DARK ANGEL. (7,311). A good one and it will stand up for two or three days run. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

DESERT FLOWER. (6,837). Star, Colleen Moore. A very good picture from every viewpoint. Miss Moore well liked here. Ran it on a Monday (Blue Monday) and it went over big. Tone, excellent. Yes for Sunday and as special. 100 per cent. appeal. Draw rural and surrounding towns, town of 30,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

FOR SALE. (7,840). Star, Corinne Griffith. Excellent picture. The kind that makes them come back for more. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

FRIVOLOUS SAL. (7 reels). Star, Eugene O'Brien. This is a fine program picture of the western type and just a little different from other Western pictures. It went over in fine shape and everyone well pleased. Didn't have a very big Saturday night crowd, so just made a little above expenses. Prints in good condition. Tone, fine. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 90 per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

HER TEMPORARY HUSBAND. (6,722 ft.). Star cast. Good comedy, plenty of laughs. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883). Star cast. A bright and clever picture with that human touch for which John W. Stahl has become known. Well done and pleasing. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, high. Draw better class, town about 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

IDLE TONGUES. (5447 ft.) Star cast. Good story worth seeing. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

KNOCKOUT. (7,450 ft.). Star, Milton Sills. It's a story of the woods with the big he-man triumphant over villainy, etc. They liked it, that's enough for me. They pay the freight. Weather fair. Attendance good. A program picture and priced as such here. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LADY WHO LIED. (7,111 ft.) Star, Lewis J. Stone. The exhibit was found no fault with by my patrons and that's the proof. Weather good, attendance good. A good program picture, nothing more. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills, I don't believe this will suit Sills' fans. It didn't here. The story is very weak and disconnected. It doesn't seem true to life. Don't boost it too much. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MAKING OF O'MALLEY. Star, Milton Sills. If your patrons like action pictures this should suit them. Special, no. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre, Edmonton, Altoona.

MARRIAGE CHEAT. (7 reels). Good picture just a little above program schedule. Rental too high for this small town. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Draw farmers and merchants, town about 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

PACE THAT THRILLS. One of the worst that I ever played. Absolutely rotten from the first to the last reel. Lots of walkouts on this show, and the few who did remain only stayed to "bawl" me out when they came out. If you run this one, advertise that it is rotten, and may be they will want to see how rotten it is. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

PLAYING WITH SOULS. (5,830). Star, J. Logan. This is an ordinary program picture that will get by as such and no doubt please your average movie-goer. Special, no. Appeal, 80 per cent. Admission 10-30, L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

POTASH AND PERLMUTTER. (7,700). All star cast. This picture should have been run first ahead of "Potash and Perlmutter in Hollywood" but was not, consequently people became confused, thinking they had seen it, and stayed away. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. 70 per cent. appeal. Draw all classes, town about 2,900. Admission 10-25—specials 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House, (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Between Ourselves

A get together place where we can talk things over

Every once in a while the boys here in the office look up from the work of getting out the trade paper you like to read, and then, with a shrug, return to their work.

All because the chap who gathers your dependable tips and gets them in shape for type, has gotten a letter from one of Our Gang, let out a yell of sheer delight and pretty near knocked over his desk getting up to show the letter around.

And that's not kidding either! You may get the idea that I'm a "nut"—all right. The real dope is that I'm so enthusiastic about the brotherhood spirit that I can't hold down the soft pedal when I get a fresh proof that you boys are interested enough to send in an extra word or two of friendly talk.

Such an occasion very lately made the office crowd think New Year hootch had got me—but it was a letter from our old dependable, John McGill.

But read it—and you'll see why I hurrahed!

VAN.

SCARLET WEST. (3,391). We did not consider this to be more than an ordinary Western. Did not draw or please any better than a Jones, Mix or Fred Thompson production. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre, (436 seats) Flandreau, South Dakota.

SHORE LEAVE. (6,856). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Dick very good in this one. Why don't he make more like it? Everybody raved over it. Tone, very good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 100 per cent. Draw rural and surrounding towns, town of 30,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre, (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

SHORE LEAVE. (6,856). Star, Richard Barthelmess. One of the new ones but cannot say that it's any better than the others and certainly not the picture "Classmates" was for box office value. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Ordinary appeal. Draw all classes, town about 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House, (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SINGLE WIVES. (7,308). Stars, Griffith-Sills. Our patrons did not care for this. With Lou Tellegen, Milton Sills, Henry B. Walthall and Kathleen Williams all in the cast it has the appearance of having been photographed in the Od Folks' Home. Yea, verily youth must be served. Tone, O. K. Sunday, yes. Special, never. Appeal, negative. Draw better class, town about 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre, (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SOUL FIRE. (8,262 ft). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A high class audience will enjoy this picture but the average audience will pan it. A very good picture with wonderful action but will only be appreciated by a very intelligent class of people. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TALKER. (7,801 ft.). Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Played this one on a Sunday and did very good business. My patrons seemed to be pleased. Very good entertainment. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Farming and dairy class town of 1,750. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

WHAT FOOLS MEN. (7,349 ft.) . Star, Lewis Stone. An excellent program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

WHY MEN LEAVE HOME. (8 reels). Star cast. A very good program picture. Some funny situations appeal in this picture, but had several say good picture. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Town and country class town of 700. Admission, 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250) seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

Fox

CONQUEROR, THE. (Star, William Farnum). While this picture is of ancient locale concerning the rise of Sam Huston's life from Indians to governor of Texas, it is a very true narrative of history. The events concerning same are well handled and the acting is well done. This picture contains heart interest, action, humor, and some comedy. The battle between settlers and raiders is big with a large body of Indians to the rescue of the settlers. This is a picture that should please where action is demanded. Good comments were heard from my patrons, although I had three days' rain. Tone, good. Special, no. Good appeal. Draw general class, town of about 1,200 to 2,200. Admission 15-25. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (257-700 seats), Union, Maine.

CURLY TOP. (5,82). Star, Shirley Mason. A picture that will hold your audience from beginning to end, although the end isn't very fitting. It is unbelievable, but the picture is worth running. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. 80 per cent. appeal. Draw factory class. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 ft.) Star cast. This is something different and will get you good crowds as the book has been widely read. However, I don't think it a special. Don't raise your admission on this. Tone, questionable. Sunday, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

DEADWOOD COACH. Star, Tom Mix. For your western fans and plenty of it. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre, (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 ft.). Star, Tom Mix. A story dealing with the olden times in England. A good picture but of course Tom Mix pulls it through, but he is better in his good westerns. Sunday and special, no. Eighty per cent. audience appeal. Town and country class. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphia Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 ft.). Star, Tom Mix. It might be a good picture but my audience seemed to smell it and thought it was a piece of chesee so they didn't come and I don't blame them. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, I shoul say not. Rotten appeal. Mixed class town of 2,800. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

EVERLASTING WHISPER. Star, Tom Mix. A very poor Tom Mix picture. Another one like this and he's done for. Give Mix something with lots of action. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

FIGHTING HEART. Star, George O'Brien. Three days to fair business. Some favorable and some unfavorable comments. Draw general class, town 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

GOLD HEELS. (6,020 feet). Star, Robert Agnew. An ordinary program picture; melodrama pure and simple; acting good, though there is not one punch in the race. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five percent. Mixed class town of 1.400. Admission, 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

GRAIL. Star, Dustin Farnum. To those exhibitors who are hard pressed for a Sunday show you can feel safe in booking this one. The moral tone is very strong throughout the story. Strong tone. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. Working class city of 200,000. Admission, 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

LUCKY HORSESHOE. (5,000 ft.). Star, Tom Mix. Not the type of story for Mix. Will disappoint many fans. Keep Tom in westerns where he belongs. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

TIMBER WOLF. (4,800 ft.). Star, Buck Jones. Played this on a Saturday and the verdict was "much enjoyed" one of my patrons said, and a rather severe critic, "Well, there was something doing every minute and it kept you interested," so we'll accept that version and say it was a good melodrama. Weather good, attendance, good. A program picture of thrills, fights, and comedy, that's enough. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 ft.). Star, Viola Dana. Very ordinary. Viola, you are slipping, patrons remarked. They did not like you in this one. The character man stole the picture away from the star. A. E. Andrews, Opera House, Emporium, Pennsylvania.

GO WEST. (6,256 ft.). Star, Buster Keaton. The press book says it's Keaton's best, but it isn't. No doubt this picture will make money for the exhibitor if bought right. Sunday, yes. Special, no Appeals to kids and men. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LITTLE ROBINSON CRUSOE. (6,216 ft.). Star, Jackie Coogan. Little Jackie Coogan in "Little Robinson Crusoe," well, you can guess the rest, it's some picture. The little comedian is cast on a cannibal infested island and becomes their war god and is instrumental in saving a white settlement from the man eaters. Although a serio-comic tale to give the kid a chance to show his cuteness it is quite a pretentious production and has many spectacular scenes that will bring excitement in your house. This is one of Jackie's best pictures and old and young like it and so will you. Draw from tourist town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498 ft.). Star, Ramon Novarro. Four days to big business. Advertise this one strong. It wants it. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

TOWER OF LIES. (6,809 ft.) Star, Lon Chaney. A film classic with Chaney doing wonderful work, he doesn't act, he lives the part and Miss Shearer is right with him as regards artistry. That's the picture, the audience end of it. But the well known box office is liable to take an awful flop. It's not an "Unholy Three" by any guess, the former has color and variety, this simply treats of a girl who went to the city and her return to find her father demented, rather a single track theme. It's wonderfully directed and acted and I admired it, just the same. It did not hold up after the matinee and my best advertisement. Weather fair, matinee fine. Night poor. A picture that's hard to classify, hence my comparison above with the "Unholy Three." Played it at regular prices and it wasn't worth a nickel more, according to my patrons. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

UNHOLY THREE. (7,000 ft.). Star, Lon Chaney. Only a fair picture. Much disappointed in it. May go over big in a large city but not a small town picture. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

WAY OF A GIRL. (6 reels). Star cast. Just fair, won't break any house record. Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

Hands Across the Continent

"Dear Van: In the daily rush, we are apt to neglect old friends.

"Not because we have forgotten them, but because our own problems temporarily set our daily actions, so that we concentrate on them until disposed of.

"Your Xmas greeting jerked me back to last April 18. That was the opening date of my new theatre, and in the midst of creating order out of chaos and the last-minute rush, I found time to open some of my mail and telegrams of congratulations.

"One of the first opened was from you, and I remember thinking that this great country of ours is not such a big place after all, when New York could say good luck to Port Orchard several thousand miles away, just at the very time we were getting ready to sell the first ticket in the new building.

"In a small town, exhibitors are as a rule, alone in their business. There may be several grocers, garages, drug-stores, etc. But only one exhibitor.

"When this exhibitor receives greetings from his trade journal he feels that he is not alone. That through his journal he is in touch with his brother exhibitors throughout the country. That his problems are being shared, studied out, overcome by helpful suggestions; he feels that he is a cog in a great machine which covers the earth, operated by men who take their work seriously; work which largely consists of building up a public desire for the best in entertainment.

"This makes one feel he is one of the "Gang," and as such he should realize his obligations to his brother exhibitors and never let an opportunity pass to give or receive a helpful suggestion.

"So here's starting the New Year with the resolution to do my small bit towards the whole.

"With my best personal regards, Van, and wishing you everything good starting right away and continuing for all time, sincerely yours—John McGill."

Paramount

COAST OF FOLLY. (7,000 ft.). Star, Gloria Swanson. Very good picture, if you buy it right; they soaked me on all the Swanson's so I didn't make any money on this one. Tone and appeal, fair. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farming and dairy class town of 1,750. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

EAST OF SUEZ. (6,821 ft.). Star, Pola Negri. A lot better than some of her others (although that isn't much of a compliment). Still I don't believe Pola will ever be the star they claim she is. She doesn't draw here at all. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GOLDEN BED. (8,584 feet). Star cast. This is an elaborate picture. Some objectionable parts in it, though. Pleased ninety per cent. of those who saw it. Tone and special, yes. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples' Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

GOLDEN PRINCESS. (8,564 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. This is a good western picture that will please all classes. I believe Paramount has made no mistake in starring Betty Bronson. She is very good. If they had given this a decent title it would have gone over well, but I had to explain to everyone that it was not a fairy story or a foreign picture. Tone and appeal, good. Special, no. Town and rural class. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

GOLDEN PRINCESS. (8,564 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. A Bert Harte story well produced and well liked by a fair crowd. The star does not fit this part as well as she would a more polished part. She just doesn't look like a rough mountain girl. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Universal class town of 3,200. Admission 10-20-30. Charles Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, South Dakota.

LIGHT OF WESTERN SKIES. Star cast. A very fine western drama. The story is excellent. The play is well acted and the fine cast do justice to the story. It was well enjoyed by the audience. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 ft.). Star, Richard Dix. All the good things you can say about a mighty fine picture can be said about this. Played this Thanksgiving and did well, had a great comedy program with it. Weather, fine. Attendance, splendid. While this is not big enough to merit special classification, it will please a lot more than some of these alleged superplays. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 feet). Star, Ray Griffith. Truly a splendid picture. Buy, boost and profit by it. Fair weather; fine attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

NOT SO LONG AGO. (6,943 feet). Star, Bronson. Just fair. Draw general class. Admisison 10-25 and 15-35. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF. Star, Thomas Meighan. Again Thomas Meighan falls flat. I have not made my expenses on any of his pictures in the last two years. He is positively a dead issue with me and I have featured this faded luminary for the last time. As a box office magnet he is everything an actor should not be. His pictures neither draw nor please those who happen to drop in. Special, no. Appeal, fifty per cent. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre, Hazard, Kentucky.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Book this picture on date when the school superintendent will bring the children over to a matinee. Make him a special rate. Will help your evening show. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Audience appeal, one hundred per cent. for women and children, for men forty. Rural class town of 700. Admission 10-25. W. C. Whiting, Opera House (250 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621). One of those pictures which may go over and may not. Depends on the atmosphere. Tone, good enough. No as special and for Sunday. Appeal 60 per cent. Draw farmers and small town oil field, town about 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

STAGE STRUCK. (6,691 ft.). Star, Gloria Swanson. It's about time they are putting Miss Swanson in a good attraction. This is without a doubt her best in the 1925-1926 group. Title hurt business here. Natural color scenes beautiful. Print good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Fair appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

STAGE STRUCK. (6,691 ft.). Star, Gloria Swanson. This star fails to draw any more. Second night people stayed away. No box office value. Elaborate costumes and some colored scenes very beautiful but people do not care for Swanson any more. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. A picture that will draw all classes of patrons possibly make a few new ones for you. Special, decidedly. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre (500 seats), Edmonton, Altoona, Canada.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Yes, it is big! A marvelous production, which for me in my town had the following traits:

MARCELINE DAY

The "Necia" in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Barrier" is a charming young girl, and will be seen in important roles often hereafter. Norman Kerry has the leading role in this George Hill production. She is one of the "Baby Stars" of 1926.

First, my admission was 25 and 50 cents and as money is not hanging on street corners and lamp posts kept attendance somewhat in small percentage from what I had estimated, partly due to the fact that it was shown not far distant as first run in this territory, and many went to see it, believing it would not be seen in my town, so I did not get them for a second time. Second, weather conditions were awful for the entire run. Third, it drew people who were almost strangers in my house. Most of my regular patrons stayed away. Misled by my advertising, but believe if I had only used regular advertising, I would have done as well under the circumstances. Tone and appeal good. Special, yes. Draw general class, town of about 1,200 to 2,200. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Theatre (257-700 seats), Union, Maine.

THAT ROYLE GIRL. Star, Carol Demster. Good underworld picture but not the thing for small town showing. I ran it before it had been shown in the large towns around here and was forced to charge. Draw small town and farmers, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 25-50. H. D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats) Galt, California.

TROUBLE WITH WIVES. (6,498 ft.). Star, Florence Vidor. Domestic comedy drama with a simple theme and very little of that. Some liked it and others said it was downright silly. Personally, we haven't anything to say as we are biding our time until this edition of Paramount is run out. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

WILD HORSE MESA. Star, Jack Holt. Poorest Zane Grey Paramount have produced. Nothing to this one and what a price! More to one reel of "Black Cyclone" than all eight of this one. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, just fair. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

WILD, WILD SUSAN. (8,774 feet.) Star, Bebe Daniels. Good program picture. Plenty of thrills, full of pep. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WILD, WILD SUSAN. Star, Bebe Daniels. Bebe seems to be hitting her stride again. This is the best from her for some time. The is great in these comedy roles. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

Pathe

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,038 ft.). Star, Rex, the horse. Sweet Mama, but this is a pip. Drags them all in, old and young, big and little, and then let's them go out feeling like they had seen one hour and thirty minutes of one hundred percent entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Lots of appeal. Small town class of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FRESHMAN. (6,683 ft.). Star, Harold Lloyd. Oh, boy, what a scream; I can't see when Lloyd can make them any funnier; run it by all means, but run it now. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245). This picture lived up to all the good reports I read. Very satisfactory in every way. C. E. Holt, Legion Theatre, Elmwood, Wisconsin.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245). Very good. About same box office receipts as Harold Lloyd in his features. N. J. Halpin, De Milo Theatre, Covington, Kentucky.

CHARLEY'S AUNT. (7,245). Star, Sydney Chaplin. This is the stuff, boys, to offset the rotten sex pictures that kill our business and make it impossible to write out big guarantees on super-specials. If you haven't run this yet, get it and boost it to the top notch. Prints still good. Tone, good. Yes for Sunday and special. Good appeal. Draw all classes, town less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

FRIENDLY ENEMIES. Stars, Weber and Fields. Good show that did no business. Stars too old, I guess. "It's got to be jazz" nowadays. I guess is right. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Good appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

HELL'S HIGHROAD. (6,064 ft.). Star, Leatrice Joy. A theme that sure has been done over and over again. Not a bad offering, it has some of the DeMille lavish touches and the picture tried hard, but just missed. However, I am not condemning the film, its value as a program picture, but when eloquent salesmen talk special, watch out. Weather, good. Attendance, good. A good program photoplay, well acted, but handicapped by the familiarity of the story, but in spots it has class. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,050 ft.). Star, Jacqueline Logan. A very good picture dealing with the pleasure made youth of today and its results. My people thought it was fine. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety percent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

SEVEN DAYS. Star, Lillian Rich. Not in same league with "Charley's Aunt," but nevertheless a pretty good laughing picture. You can do business on this, you have plenty of talking points, but don't get loose with your language, as a program picture you will get by and please the folks at advanced prices; that's another story. Weather fair, attendance good. Tourists and health seekers. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

HOME MAKER. Star, Alice Joyce. Here is another of Uncle Carl's White List pictures, that are go-getters. It will appeal nearly one hundred percent to any audience, and O Boy! it sure makes you feel good when they hunt you up and tell you how good it is. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Small class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 ft.) Star, Lon Chaney. This picture is a little old but it certainly is a knockout for entertainment and the box office. If you haven't run this don't pass it up. It will make you money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety-five percent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

LET 'ER BUCK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Marion Nixon, G. Raymond Nye, Charles K. French in a story that would be just as good under the Educational trade mark with Harry Langdon taking Hoot Gibson's place. Title writer is a characteristic Universal product. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, seventy-five percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Every report you send on a picture you have played, is a real help to many exhibitors.

No matter how big or how small your theatre may be, remember it is one of the contact points between the production and the public—and your audience, a thousand or only ninety people, whichever it may have been, reacted for or against the entertainment value of the picture.

Tell your fellow exhibitors about it. These dependable tips are the best help any exhibitor can give—or get.

USE THE BLANK NOW!

MAN IN BLUE. (5,629 ft.). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good program picture. Special, no. A. Entwisle, Dreamland Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta.

OH, DOCTOR. (6,507 ft.). Star, Reginald Denny. This picture has been tooted very highly by its producers but if this is a comedy knockout I sure don't want any more of them. Didn't please here. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, seventy-five percent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

PHANTOM OF THE OPERA. (8,404 ft.). Star, Lon Chaney. While I just about broke even on this, as the picture did not draw for me, still it is a one hundred percent picture, and I am glad that I ran it. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SPOOK RANCH. Star, Hoot Gibson. Hardly up to Hoot's standard. However, it will please where he is a favorite. It has good action and comedy but it drags terribly in spots. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

WHERE WAS I? Star, Reginald Denny. If you have this coming step on the gas, because it is a humdinger. Cover the town like a circus and then get out of the way to keep from getting hurt in the scramble for seats, for Reginald Denny's day is here. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Independents

COLD FURY. (Aywon). Star, Ora Carewe. Here is a western drama that is different from the rest. Many tense moments throughout the play. Plenty of action. The cast is a very good one and play their parts excellently. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

CRACKERJACK. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. About the best Johnny has ever made. Funny isn't the word for it, it's great. I saw it twice and enjoyed it more the second time. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

GALLOPING JINX. (State Right). .Star, Buddy Roosevelt. Another good one, with a different story. Keep it up, Buddy, and you will be a comer for us yet. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

HIS OWN LAW. (State Right). Star, Lew Meehan. Another good western from the independent field; however, Wesley Barry walks off with the picture, for he sure is good. Tone and appeal. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre, (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (Columbia). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A good thriller. If your audience likes railroad stories give them this one and it will please them. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut.

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. (Principal Pictures). Star, Pat O'Malley. A Harold Bell Wright story that will surely draw them in if you will let them know that it is coming, but what makes us hot under the collar is for an exchange to take our money and palm off a bum print on us, with about fifty feet gone off of each reel. This is a good picture, what we have seen of it; wish that we could have seen it all. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Small town class town of 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TAINTED MONEY. (Perfection). Star, William Fairbanks. Not as bad a show as it could have been. Some scenes are well done and the story is not a cut and dried lumber camp affair. Will pass with an audience that isn't too discriminating. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty percent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Pathe and Mack Sennett Sign Contract Involving Big Two-Reel Comedy Schedule

A MEMORABLE step in the production and distribution of "greater and better short-feature comedies" was taken this week in the closing of an important contract between Pathe Exchange, Inc., and the Mack Sennett Studios. Involving two outstanding factors in the short-comedy field in the person of Mack Sennett, the veteran comedy producer, and Pathe, the leading short-feature distributor of the industry, the new contract holds a special significance for the entire trade, affecting, as it will, the future programs of thousands of theatres throughout the country.

ELMER R. PEARSON
Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

The contract just consummated provides for the production and release of 52 two-reel comedies per year over a period of several years. This schedule calls for substantial increases in production costs to assure the highest-calibre talent and material available in the way of stories, direction, cast and production effects. The plans under way promise to transcend all previous efforts to provide exhibitors with two-reel comedies of quality entertainment and definite box-office power.

In his statement announcing the new contract, Elmer R. Pearson, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., strikes the keynote of Pathe's campaign to establish its short-comedy output on a plane of quality with the finest feature productions on the screen, as instanced by its recent contract with the Hal Roach and the deal just closed with Mack Sennett.

"The production cost under the new contract is increased by from 25 per cent. to 50 per cent. over our previous arrangement," states Mr. Pearson in commenting on the new Mack Sennett contract. "The entire transaction involves several hundred productions and several millions of dollars.

"It has been the aim of Pathe and Mack Sennett to produce comedies that for sheer excellence of entertainment and box-office drawing power will rival that of the best feature-length pictures on any exhibitor's program. While, heretofore, rental grosses have not permitted all the production latitude the new arrangement gives the producer ample elbow room on this score, and if the plans now in hand are carried out a real treat is in store for the Pathe customers and motion picture fans all over the world."

The return of Ben Turpin in a series of two-reelers is a highlight of the announcement just released, as is also the inauguration of a series of domestic comedies depicting the diverting mishaps of the "Smith Family," with Raymond McKee and Ruth Hiatt as Mr. and Mrs. Smith. Another important point is the listing of several Harry Langdon comedy specials which promise to be box-office attractions of the highest type.

Five series of two-reel comedies as well as the Harry Langdon specials are listed under the terms of the new agreement which becomes effective at once. In addition to the Turpin and Smith Family series referred to above, the Alice Day and Ralph Graves starring series as well as the Mack Sennett brand of two-reelers will be continued.

The inimitable Ben Turpin will be seen again in the type of starring vehicles which have endeared him to the movie-goers of the world. Those who recall Turpin's work in such Pathe funfilms as "Three Foolish Weeks," "The Reel Virginian," "Romeo and Juliet" and "Yukon Jake" know what is in store for those who see the new Turpin comedies.

Alice Day, the vivacious young star of the series bearing her name, has won a permanent place in the hearts of the public. She is the first girl to be starred by Mack Sennett since the days of Mabel Normand, which bespeaks her ability as a comedienne. Some of her recent two-reel comedies are "Tea for Two," "Hotsy Totsy," "Hot Cakes for Two," and "The Soapsuds Lady." As in the past, she will be supported by such capable players as Danny O'Shea, Ruth Taylor, Eddie Quillan, and Joseph Young. Alice Day is certainly destined to be one of the biggest of screen stars.

Domestic comedies always appeal to audiences. It was in this type of vehicle that the late Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew attained world-wide fame and provoked the laughter of millions. The new Mack Sennett series is of course played in much broader vein than the Drew comedies but the domestic element predominates in the plots. Ruth Hiatt and Raymond McKee, who appear as the Smiths, are one of the best comedy teams ever cast in a family spat. Mary Ann Jackson, the little freckled-face youngster who always lures a smile and a laugh, plays the Smith baby, and "Cap," grandson of the noted canine actor "Teddy," also plays an important part in the comedy proceedings.

LIST TO THE GLADSOME NEWS! Ben Turpin is coming back in two-reel comedies! Harry Langdon will be seen in some screamingly funny stuff. Beautiful Alice Day, heading her own unit, will "carry on," and Ralph Graves (right) will go right on being funny for Mr. Sennett.

"Laugh Month" Promises to Set High Sales Record on Fox Film Corporation Comedies

WITH National Laugh Month well on its way and an unusually good list of comedies to offer exhibitors, Fox Films seems likely to establish a new sales record in January for laughing pictures.

Scheduled for release during the last half of the month are "A Flaming Affair," an Imperial, in which Sid Smith has the role of a street car conductor with a great longing to be a hero, and "The Feud," one of the Van Bibber series.

In "The Feud," Earle Fox, as Van, buys an old southern mansion at auction without realizing it until informed that he is the successful bidder. He has merely been telling a deaf native the price of his Rolls-Royce and the auctioneer, overhearing the amount mentioned, construes it as a bid on the property. This is only one of many big laughs in the picture and New York reviewers declare the film a genuine wow at the preview.

According to reports received from Fox branches throughout the United States, hundreds of exhibitors have adopted the all-comedy program suggested by the Fox short subjects sales department and the innovation has proved an exceedingly popular one with their patrons. Many showmen who were frankly dubious when an all-comedy program was proposed to them have satisfied themselves that it really "works" and are planning to make it a regular feature in their theatres henceforth.

The first of the East Side, West Side series, released November 15, appears to have scored heavily, and George Harris as the enterprising Jewish boy with an Irish sweetheart, Barbara Luddy, is receiving high praise from film reviewers throughout the country. The second of this series is "The Fighting Tailor" which will be released January 1. This film also was declared a genuine knockout by reviewers and advices from the Fox West Coast Studios assert those to follow will be even funnier.

George E. Marshall, comedy supervisor, is assisted by one of the biggest and best laugh-making crews ever assembled, including an even dozen directors and a young army of gag-men.

In addition to the two-reelers, three feature-length comedies will be ready for showing the last week in January. "The First Year," one of the John Golden adaptations, with Matt Moore, Kathryn Perry, J. Farrell MacDonald and Margaret Livingston, will be released January 24. "A Trip to Chinatown" and "The Cowboy and the Countess" are scheduled for first showings on January 31. In the latter picture Buck Jones again demonstrates that he can act as well as ride.

Pathe and Mack Sennett Sign Contract

The first Smith Family comedies listed are titled "Smith's Baby," "Smith's Vacation," and "Smith's Landlord."

Ralph Graves with his amusing characterization of a bashful youth has proved a consistent laugh-maker. Graves has "rung the bell" in "Wide Open Faces," "The Window Tell Dad.' The casts of the new Graves' Dummy," "Take Your Time" and "Don't Tell Dad." The casts of the new Graves films will include such favorites as Thelma Parr, Eugenia Gilbert, Marvin Lobach and William McCall.

The Mack Sennett brand comedies are welcome on every program. Such postive laugh-riots as "The Gosh Darn Mortgage" and "Whispering Whiskers" have established this brand as a favorite with many fans.. Casts of this series will include Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde, Madeline Hurlock, Eugenia Gilbert, Kewpie Morgan, Ruth Taylor and other members of the stock company. The renowned Mack Sennett Bathing Girls also will adorn the cast of these funfilms.

Harry Langdon is to be seen in six special comedy productions. Three of these are yet to be scheduled and three are already dated for release. "Lucky Stars," a two-reeler released a short while ago played two weeks on Broadway at the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres, respectively, and followed with bookings over the entire Greater New York theatres of the Loew Circuit. "There He Goes," a three reeler is the current release. "Saturday Afternoon," also a three-reeler, will be released at the end of January and is sure to add a highlight to the events of "Laugh Month."

Forthcoming "Langdons" are notable in their entertainment quality. These are "Junk Man," a two-reel comedy the plot of which may be guessed from the title and which sounds as if it might fit Langdon like the proverbial glove; "The King" (tentative title) a four-reel picture and "His First Flame," the comedian's initial five-reel comedy production. Concerning "His First Flame," Mr. Sennett says this is probably the best feature comedy ever made on his lot, and that is going some.

LOTS OF GOOD THINGS IN STORJ FOR YOU! Here are some of the Mack Sennett fun-makers. Right to left are: Raymond McKee, Madeline Hurlock, Thelma Parr, Ruth Hiatt and Billy Bevan.

Educational's Novel Color Film; Hope Hampton in Fashion Display

BY ARRANGEMENT with McCall Colour Fashion News, Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., will soon offer two single reel subjects showing in their natural colors advance spring and summer fashions approved by the greatest designers of Paris and displaye dby Hope Hampton. Prints of the first of these fashion news releases, titled "Parisian Modes in Colour," will be in all Educational Exchanges early in January. Release of the second subject—"Colourful Fashions from Paris"—will follow in a few weeks.

According to the announcement from Educational's Home Office, these pictures will display authentic styles contributed by such famous couturiers as Poiret, Lanvin, Drecoll, Patou and many others of equal prominence and arranged for screen display with the cooperation of the great McCall staff of fashion experts so far in advance that exhibitors will be able to show them before these spring styles are advertised in the great stores.

These two short features have been done entirely in the all-color Kodachrome photographic process, which succeeds in showing off the colorful garments to quite as much advantage as if the actual styles were shown. They are directed by Henri Diamant Berger.

Exhibitors showing these short features will have secured for their patrons the "last word" in fashion news and a style "beat" of tremendous importance. Newspapers, fashion magazines and the great department stores cannot display these new styles as early as it will be possible for exhibitors to show them on the screen. Every theatre patron will be intensely interested in viewing this showing of ultra-advance styles.

Through an arrangement with the great McCall Pattern publishing house there has been provided a definite tie-up, making it possible for the exhibitor to secure the cooperation of all local pattern agencies whereever the subjects are shown. Every Educational Exchange has a list of pattern dealers which will be accessible to all exhibitors booking the film.

It offers exhibitors an exceptional opportunity to link up their showing of the fashion reel with the customary style of opening festivities usually engaged in by all Ready-to-Wear merchants at the beginning of the new style season and at a time when all the newspapers are full of fashion "ads" and news.

"Parisian Modes in Colour" will mark Miss Hampton's second appearance on the Educational Pictures' program this season, this famous star having appeared in "The Marionettes," which has created such favorable comment from exhibitors and critics in the few weeks since it was released.

"What's the World Coming To?"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS Hal Roach-Clyde Cook comedy deals with that imaginary time when woman will have usurped man's place in the world and will have become the more influential sex. The supposed events of a hundred years from now are treated in a highly fantastic and farcical vein and should keep audiences in roars of merriment. Men dress like women and have their sweet feminine ways, while women wear breeches and boyish bobs and stalk the screen in manly fashion. Cook is married to a manly young beauty who rules him with an iron fist when not out sporting with other blushing men. Domestic quarrels finally center around the indignant appearance of father-in-law, with father-in-law more readily getting his just deserts than any mother-in-law nowadays. Katherine Grant is excellent as the manly woman. Others having good parts are Martha Sleeper, Laura De Cardi and Jimmie Finlayson. Richard Wallace directed.—Sumner Smith.

"The Whirlpool of Europe"

(Fox—Variety—756 Feet)

ADDITIONAL interest is attached to this issue of Fox varieties because it deals with that portion of Europe in which the spark was ignited that caused the world war and brings out the fact that this section now included in the new Jugo-Slavia has since the earliest times been the scene of conflict between opposing forces. There is a view of the street corner on which Archduke Ferdinand of Austria was assassinated, this event precipitating the great conflict. The camera also takes us through the rugged and beautiful section of Dalmatia pointing out fortresses and historical spots where Turks battled with Venetians and where the Roman Emperor Diocletian lived. There are a number of scenes of striking photographic beauty and the reel as a whole should prove entertaining as well as instructive.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hot Cakes For Two"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

ALICE DAY again shows to advantage in this Mack Sennett subject, with excellent support by George A. Beranger, Marvin Lobach and Joseph Young. Alf Goulding directed. Alice is a girl of the corn fields who, in the big city with the intention of being a movie actress, flips corn cakes in a restaurant. A persistent admirer is supplanted in her affections by a movie sheik. He stages a movie rescue of a drowning girl, so Alice, posing as an heiress, gives him a chance to rescue her too. Later he discovers her real identity but true love wins. The close of the picture is especially effective, with a steam shovel aiding the lovers to escape interference. The moral of the picture ought to be caught by movie-struck girls everywhere—it is, you haven't got a ghost of a show in Hollywood. The picture itself is good fun, but we like Alice Day so well that we feel she could be given a better subject.—Sumner Smith.

"The Fighting Tailor"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

THIS issue of Fox Imperial Comedies is of a different type from the usual run issued under this brand name. The action concerns a young Hebrew lad, son of a tailor, who favored by Fate in a fight with a gang of toughs so impresses his Irish sweetheart that he is signed for a ring fight with the champion. He takes an unmerciful drubbing but is elated as his share of the purse is $600, which immediately causes his father to withdraw his objection to "box-fighting." Georgie Harris who did good work in some of the O. Henry stories was a good selection for the Jewish lad and is thoroughly amusing in this character. There are a lot of humorous incidents including the fight itself and some rough and tumble stuff in the gymnasium and it is above the average as a laughmaker.—C. S. Sewell.

"Searchlights"

(Red Seal—Instructive—One Reel)

WITH this issue, Red Seal inaugurates a new series called "Searchlights" made by Urban-Kineto Corp. The first section deals with sound waves showing by various experiments that they are the result of vibrations, as for instance the flickering of a candle in response to a musical note. An interesting experiment shows the odd designs assumed by sand on a metal plate when a violin bow is rubbed across the edge. Other experiments show effect of a violin bow on glass and the ever-different designs traced by the swing of a vibrating body. The second section deals with rare white animals, albinos as they are known, and includes weasels, ferrets, dear, rattle snakes, tortoises and their near relatives in this class, the blue fish-frogs. This reel is entertaining and instructive.—C. S. Sewell.

"Ko-Ko Song Car-Tune"

(Red Seal—Song Film—One Reel)

KO-KO, Max Fleischer's famous cartoon clown has his "Kartoon Kwartette" rendering the familiar old song of a past generation "Ta-Ra-Ra Boom Der E" in issue E of this series. As usual the words are thrown on the screen with a marker jumping from one to the other keeping time with the music. When the chorus is reached this marker is replaced by a ballet girl who dances from one word to the other and does stunts.—C. S. Sewell.

"Reelview"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

THIS is the first issue of a new series offered by Red Seal, made by Urban-Kineto Corporation. There are two sections, the first dealing with pottery making in the Orient. There are views of the city of Tunis showing the pottery dealers, this being one of the principal as well as one of the oldest occupations of the country. Other scenes show the making of different kinds of pottery, the men doing the light and skilled work and the boys the more strenuous work of mixing and kneading the clay. The second section deals with nature in its less peaceful moods, with scenes of storms, ships covered with ice, angry waves, effect of wind storms, and the havoc caused by floods.—C. S. Sewell.

"Film Facts"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

HAY-MAKING and silkworms furnish the two subjects in issue 1 of Film Facts. The evolution of the industry of cutting and harvesting hay from the primitive to the modern tractor-drawn combination harvester and loader. Especially interesting are the scenes showing the breeding of millions of silkworms and their care as well as the manner in which the silk is unwound from the cocoon. This should prove especially interesting to the female contingent as should the course of the silk which they admire so much. An instructive and entertaining number of this series issued by Red Seal.—C. S. Sewell.

"Hair Cartoon"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

HERE is another lot of clever cartoons drawn by Marcus of the New York Times. By clever manipulation of the hair and mustaches Snub Pollard's picture is changed into Jack Holt and Charles Chaplin into Rudolph Valentino. Other faces are manipulated until they appear as Charles Murray, Mabel Normand, Irvin Cobb and Harold Lloyd. It will afford amusement for the average patron and furnish added zest in enabling them to guess who each drawing will be.—C. S. Sewell.

Pathe Review No. 3

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

THIS features another installment of a series showing Knud Rasmussen driving his dog teams across Arctic spaces to the last outpost of civilization, before penetrating the real terrors of those bleak regions. "Makers of Men" shows West Point preparing America's military manhood for perilous days, and "The Sea Rover" is a study of seagulls in Pathecolor.—Sumner Smith.

"Lighter Than Air"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

IN this Cartoonist Paul Terry has his animals and farmer riding high in the air on soap bubbles. But pride always comes before a fall and they flop to earth when envious mice shoot holes through the bubbles.—Sumner Smith.

THE ONLY TEARS YOU'LL SHED will be happy tears when you see Alberta Vaughn and her playboys in "A Snitch in Time," the eleventh release in the "Adventures of Mazie," an F. B. O. contribution to "Laugh Month."

International and Hearst Newspapers Boost "Laugh Month" Extensively

A SPECIAL Laugh Month section in International Newsreel No. 1, the current issue, and a full page layout now being sent out to newspapers all over the country by the King Feature Syndicate, mark two important steps during the past week in the drive for National Laugh Month.

The newsreel section included a peek behind the scenes, showing several popular newspaper cartoonists at work. Included in the subject are Billy De Beck, creator of Barney Google, and George McManus, the pen-daddy of Mr. Jiggs. The International Newsreel cameraman caught McManus drawing some special cartoon adventures of Mr. Jiggs tied up with Laugh Month. Mal St. Clair and Adolphe Menjou were present during the taking of these pictures. These two stars are ardent supporters of the Laugh Month idea and are shown watching and applauding the work of the cartoonists in furthering the Laugh Month propaganda.

The Laugh Month page being sent out by the King Feature Syndicate is a layout showing the leading comic cartoonists of that syndicate at work drawing cartoons of their famous proteges. Included in the page are Harry Herschfield, with his great character, Abie the Agent; Cliff Sterrett, with Pa Perkins; Jack Lait with Gus the Bus Boy; Russ Westover, with Tillie the Toiler; Billy De Beck with Barney Google and Sparkplug, and George McManus, with Mr. Jiggs.

The page is headed "Laugh and the World Laugh With You," one of the Laugh Month slogans. Each sub-caption on the page refers to Laugh Month.

This great Laugh Month layout also includes two Laugh Month poems by William F. Kirk. The poems are as follows:

IT IS TO LAUGH

By William F. Kirk

Loads of chuckles let us carry through the month of January.

And wherever we may tarry let us tarry with a smile!

What may come in the Hereafter may not move our souls to laughter

But the present can be pleasant and decidedly worth while!

And your burdens will be lighter, when you have to stad the gaff,

If you keep right on agrinning whether losing out or winning—

So with Laugh Month just beginning, let us laugh, laugh, laugh!

LAUGH MONTH

By William F. Kirk.

There are many things to growl at, many things to rave and howl at,

Things we feel we have to scowl at in our stern, judicial way;

But I want to tell you, sonny, that it's more fun being funny

And you make more friends and money if you stop at times to play.

When a little smile comes creeping, longing for your care and keeping,

Bear in mind there's time for sleeping when they write your epitaph!

Just remember that the New Year is a sort of Up-to-You-Year!

It can never be a blue year if we laugh, laugh, laugh!

"Bill," Picture Version of Anatole France's Masterpiece, Plays Revivals in Big Houses

"Bill," the great picture version of Anatole France's masterpiece, "The Majesty of the Law," portrayed by Maurice de Feraudy, one of the best known of the French character actors, has been booked again by some of the biggest "first-run" theatres in the country which report good business on this revival.

John P. Goring, one of the best known showmen on the Pacific Coast, wired to Edward Miles Fadman, president of Red Seal Pictures, distributors of "Bill," that it greatly pleased and caused more favorable comment than any other short subject ever shown here." Also, "that newspaper reviewers and directors are coming to see it."

Many personal letters were received by Fadman from stars and directors, praising him for his understanding and courage in releasing such a perfect work of screen art, ranking well with "Thé Last Laugh." "Bill," being released in three reels only, makes no pretentions of being a "full" program picture and rightfully comes under the "short subject" category.

Last Sunday the International Film Arts Guild which revives noteworthy productions each week, ran "Bill" at the Central Theatre on Broadway and report that the audiences, after each showing, proved their appreciation by applauding.

Governor Ferguson Proclaims January Laugh Month in Texas

THE biggest local stunt so far engineered in connection with Laugh Month—and one of the greatest pieces of exploitation work ever put over by motion picture men—has been engineered in Texas by the Laugh Month Committee of Dallas exchange men and the Texas Motion Picture Theatre Owners whose combined efforts brought about the issuance of a governor's proclamation declaring January Laugh Month in the State of Texas.

On Thursday, December 31, Governor Miriam A. ("Ma") Ferguson, in the presence of the Dallas Laugh Month Committee and Col. H. A. Cole, President of the Texas M. P. T. O., signed the proclamation:

Realizing that the year of 1925 brought prosperity to many, though adversity to some; and

Believing that a cheerful, happy outlook is the best antidote for gloom, as well as the greatest assurance of future well being; and with the most heartfelt conviction that "It is better to laugh than to mourn," and that "we must laugh to live"—

I HEREBY PROCLAIM the month of January, 1926, as for the State of Texas; and I recommend to the people of this great and glorious commonwealth that they start the year with happy laughter and good cheer, with the assurance of a

LAUGH MONTH

HAPPY AND PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR

(signed) Miriam A. Ferguson,
Governor of Texas

Governor Ferguson's proclamation resulted in front page publicity for Laugh Month in practically all the newspapers of Texas, giving a most auspicious start to the celebration of Laugh Month in that State. Motion picture and still photographs of the signing of the proclamation were made, and while the newspapers were printing the still pictures, all four news reels were showing the ceremony in the theatres throughout the State.

The Dallas Laugh Month Committee which put over this great piece of exploitation work is comprised of F. A. Tomes, manager of the Educational Exchange; Oscar A. Morgan, Pathe Exchange; P. K. Johnston, Fox Exchange, and R. C. McIlheran, Universal Exchange. This committee was formed as soon as plans for National Laugh Month were announced and promptly met with Col. Cole, head of the Texas exhibitors, to map out the Texas campaign. With their hearts and souls sincerely in the work and with the finest spirit of co-operation at all times, the Laugh Month Committee and the exhibitors' organization secured the complete co-operation of the executive office at Austin. The Laugh Month Committee and Col. Cole went to Austin on December 31 accompanied by camera men and Associated Press representatives and within an hour after the proclamation was signed the Austin Statesman announced it in a big two-column box story on page one.

Copies of the Governor's proclamation have been sent to all exhibitors in Texas for lobby display use and are now being prominently displayed in connection with the special Laugh Month accessories.

Alabaman Tries Laugh Insurance

When the Pathe-Harold Lloyd feature "The Freshman" played the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., the management of the theatre ran in an advertisement a "liability policy" for his patrons, which insured them against fractured ribs, broken jaws and tired bodies.

The advertisement was headed "It's so funny, we had to do this" and goes on to say:

"This latest Harold Lloyd mirthquake is so hilariously funny that we thought it best, for the protection of our patrons, to take out a policy against broken ribs and other accidents from too much laughter. You'll see when you see the picture."

An exact copy of a liability policy was published, numbered, and made out for $10 payable by the Georgia Casualty Company.

Educational Single Reel Gem Shown at Special Sunday Revival

Coupled with revivals of worth while features by the International Film Arts Guild, Inc., New York City, at the Sunday programs they are presenting at the Central Theatre, usually there is included on the same program a short feature of outstanding merit. On Sunday, December 27, the short feature distinguished in this manner was the Educational single reel Special "The Enchanted City," shown with Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," the John Barrymore feature.

Said to have scored a "knockout" wherever shown, this short feature released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., was produced by Warren A. Newcombe, an artist who received his inspiration through List's "Dream of Love." It represents a highly idealistic version of a young man's search for lost love and happiness. The boy tells the girl that in his dreams he saw a spiritual life with his sweatheart acting as his guide. Sometimes he loses her, and then his craft speeds on towards the falls of oblivion. At the climax he seems doomed utterly, but again finds faith in his love, and the picture concludes with the couple promising always to be united in their dreams as well as when awake.

"The Enchanted City" is a beautiful subject and any exhibitor who is desirous of showing an unusual and remarkable short film will find this a novelty of unusual distinction that will appeal to patronage capable of appreciating a really artistic presentation.

Woodhull Tells Radio-Picture Fans About the Serious Side of Furnishing Comedy in Address on "Laugh Month"

THE furnishing of laughs through selection of good comedies and proper balancing of his program, is one of the exhibitor's biggest concerns today; and comedy is fast coming to a position of predominance on the screen—R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, said so in a fifteen minute talk to a vast audience of radio and picture fans listening in to the program broadcast from the Radio Corporation of America circuit of stations Wednesday afternoon, January 6. "Pete" talked from station WJZ in New York.

"The Art of Making You Laugh," was the subject of Mr. Woodhull's talk, in which he told the fans a little of the serious side of comedy-making and explained why he was so heartily in favor of the celebration of "Laugh Month" in January.

I trust that the folks listening in will pardon me for a moment while I pay my respects to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western Pennsylvania, who are meeting today at Pittsburgh. I say "pay my respects" because it is with the highest regard that I always think of the personnel of that organization. Knowing their sincerity of purpose and the honest endeavor they make to serve their patrons, I trust that their deliberations at the present time will be productive of unlimited good to the motion picture theatre-going public of that vicinity.

Explains Industrial Units

At the outset permit me to explain for the benefit of those not thoroughly conversant with out industry, that it is made of three distinct departments; namely, the producer, the distributor, and the exhibitor. In other lines, these departments parallel the producer, the jobber and the retailer. I am speaking for the latter unit—the retailer—or perhaps, as you know him, the motion picture theatre owner, who retails to you, the public, the product or picture produced and distributed by the first two units.

It is my thought that a theatre just as much as any other institution has its own important part to play in the rendition of community service, and is one of the five great educators, namely, the pulpit, the press, the school, the radio, and the screen.

The latter is an universal language. No printed word or wonderful oratory can be understood in every language and in every country, but a picture depicting mother-love, comedy, drama, or any other situation, registers with all the people throughout the universe.

All this is merely a foreword to the message it is my pleasure to convey to you today.

Why "Laugh Month"

The month of January has been dedicated to laughter by an association of gentlemen in our industry who devote their efforts to the production of the shorter subjects of the motion picture programs; and may I say, speaking for the theatre owners, that the time has arrived when it has become necessary for us to pay quite as much attention in the planning of our entertainments to these most important featurettes as to the longer features, and I am quite sure if you will ask the theatre owner or manager in your community, he will tell you that one of his greatest worries is the art of making you laugh. It is a very serious matter, and while January is being celebrated as "Laugh Month," and the theatre owners all over the country are making a special effort to keep the brighter side of life foremost, one of the principal reasons that I so heartily welcome this promotion of laughter is because of the fact that it is directing the attention of the movie fan quite seriously to the matter of comedy.

R. F. WOODHULL

If there is any group of workers in motion pictures who give much to picture lovers and I am afraid receive little in the way of recognition, it is the splendid group of fine men and women who are devoting their lives to making you happier through laughter.

You may not have realized it before, but comedy is an absolute essential to a well-rounded bill of entertainment, and yet too often you have perhaps accepted it as a matter of course, and when the laughs are over, and you have been one of the many to write admiring letters to the stars, you have perhaps overlooked forwarding a little word of encouragement to the comedy artists who, for a few moments, at least, lifted the weight of worry and tears, of which our average lives are all too full, and made these lives happier with a laugh.

It is perhaps due to the fact that you have neglected to tell your local theatre manager how much you enjoyed the short subjects that he has in many cases devoted his entire time to the selection of his feature, and purchased his short subjects with the idea of their being fillers instead of featurettes.

Putting it to Test

The best test of the importance of comedy, novelty or news reels is for you to attend a theatre, if possible, where the entire evening is devoted to showing of a long dramatic feature.

Fortunately, all of this is being changed, and "Laugh Month" is the best evidence of the new position of importance which the comedies and their makers are taking to the march of screen progress.

After all, in this regard the screen is just following the course of the stage, only doing it very much more rapidly. Early stage productions were tragedies. All productions in the famous old Greek amphitheatres were tragic productions, the majority of them most gruesome. Then, in later centuries, we began to have drama, then the comedy drama, and so on, until today in America, the most successful of all stage productions are in the comedy class, either musical comedies or some other form of comedy performance.

Vaudeville, long recognized as one of the most successful entertainment institutions of our country, depends almost entirely upon balance of program, and by balance I mean a large percentage of laughter.

And so comedy is fast coming to a position of predominance in motion picture entertainment. Many of the big feature productions of this season have been out-and-out comedies, and the dramatic director today who fails to inject into his picture a plentiful supply of comedy relief has put forth his creation under a most terrific handicap.

It is, however, the briefer comedies in which we are most interested during January, "Laugh Month," and I do not feel I have to direct your attention to the improvement in quality manifested in the shorter subjects during the last few seasons. Not so many years ago these comedy subjects were often a contest of rude falls and pie throwing. The man on the studio lot whose funniest face would stop the most pies in one reel was generally the star.

Some of these pictures were made with the rudest sort of simple settings, or were made with scenery just abandoned by some dramatic company and turned over to the comedy director for his use for a short time before the carpenters tore it down to make ready for the next dramatic feature.

Differs from Early Shorts

The comedy featurette of today is just as different from this type of picture, as the greatest spectacles showing in our finest theatres are different from "The Great Train Robbery," that crude and simple subject which really marked the dawn of the motion picture drama.

Many of the two-reel films that make you roar with laughter represent six to eight weeks or more of constant work by huge studio organizations and in their making it is often necessary to photograph 8,000 to 10,000 feet of film to get the 2,000 feet of finished product, in order that you may laugh for twenty minutes.

At the present time a large number of the greatest studios in Los Angeles are devoted entirely to comedy production, and a number of others, both on the West Coast and in the East, are devoting much of their effort to the making of laugh pictures.

In the West the great Christie, Educational, Hal Roach and Mack Sennett Studios are comedy producing plants exclusively. Other great studios such as those conducted by Universal, Fox and Film Booking Offices, put much of their time and effort into the short comedies. So you see the art of making you laugh is a serious problem, not only with the producers and distributors, but with your own motion picture theatre owner—the man who arranges the programs for your entertainment and actually presents them on the screen.

I sincerely hope that during this month of January you will secure an unlimited store of healthful laughter, and also that in the future you will remember that your local theatre manager has a problem that has never dawned upon you before. Help him by telling him if you like the short subject section of his program, because after all his one and only thought is to please you.

Thank you.

Based on novel by General Lew Wallace.
Adapted by June Mathis.

Length, 12,000 feet.

IN THE field in which the motion picture is undoubtedly supreme, the realm of the gigantic spectacle, the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of General Lew Wallace's immortal story "Ben Hur" stands as the screen's crowning achievement, and to back it up is a story rich in drama and action and having in generous measure practically every element of audience appeal.

In the forty-five years since its publication and twenty-two years as a stage production it has brought enjoyment to countless thousands in every country for in both forms it was a huge success. There is hardly anyone who does not know of "Ben Hur" as a story of the days of Christ or associate with it the idea of a tremendously thrilling chariot race. It is safe to say that there is scarcely a man or woman or child who will not look forward to seeing this picture, and it will live up to and probably exceed their expectations.

The story opens with the events surrounding the birth of Christ. Then follows the years of his childhood spent in comparative obscurity during which there was growing up in Jerusalem a prince of the Jewish house of Hur, known as Ben-Hur. His friendship with the Roman centurion Messala turns to enmity when Messala reveals his Roman egotism and hatred of the Jews and to curry favor with the governor arrests not only Ben-Hur, when a loose tile accidentally falls from the coping killing the general, but also takes into custody his mother and sister. Sentenced as a galley slave and driven across the desert, parched with thirst he meets Christ who gives him water and refreshes his spirit. For three years he toils at the galleys. His thoughts of revenge against Messala and Rome buoy him up and he attracts the attention of the commander of the fleet, Arrius, whose life he saves when the ships are attacked by pirates. Arrius adopts him as his son sharing his wealth, and he becomes the idol of the people as a charioteer but never ceases to look for his mother and sister. Hearing that Simonides a trusted servant is in Antioch he journeys thither and again meets Simonides' daughter Esther with whom he had fallen in love. Learning that Messala will compete in the chariot race he seizes the opportunity to satisfy his revenge, defeats him, stripping him of his wealth which he bet on the race. Urged by Esther, Simonides recognizes Ben-Hur turning over to him great riches, and acknowledging himself and his daughter to be Ben Hur's slaves. Ben Hur again hears of Christ whom the Jews looked forward to as their deliverer from the Roman yoke, and using his wealth recruited two legions of soldiers. Hastening back to Jerusalem, his mother and sister, now lepers, see him but do not reveal their presence. Christ is taken before Pilate and sentenced to be crucified and on the way to Calvary Ben-Hur tells him of the legions he has raised but Christ says he came to save men not to destroy them. In the meantime, Esther learning of the miracles goes to the valley of lepers, brings back the mother and sister and Christ cures them. The family is reunited and with Esther as his wife they return to the palace of Hur.

Here is a story filled to overflowing with dramatic material and superb entertainment angles. There is practically everything, romance, action, spectacle, military glamour, family love, gratitude, revenge, deep emotion, and the pitiable plight of the galley slaves, the thrill of the chariot race and the sea battle and strong religious appeal, even a touch or two in lighter vein, though more would be out of place. Unlike the great majority of huge productions with thousands of people the spectacular side does not overshadow the story. In fact, the chariot race does not anticlimax the following sequences in which Christ figures.

As to the chariot race, it supplies the screen's superb thrills. Words cannot convey the tremendous feeling that goes over you as you watch these scenes. The enormous amphitheatre with tier on tier of seats filled with thousands of persons, the staging of the event in a manner to do justice to the grandeur and glory of Rome, the host of chariots each drawn by four spirited steeds. The effect achieved is remarkable and a striking tribute to the genius of Director Fred Niblo, notably in the way he has sustained the thrill as the chariots race around and around the arena. Shot from every angle, you see them tearing around corners, now approaching at breakneck speed, now apparently passing over your head, now viewed from the side with the superb animals neck and neck, chariots with wheels locked, upsets narrowly missed by the oncoming vehicles and even a grand smashup of tangled vehicles, men and horses piling on top of each other. These are sights not soon to be forgotten.

Great as is the chariot race scene it is but one of the big scenes in the picture, for there are the wonderfully effective sequences showing the galley slaves, scores of them, in three long tiers on each side of the ship below deck, chained together toiling at their oars, lashed to keep at their tasks, with some dying from exhaustion. This is followed by scenes in which the Roman armada of several huge ships is attacked by an overwhelming number of pirate vessels which ram their way through the sides of the Roman ships or snap off the oars dealing death. There are hand-to-hand encounters of hundreds, in fact the glory and savagery of warfare in which neither asks or gives quarter is magnificently depicted. Then there is the impressive scene in the valley of lepers which recalls Dore's wonderful illustration of Dante's Inferno.

This picture has been mounted on a tremendous scale and one can readily believe the statements of its enormous cost for there are scenes upon scenes representing huge palaces, streets of Jerusalem and Antioch with their tremendous walls, and capping it all, the enormous amphitheatre. Shots of thousands of persons are numerous, some little more than flashes but all essential to the rounding out of the story.

The deeply religious note in this picture has been handled with great reverence and powerful effect, and most impressive is the manner in which Christ is shown. At no time do you see His face, sometimes an arm or the feet, occasionally the outline of the figure and when He is bearing the cross everything but the head is visible. Powerfully handled too are the scenes in surrounding the nativity of Christ, the shepherds watching their flocks, the wise men following the star which seems to shed ever increasing circles of radiance and the homage to the infant Christ, filmed in Technicolor as are some of the other striking scenes in the picture, are truly beautiful and awe-inspiring.

Rivalling the tremendous directorial achievement of Fred Niblo is the truly superb portrayal of Ramon Navarro as Ben-Hur. In appearance he is ideal and his handling of the role in all of its varied phases is remarkable. He makes Ben-Hur a living, DELIGHTFUL comedy drama which burlesques and pokes good natured fun at the rip-roaring, rough-riding West where men are fearless and are either heroes or villains, such as are pictured in the familiar "westerns" is "Womanhandled," the latest Paramount production starring Richard Dix.

Bill Dana, society idol jumps into a park lake and rescues a little boy, winning the gratitude of the kiddy's beautiful cousin Mollie, who asks Bill if he is a Westerner. He says he is and submits to mauling at the hands of the little fellow while the girl tells him how she admires the great big rough Westerners. Later she is disappointed to find he is one of the pampered petted womanhandled men that she hates. He convinces her of his sincerity and goes West to become the kind of man she wants him to be. He finds the West has changed and is thoroughly up-to-date in every way. The girl wires she is coming out and Bill bribes the boys to fake the necessary western atmosphere. She discovers the deception and forgives him until she misunderstands the appearance of a lot of girls on the scene and leaves in a huff. The cattle unused to the horses have stampeded and when Bill rescues her everything is all right.

"Womanhandled" is thoroughly amusing from beginning to end. The way in which the little kid pesters Dix while he is trying to make a hit with Mollie is good for a number of smiles and chuckles, while his appearance as he walks away is a roar. The western sequences are good farce, broadly burlesquing the situations and atmosphere of the typical western movie ranch and are good for many a laugh. The ranch house has bath rooms and all improvements, there is a tennis court for the cowboys and instead of horses, flivvers are used to round-up the cattle which is really the only familiar thing on the ranch. The cowboys are a nondescript lot of Eastern toughs and when Dix has them stage the kind of western atmosphere the girl expects to find it develops none of them have ever been on a horse. Their efforts to learn furnish more side-splitting comedy. Even the cows turn out to be afraid of the horses and this causes the big situation which furnishes the climax where they stampede and Dix rushes to the rescue of the girl who is directly in their pathway. These stampede scenes are exceptionally well-handled and furnish a real thrill to top off the comedy angles. In keeping with the spirit of the story, the boys have an awful time in rounding up enough horses even after scouring the country and a sorry looking lot of animals they prove to be. Their regalia has to be snitched from a museum and when they appear at the railroad station the train crew think it is a movie outfit filming a serial. Oh, yes the negro family on the ranch are disguised as Indians to round out the atmosphere.

Richard Dix is excellent in the straight comedy and western atmosphere and Esther Ralston is good to look at and does fine work as the girl. Edmund Breese as the old rancher who enters into the spirit of the fun and transforms his ranch and poses as a tough old westerner does especially fine work while little Eli Nadel aids materially in the comedy.

"Womanhandled" has a good story well worked out, is finely directed and with an extremely popular star and an abundance of smiles, laughs and chuckles should prove a popular hit and a big box-office attraction for any type of theatre.

Length, 6,200 feet.

WITH a cast composed almost entirely of names with box-office value, such as Alma Rubens, Bert Lytell, Huntley Gordon, Frank Keenan and Herbert Rawlinson, William Fox is offering "The Gilded Butterfly," a picture that should prove a distinctly pleasing entertainment for the majority of patrons.

Linda Haverhill, reared in luxury, learns that her father has dissipated their wealth but is keeping up appearances on bluff. He succeeds in convincing her that it is not what you are but what you seem that counts and that one must, regardless of consequences, keep in the front of the parade or be unnoticed. When he dies she accepts the financial aid of Converse when he offers to advance money on bonds she knows are worthless, and leads a butterfly existence in Europe where she meets an American, Brian Anestry. Finally the day of reckoning nears and Anestry seeing her with Converse gains an unfavorable impression but she convinces him of her goodness and sincerity. Back in America, her money gone, and Converse becoming obnoxious she sets fire to her gowns for the insurance and is arrested. En route to the police station the auto is wrecked and the detective admiring her grit points to another woman as his prisoner. Anestry finds Linda and she tells him everything and they sail for South America.

While the story is not unusual and has a number of familiar twists, it has been so well directed by John Griffith Wray and finely acted by the stellar cast that it holds the attention closely from beginning to end. By placing the onus of the heroine's false philosophy of life on the father a certain necessary sympathy for her is established that would not otherwise be the case. While you do not O. K. her actions always, you are at all times interested in them. There is a good railroad wreck scene and a particularly well handled street smashup in which a taxi crashes into a patrol wagon and a hook-and-ladder into the two, which provides an excellent thrill. Altogether, "The Gilded Butterfly" is good entertainment.

Alma Rubens has a congenial role and is excellent as Linda and Bert Lytell entirely satisfactory in the sympathetic role of Anestry. Huntley Gordon is capable as the polished villain, Frank Keenan gives a fine performance as the father and Herbert Rawlinson is pleasing in a rather thankless role.

vivid personality, an effect seldom achieved by a character of another time or period, and strikes you as feeling deeply the emotions he portrays. As the Roman Centurion Francis X. Bushman gives an excellent performance and makes an impressive picture. May McAvoy is a beautiful and effective Esther and Claire McDowell is very fine as Ben-Hur's mother. Great praise is also due Carmel Meyers as the siren, Nigel de Brulier as the servant, Mitchell Lewis as the Sheik and Frank Currier as Ben-Hur's adopted father. Especially remarkable is the portrayal of the Madonna by Betty Bronson which is a revelation of wistfulness and spiritual beauty.

There is so much to this picture that we could keep on and on did space permit, for despite its great length there is no padding. In fact, while the continuity is smooth, there is evidence of close and remarkably fine cutting right down to the bone on each sequence. As it stands, "Ben-Hur" is a tribute to everyone concerned in its making, a credit to the industry and a picture destined to enjoy a remarkable triumph.

UNDER the title "Soul Mates" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer is offering a screen version of Elinor Glyn's novel "The Reason Why" adapted by Carey Wilson and directed by Jack Conway with Aileen Pringle and Edmund Lowe in the principal roles.

While the central idea is the familiar one of certain parties endeavoring to bring about a marriage between two young persons unknown to each other at which they both rebel, only to have Fate bring them together with the result that they fall desperately in love with each other; other complications are introduced and the plot is worked out so smoothly and enlivened with clever and amusing subtitles.

The couple meet in the park and Lord Tancred is so persistent that Velma capitulates. All goes well until a mortgage on the lord's estate complicates matters. Velma's uncle holds it and proposes that Tancred marry his niece but he refuses unaware that Velma is the girl. Velma believes Tancred is marrying her to save foreclosure and only consents to save her brother who is charged with embezzlement. After the marriage she still continues to show her hatred and disgust. Finally she realizes her love when he takes her in his arms and then threatens to go away and get a divorce and he discloses that he has paid off the mortgage.

Aileen Pringle who has been identified with the majority of Elinor Glyn roles, wears some stunning gowns and gives a pleasing performance as Velma while Edmund Lowe is excellent as the dapper and fascinating and perfectly groomed Lord Tancred. The other roles while satisfactorily handled are of minor importance.

The course of this romance can scarcely be taken as a mirror of real life but there are a number of amusing situations and an especially bright and witty set of conversational subtitles so that aided by smooth direction "Soul Mates" despite its rather improbable and not altogether original story furnishing pleasing light entertainment.

Length, 4,700 feet.

THERE is certainly no dearth of action, villainy, heroism, fast riding, fighting, romance, or in fact any of the attributes so dear to the heart of the "western" fan in "Blue Blazes," the newest Universal production starring Pete Morrison.

With the return of young Halloran to the West the action starts off with a bang for it develops that a young girl he rescued from a runaway stage is seeking treasure left in a hidden cabin and also to bring to justice the murderer of her grandfather. She has accidentally fallen into the clutches of Fitzgerald, leader of a band of desperadoes and the real murderer who has made her believe that a friend of Halloran is the culprit. Before Dan manages to straighten matters out, convince her of his innocence and sincerity and recover the treasure there are plenty of developments that keep the story moving at a rapid pace. Among the highlights are the situation where Dan goes to the desperado's place and licks him in a hand-to-hand fight, and the climax in which there is a four sided battle between different ones seeking the treasure which is further enlivened by a cloudburst in the mountains.

All of the characters are broadly developed types played up to get the maximum effect and the director has concentrated on the punch action and melodramatic possibilities rather than in making the story smooth and plausible. The hero undaunted rides into the face of overwhelming odds and even succeeds in holding his own against a half dozen desparadoes who attack him; there is a cunning leering spy, a powerful unprincipled gunman and the forceful, crafty brutal leader and there is nothing subtle or restrained about their portrayals but there certainly is punch and fast action.

EGYPT with its Oriental glamor and atmosphere of intrigue that mystifies the Occidental mind furnishes the setting for "Infatuation," adapted from W S.omerset Maugham's play "Caesar's Wife" and offered by First National as the newest Corinne Griffith production.

The star is cast as a fascinating young Englishwoman who despite an initial dislike for what she terms his inhuman method of warfare with the natives, marries an English general who is in charge in Egypt. Business and secret diplomacy which he does not share with her result in loneliness, and she finds solace in the love of a subordinate. Faced with a situation where her husband's life is in peril she rushed to his rescue and realizes her real love for him and that she was only infatuated with the younger man.

The picture has been produced on a high class scale with a good sequence at the beginning showing warfare with the desert-tribes. The Egyptian settings are convincing and director Irving Cummings has admirably established the strange and sinister Oriental atmosphere which aids in holding the interest in a story that moves forward at a deliberate tempo from the war scenes to the well-handled climax. There is a good melodramatic punch here when the wife rushes through the streets of the native quarter and throws herself in front of the horses drawing her husband's carriage in time to save him from an assassin's bullet.

As always, Miss Griffith is decidedly attractive and wears some gowns that will captivate the women. Percy Marmont gives a sincere performance as the husband and Malcolm McGregor is well cast as the younger man. Warner Oland is decidedly fine as a sauve but cunning and unscrupulous native diplomat.

Larmour's School Popularity Contest Is Fruit of Long Goodwill Campaign

RECENTLY business has been sagging a little at the National theatre, Graham, Texas, and M. W. Larmour decided that something needed to be done. They did not respond as usual to lobbies and other exploitation, so he decided on a popularity contest limited to the girls in the High School. It nearly doubled his usual receipts and on the three contest nights it more than tripled business. More, it has held up business since.

It was very simple. Each of the four classes elected five representatives. These girls were photographed by the local studio and slides were made. The first Friday these twenty slides were shown on the screen. Guided by the applause, eight were eliminated.

The following Friday the twelve remaining girls (three from each class) appeared in person, and the most popular member of each class was decided by the same means. On the third Friday night these four again appeared and a choice was made of the most popular girl in the entire school.

Brought Results

Well known persons were selected as judges, and Mr. Larmour worked a number of surprise stunts as at the last contest when the girls were hidden back of paper screens, painted with the class colors, through which they broke as their names were called.

Each event got a strong notice in the local paper, which praised the manner in which the event was conducted.

But the manner in which Mr. Larmour obtained the consent of the school authorities pleases him more than the actual result. When he asked their approval of the idea he very frankly admitted that while it probably would arouse class spirit, his big idea was that he needed the money.

That would have been fatal to the scheme in most instances. That the frank admission was regarded as a good reason is the result of a five year good-will campaign of which Mr. Larmour is not a little proud.

Five years ago Graham had a not unusual form of entertainment: poorly projected, poorly chosen pictures in a converted garage. The National was the first real theatre, clean, neat and well kept. In the past five years five efforts have been made to work opposition, only one of which remains. The others had to quit.

When he came in Mr. Larmour found the schools and churches actively antagonistic. It was an actual and not a passive dislike. The picture theatre was denounced from the pulpit and at the school assemblies. The pupils were virtually warned against going.

Mr. Larmour's initial attempts to be friendly were repulsed. He was not wanted. He did not resent the fact, but he watched his programs carefully, eliminating all that might prove objectionable from any angle.

Landed Two

The second year he sent passes to the school principals and the clergy. Out of seven, only two acknowledged the courtesy, and neither of those accepting used the pass more than three or four times.

The third year one of the ministers wakened to the fact that there were good as well as bad pictures. He took picture themes for his texts and even announced the coming of pictures of which he approved. This year the same passes went out without a material increase in the enthusiasm.

But he hooked in a big picture. It was educational as well as interesting. Its theme was a subject for study in the schools. He had to play it at increased admissions, but he asked the Superintendent of Schools to invite the entire teaching staff to be his (the superintendent's) guests.

The invitation was refused, but Mr. Larmour was told that he might invite the teachers himself, if he so desired. Most of them came, and they liked the picture.

Shortly after he booked In the Days of Buffalo Bill, he sought out the educators, explaining that this serial was the first of a number that Universal would make provided it was found that the audiences would support this semi-educational style of serial. He pointed out that the schools could help the cause of better pictures.

The argument was sound, the serial made good, and the schools were sold.

One of the local churches was to be torn down. For nine months, while the new edifice was building, two church services and Sunday School were held in the National each Sunday.

Another church wanted to put on a Christmas pageant. They came to him for advice on staging and lighting the production. Mr. Larmour not only gave the desired information, but he rehearsed 200 amateurs for a month, staged the show and constructed a floating Star of Bethlehem that was the hit of the performance.

A School Stunt

Then Mr. Larmour worked a shift on the prize pass idea. Instead of the usual pass to each class, he offered a theatre party each month to the entire class having the most perfect attendance record.

For a year the principal or the teacher of the winning class picked the picture, but in its second year the school sent down a committee of students to look over the bookings, select three or four titles and put these to the class vote.

Mr. Larmour immediately congratulated the Superintendent on the business-like methods of the pupils. The scheme is now a regular feature, and it has a material effect upon the attendance records.

The Result

It was slow, and sometimes discouraging work, but today Mr. Larmour works in with the schools and churches, and when he told them that he needed the money the contest would bring, that reason was practically sufficient, though of course he pointed out that it would quicken the school spirit and incidentally give the students training in handling the class angle.

Receipts have been permanently bettered because new interest was aroused. When that stales, Mr. Larmour will think of something else.

Meanwhile here's a new form of contest that costs little and brings in much both in money and local interest. Keep it serious and dignified. Put it on like a production, and you'll share Mr. Larmour's profits.

Put this in your Hallowe'en folder, particularly if you are in a town where the kids go crazy Hallowe'en night and try to put the City Hall inside the First M. E. Church.

Pueblo has suffered from these volunteer scene shifters, and this year E. P. Briggs, of the Rialto Theatre, struck a popular note when he offered the boys a special morning matinee if they would lay off their usual playful burglaries.

The Star-Journal featured this coupon:

"The following pledge or promise, filled out in good faith by a student of the Pueblo schools, then taken to the box office of the Rialto Theatre Saturday morning, will admit him free to a special program at that theatre.

"To J. Arthur Grady,
"Chief of Police,
"Pueblo, Colorado.

"I hereby pledge my support in protecting our city on Hallowe'en. I will not move or damage any property in the city, and will use my influence in keeping others from doing it."

There were spaces for the name, address and school of the signer, and the coupon was signed by practically all the boys.

It cost $10 to put the stunt over including three comedy reels which formed the show, and the boys kept faith. It was the least destructive Hallowe'en the city ever has known.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Another Victor recording orchestra graced the program for the week which had William S. Hart in "Tumbleweeds" as the feature photoplay. Art Landry and his Victor Recording Orchestra were given 12 minutes on a show which had in addition three other stage presentations and the Mark Strand Topical Review. The entire running time was one hour and 54 minutes, of which time the Hart photoplay took 1 hour and 20 minutes. This left 26 minutes for the musical numbers and 8 minutes for the Topical Review.

Beginning each de luxe performance was a piano solo by Lilly Kovacs, girl-pianist. Her number was "Rondo Capriccio" by Mendelssohn. She played from her place in the orchestra and was lighted as follows: the dome had a straw Mestrum flood covering the purple draw curtains closed across the small production stage; also a dark straw spot on the soloist. The projection room had two Mestrum floods of steel blue on the orchestra, and there were four arch spots of steel blue hitting the pleats of the draw curtains. This piano number required four minutes.

Following the Mark Strand Topical Review came Harry Breuer, xylophone virtuoso, who as a regular member of the orchestra has become very popular in Brooklyn. He played from the orchestra, a popular medley which included "Sleepy Time Gal," "We Danced Till Dawn" and "Top of the World." His number, which took three minutes, was lighted as follows: steel blue spot from the dome on the soloist; orchestra stage foots and borders of purple; projection room had two violet Mestrum floods on the orchestra and apron of the stage; the dome had violet Mestrum floods covering the purple draw curtains which were closed over the production stage; four arch spots the same as in the piano number.

Seven minutes were given over to the Russian Cathedral Male Quartet, which appeared on the apron of the orchestra stage. They appeared in concert dress and sang the following: "Russian Hymn" (Protopoft); "Russian Folk Song" (Dargomysky), and "Asleep in the Deep" (Petri). As an encore they sang "The Rosary." The lights as for the previous number with a steel blue flood added to the orchestra. For the singers' second number foots and borders of the large stage were red, while the projection room had two red floods on the orchestra; the dome threw a steel blue on head and shoulders of the quartette; dome also had a green Mestrum flood on the curtains which were closed over the production stage. For the third number all lights dimmed off slowly except the blue on the quartette.

Art Landry and his Victor Recording Orchestra were the concluding musical presentation preceding the photoplay. The setting represented the salon of an ocean liner with a center opening and two side openings through which the horizon could be seen. The band was dressed in naval uniforms. A series of popular numbers were played by the orchestra, one of which was "Rip Saw Blues," the latest this orchestra has made for Victor. The big number was "The Storm", rain and electrical effects were seen through the three openings of the back-drop. Through special apparatus real water was used for the rain effect.

Physical Contest is Another Way to Sell Don Q.

Physical Contest a Help to Don Q

A silver loving cup was the chief publicity factor on Don Q. at the Stillman theatre, Cleveland. M. A. Malaney tied the Press to a contest for the best example of the physically fit boy between the ages of fourteen and sixteen.

There are ten branches of the Y. M. C. A. in Cleveland, and a boy could register at any of the branches for examination. One boy was picked by each branch for a competition in jumping, running, swimming and other sports and the winner was awarded the cup as the best developed boy in the city.

There was a direct reader interest in the contest that made for general interest in the athletic prowess of Fairbanks as exemplified in Don Q, but the stunt went beyond that. Many of the boys were added to the roster of the Y. M. C. A., and in turn the cooperation of the Y was helpful not only to the United Artists picture, but to all pictures in general.

The stunt was worked through the sporting pages instead of the regular news columns. Of course the cut was supposed to have been donated by Fairbanks.

Here is a sunt that can be worked in almost any town and with the cooperation either of the Y. M. C. A. or the Boy Scouts, where there are a number of troops of scouts.

HERE'S THE SUCCESSOR TO THE MILK BOTTLE HANGER

Special labels affixed milked bottles carries the message of The Pony Express directly into the homes. The only trouble is that the milk is generally iced, which causes moisture condensation which is apt to strip the labels from the bottles.

Jailed

Some years ago prison lobby fronts were popular on many plays, but they seemed to wear out. They are being revived on The Man Who Found Himself with considerable success.

Oscar White made a showy prison front for the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C., and backed this with the telephone call stunt. The two ideas netted a substantial advance.

Riders a Record

The best two-day business the Rivoli Theatre, Greenville, S. C., has yet drawn to Riders of the Purple Sage. The best seller A. S. Grist designed was a painting about the size of a six sheet on top of the marquise. This showed a western scene and was lettered for Tom Mix and the story.

Another strong factor was a six sheet cutout in the lobby of the Garing Theatre, flanked with two three sheets. The Garing, in the centre of the business district, is dark, so the signs were permanent.

Going Over

Tell your local stores that they will be out of it unless they show Phantom Red goods. Even Paris has announced that Phantom Red will be used in Spring models and Sak's big store in New York has made two showings of red shoes, first in leather and then in velvet, while other stores have used the dress fabrics; one Southern concern filling three windows with the color. It's going to be more used in the Spring than it was in the Fall, so if you have the play coming tell the stores to write for window material supplied by Universal.

A CIRCUS LOBBY FOR SALLY OF THE SAWDUST FROM DENVER

C. W. HALLOCK, of the Victory Theatre, built a den above the heads of the lobby crowd and set in an elephant and camel borrowed from a toy store. Compo board giraffes and clowns completed the effective display, and the results were big.

Names Still

Getting back into the past, Bill Danziger, Paramounteer, dug out the names stunt for M. Blaettner to use at the Colonial Theatre, Dayton, Ohio. To make it more interesting, it was announced that the circulation list of the Dayton Herald had been sent to Los Angeles where James Cruze, Betty Compson, Wallace Beery, Ernest Torrence and Ricardo Cortez had each picked twenty names.

Tickets to The Pony Express were issued to these 100 fortunates and of course the newspaper played the stunt up big.

Went Into Town

Oakland, Calif., is a sort of sleeping annex to San Francisco, though it is scarcely polite to refer to hustling Oakland as a sleeper, for it is more than that. But a large proportion of the residents work across the bay and for the engagement of The Fool the Franklin Theatre used a stereopticon in the San Francico waiting room of the ferry to catch the waiters, supplementing a strong local campaign.

Dancers Kicked on a Swanson Display

D. Roscoe Faunce put a kick in his lobby display on Stage Struck by means of a motor. The cut shows the shadow box used on this picture in the lobby of the Strand theatre, Birmingham.

THE SWANSON KICKERS

The front shows Gloria flipping the flapjacks while the steam from the griddle outlines an opening showing a small stage on which were coutouts of the star and three ballet dancers. The three dancers had jointed legs which were fastened by hairs to a geared down motor, causing them to do some fancy kicking. The stage was spotlighted from the back of the front plane.

It brought everyone to a dead stop and most of them bought in either then or later.

A USEFUL BATTLESHIP FLOAT ON THE MIDSHIPMAN

This was planned by W. E. Drumbar, of the Plaze Theatre, Asheville, N. C., for the Armistice Day parade and later perambulation and it got even better than the heavy receipts this play has piled up all through the Southeast.

Rode the Prince

Raymond Griffith got a ride by proxy when He's a Prince was offered at the Broadway Theatre, Newburgh, N. Y.

Charles Hammerslough dressed a float to suggest a throne and got a man who looked not unlike Griffith to ride about town. He was attended by a herald who blew a blast on his trumpet to attract attention to the outfit. Because of the dual title the banner cleverly read: "He's a Prince, A Regular Fellow, now playing at the Broadway Theatre."

A local comedy act helped to put the picture over. Mr. Hammerslough is building up a regular troupe of amateurs.

Dress Models Were Fine Clothes Club

Revamping an old idea, Arthur C. Janisch, of the First National staff in Portland, organized the store models into a Fine Clothes Club to promote the release of that title at the People's threatre.

Ostensibly the objects of the club were to improve the appreciation of good dressing in Portland and to replace "models" and "mannequin" with the more dignified "Fashion delineator," which gave the newspapers paragraphers a chance to write something.

They obtained the approval of the leading women's organizations and got a lot of newspaper space before the theatre advertising came along, and it made for an interest in the picture that was cashed in at the box office.

GIVING ACTION TO A CHAPLIN GOLD RUSH CUTOUT

D. Roscoe Faunce cut off Chaplin's right arm, hid the joint with an old shawl, streaked with whitewash "snow" and hooked the arm to a motor which caused the comedian to doff his hat with a familiar gesture in the Strand, Birmingham.

A Balloon

For I'll Show You the Town, Paul Ellis of the Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, made a balloon and basket of compoboard, with Denny and three girls from the six sheet looking over the edge of the basket.

This was suspended from a rope running across the street. It would have been good just that way, but Mr. Ellis gave it motion by having a small boy on the roof pull it back and forth. That made it more than twice as good. The kid took his pay in tickets.

Almost a Train

Many toy stores carry a very faithful reproduction of a battleship, and one of these was the lobby feature of The Midshipman at the Academy Theatre, Haverhill, Mass., It helped the picture over, backed by some song tie-ups and a posting and card campaign.

How They Put Them Over Out In Karachi, India

Indian Broadside Runs Three Tones

G. R. Gvalani, of Karachi, India, sends in a broadside on the Universal white list that seems to be a combination of house throwaway and trade appeal. The top announces that the Imperial theatre, Bangalore, has booked these releases and will show them all, but there is a lot of talk about the Universal policy that cannot be of very great interest to the patron, but which can effectively reach other exhibitors. You cannot get much of an idea of the 18x24 inch sheet from this reproduction, but you can arrive at the fact that they cleaned out the display cases on this job, for there are a dozen different faces in the list alone. The cuts are printed in purple with the text in red and deep blue. From the fact that the job carries the imprint of a Bangalore firm we infer that it is done on behalf of the Imperial, though it makes good trade advertising as well. Mr. Gvalani also sends in a smaller sheet in native character, but does not name the dialect. We used to get a set from India printed in English and four different native dialects, but this is the first to come to hand for some time.

Selling Romola With a Dignified Appeal

Becuuse it is a special, some theatres have sought to sell Romola with too much of the circus appeal. The result has been that they have sold the bult of their seats to the wrong people. They have failed to get in those who are most likely to appreciate the beauty of the production and the care with which it was made. The chief value of Romola to a house lies in the better class of patrons who can be attracted and who may be interested in coming again. They will not come to Romola if the suggestion is created that the Elliot novel has been slaughtered to make a film holiday, yet this is precisely the outcome of a circus style of announcement. The New Theatre, Baltimore, makes the most of its opportunities in a four nines in which there is strong appeal to both the intelligent and the lovers of the purely pictorial. The appeal is on the splendor of the production, and the form of the display suggests dignity and respect. The space is not overcrowded with copy, but the few lines are set in eighteen point. The cut suggests action and romance, and about the only point overlooked is the fact that the exteriors were made in the authentic locales. We think that this handling not only got more patrons for the New, but that it helped business for the following attractions, since it helps get new patrons, some of whom will return on later attractions. From a purely technical angle, this open composition is more effective than would be a space filled to overflowing with eight and ten point appeals.

Striped the Star

Bearing down on the prison angle of The Man Who Found Himself, D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., put out a convict perambulator with a sign on his back.

The lobby display showed Meighan behind the bars with a guard patroling the wall. Trick lighting made the display very attractive.

One Strong Line Sells Man on Box

While the comedy cut of Syd Chaplin driving a hansom is the chief attractor for The Man on the Box, we think that more than half of the selling will be done by the line "It'll get every laught you've got." This is better than the paneled: "If you liked Charley's Aunt you'll rave over The Man on the Box." That probably will help, and it is not the usual "better than," but there is more real appeal and argument to the line first quoted. That has a tang to it that the other lacks. It means something, and that something is entertainment. It looks as though this might be a plan book cut, though it may have been produced by Warner's Metropolitan Theatre, Baltimore, but whatever its origin it is distinctly useful and should materially increase the work of the box office attendants. It looks like a press book cut because it is fitted into the space and not a part of the full design, but wherever it came from, it is distinctly good. There is not much use arguing about Chaplin in this play. He sold himself in Charley's Aunt and as long as he can repeat, the name will suffice.

This Type Lettering Gives Fine Display

CLEAN TYPE FACES

lower portion does not matter. That's just the vaudeville additions. The thing to notice is the manner in which these names are gotten over in all type. After you have looked at cuts all messed up with a lot of hand lettered names and facts, it's pleasant to see a display in which type performs its normal function of giving display. This may not be as "pretty" or as "artistic" as some other spaces, but it has a visual punch that is lacking in a majority of theatre displays. It gets it all over at the first look. This is a four-column space and it reduces down considerably, but you can get the idea. And if you like this nice clean display, remember that most supplied cuts can be trimmed to give the essential feature and leave room for type. And before you turn from the cut notice the signature. No mistaking the house with a signature like that, is there? From the Christmas wreaths we gather that this is a special drawing but that heavy letter is typical of this house, and it cannot well be bettered.

Makes Three Column Fit Into the Four

Most managers who used this three column cut on Graustark used it for a three column space. Frank H. Burns, of the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., put it in four columns and practically got nine column inches free, for this gives a five column effect on a four nines. Not long ago one of the students in the Paramount Training School for Managers wrote for a list of managers whose work might be profitably watched and we recommended Mr. Burns as one of a list of half a dozen because he makes a nicer use of white space in small sizes than any other manager we know. He never resorts to local art work, yet he can get a better effect from supplied cuts than he could with the usual staff artist because he knows how to place the cuts to get the greatest possible value. Here the essential feature of the layout is that three point rule border on three sides of the display. Centering the cut and using border all around would have been too regular and formal. Putting the cut over to one side of the space and leaving the right blank makes this a design rather than rule work. He saves the cost of a column of space and at the same time gets the effect of an additional column. He does not just slap them in. He studies effects, and he suits the treatment to the individual cut. If he selected one form and always used that he would not be particularly well worth while. It is his treatment of the individual display that raises his work out of the ordinary and makes him a leader in this type of display If you really are interested in getting good advertisements, it will be worth the trouble to make a special scrap book section of these Burns displays.

A First National Release

HARD TO BEAT

Bright Lights

Here's the best bet on Charlie Ray's Bright Lights. The Gayety Theatre, Canton, Ohio, tied two electric shops to displays of bright lights and art announcement cards. The blazing windows were real sellers.

Gets New Billing for the Phantom

The Columbia Theatre, Seattle, takes six tens in which to put over the advance for Phantom of the Opera, and finds a new classification. Just under the reverse title you will learn that this is the "super-colossal" spectacle of the age. That's that. It's getting so that it is difficult to find some phrase that will suggest a bigger offering than the last, but "super-colossal" sounds like something new. It suggests bigness as well as class and may help out others who have exhausted the old string of descriptives. There is not a very powerful kick to the cut work, but the Phantom gets over if Kerry and Miss Philbin do not, and it looks interesting. The display is interesting mainly because it packs a lot of words very nicely into the space at command. It is talkative without seeming to be overcrowded.

Tom and Tony Sell in Limited Space

This is a little more than two fours used by the Monroe Theatre, Chicago, on The Best Bad Man. It puts over the Mix picture with a minimum of cut. The cut is two inches high and less than that in width. That is not

Your Equipment

Service for You—Theatre Owner—Builder—Studio—Laboratory—Exchange Executive—From Your Angle

Edited by A. Van Buren Powell

About That Protect-the-Print Award

STARTED somethin', all righty, when I sung that first warble about Heaven protectin' the poor workin' Print! I fired the first gyn—right away an exchange manager fired a careless inspector—then an exhibitor got fired with zeal and bought him some projector parts from off the manufacturer which actually made the projector which they was for, and I have saw at least six cement bottles of poor cement, layin' in waste cans—and not all used out, neither!

Then they backed up my yodle by showin' a Christmas Tree which had on it every sort of different parts and things that goes to help Protect the Print.

And Chalmers Publishing Company allows YOUR EQUIPMENT to get TWENTY-FIVE DOLLARS, repeat this way ($25.00), in the interest of this Protect the Print campaine, to be gave as a FIRST AWARD to the one who can name the most correctest list of them things showed on the said Xmas Tree and at the same time send the best letter which says what the writer does to Protect the Print.

So Duplex Film Industries gets busy and allots YOUR EQUIPMENT a Duplex Patching Block which is to be gave as second prize for the second most correct list, and the second best letter with it about what is being did by the one writin' to Protect the Print—and that's helpin', I'll say!

So Independent Movie Supply Company which has Mr. Rabell at the head of it, and which gentleman is certainly anxious and glad to do anything to boost this Protect the Print movement, its Mr. Smith says, "Go to it, in the interest of Protecting the Print, we will allot a Rewinder Set," and this is to be gave as third prize for the third most correctest list with the third best letter about how the author of it is doing to Protect the Print.

And in the case there would be a tie in any of these three cases, there will be gave a similar prize of the above to each of them which ties.

WHO PROTECTS THE PRINT FOR YOU?

Van,
Moving Picture World,
516 Fifth Avenue, New York.

I operate a theatre and in the interest of your an exchange
Protect-the-Print campaign, wish to say that the exhibitor which returns prints to me in the best exchange condition in my territory is.....
.....Put his name on your Honor Roll.

Signed.....

So H. H. Buxbaum, of Fox Exchange, and F. H. Richardson, of Movin' Picture World's BETTER PROJECTION agrees to be in with Van, of this YOUR EQUIPMENT, to act as judges on these lists and letters which must now be all into the office of Moving Picture World, 516 Fifth Avenue, New York, by noon of January Sixteenth, and thereafter the prizes will be gave as soon as the judges gets the mail all read and decided upon as to what is best.

And Dave Strayer writes that you must say WHAT EXHIBITOR OR EXCHANGE sends prints in best condition—and I've ast Van to reprint the blank about it again once more this week, which he has did, so if you didn't use it last week use it now.

But a feller out in the sticks writes in that the things on the Christmas Tree in the Award business is too small for him to guess what they are.

Well, now, this wasn't to be no guessing game. It's a straight, open-and-shut idea to stimulate Protect-the-Print interest, so I am having took bigger pictures of the things which was showed in the first original picture of the Xmas Tree—and these is all of them, took close-up as the studios says. Now you can see them.

If you know what they are—and you ought to if you handle Prints—send a list of them with a letter about what you do to protect the print, to Van, at above stated place and address.

In this way you can show what you do in a good cause and also maybe your list and letter will be the one that will be picked and chose, because use of spelling and correct wording of English don't count.

The little small things which you may not have saw in the Christmas Tree picture.

E. H. ALLEN ready to throw light on Educational's studio equipment.

You've Got to Have Equipment To Get the Laugh Into Comedy

So Argues E. H. Allen, General Manager of Educational Studios, in an Informal Talk Exclusively for YOUR EQUIPMENT

There isn't anybody on the lot that is more looked up to or more highly respected for his ability to get the effect needed in comedy production than is E. H. Allen, who guides the destinies of Educational Studios. While not new these studios are practically so—the lot was first occupied by King Vidor, who made several feature productions there. When purchased by Educational the ground held only one covered stage of less than 12,000 square feet; now—six months after occupation by Educational—40,000 square feet of space is available. Just one of the go-getter stunts. But let Mr. Allen do the talking. —Editor.

ABOUT a century and a half ago, Ben Franklin made a statement to the effect that "A penny saved is a penny earned." Too many people in all lines of production have taken this adage too literally and have found that pennies saved in the purchase of equipment have been dollars lost in time and quality of product.

Especially is this true of the motion picture industry. Due to the peculiar conditions surrounding motion picture production, compared with the manufacture of some staple or standardized article, equipment must not only be efficient, but adaptable to every demand made on it in every phase of production.

Nowhere are these varying demands more in evidence than in a comedy studio. Every picture presents widely differing mechanical and constructional problems and it is only through the use of well chosen and efficient equipment that these problems can be economically solved.

Of primary importance is the question of stage space. At Educational Studios we are using 40,000 square feet of space, an amount which, on the face of it, seems almost too great. But although it has been available only a few weeks we are already realizing on it, for production moves faster and more smoothly than would ever be possible without it. Directors move from set to set without delay; carpenters erect sets without disturbing working companies, and since the last stage has been finished we have never suffered the loss of an hour through waiting for space.

Lights are of equal importance, and in this instance, too, a surplus is real economy. Creco stand, rotary and scoop lights, Sunlight Arcs and Cooper-Hewitt banks furnish the illumination.

We have just installed a "remote control switchboard" which is proving its efficiency. Through the use of this piece of apparatus the electrician can control every light on the set from a small metal switchboard which he holds in his hand. It is connected to the larger main switchboard by a long cable. This enables the many cables leading to and from the main switchboard to be placed out of the way of the director and his crew, clearing up the space near the camera.

Lights are useless without a steady and dependable source of current. Two Westinghouse generators, one fixed and the other portable, supply the stages with 7,500 amperes hourly, assuring current enough for every conceivable situation. An especially installed power switchboard, with instruments and circuit breakers, distributes the current from the powerhouse to every portion of the studio property.

In the Educational Studio we have abandoned the practice of building our "flats" from wallboard or compo-board. We have found that it is cheaper in the end to build for permanence. Every flat made is constructed of three-ply lumber, cross-braced until it is rigid. These flats are made in standard uniform sizes and are used over and over. They are practically indestructible. Although their first cost is much higher than wall-board flats, they are, in the end, most economical. Added to this they are perfectly rigid, which prevents them from swaying during the photographing of scenes.

The new stage buildings themselves are built with an eye to efficiency. New stage buildings numbers 3 and 4 have the stage floors fourteen feet above the ground with the lower floor devoted to storage rooms for special mechanical props, a garage for the company busses and a very complete storage room for motor accessories where we have every thing from a cotter pin to an eight cylinder motor.

The fronts of these stage buildings are made to do double duty. Instead of the blank sides generally found on such buildings we have erected these with windows so that the building itself may be used as an apartment or office building front. The street level consists of store windows and a practical sidewalk which obviates the necessity of securing permits to work in downtown locations with all the attendant annoyance of the curious crowds.

The elevated stages are also useful in another manner. By cutting through the floor, entrances from stairways, elevators, trapdoors, etc., can be made without the labor of digging pits under the stage which is the case when ground-level stages are used. The plate-glass windows on the ground floor when not used in production, are protected by heavy woven wire screens.

The property and furniture rooms newly erected, contain practically everything needed in comedy production. To insure against loss of valuable production time, and against loss of the "props" themselves, every article is numbered, facilitating storage, tracing and inventory. Every piece is carried on the books by number from the time it enters the studio until it comes to its end in the incinerator.

Connected with the carpenter shop is the special prop room, where special and unique props used in comedy production are made. This room is equipped with a drill press and a lathe, which have paid for themselves many times over in rapid construction of some unique and unpurchaseable bit of props or studio equipment.

The blacksmith and machine shop is complete with every device for working in iron or steel. Most useful is the oxy-acetylene torch used for both cutting and welding. With its aid working in metal becomes almost as easy and as rapid as working with soft wood.

An example of the benefit of this machine shop is the revolving head, used in trick camera work. This head, which carries a regulation Bell & Howell camera, can be turned over and over. A small motor cranks the camera. Through the use of this special head we have been able to secure comedy shots otherwise impossible to obtain.

Another bit of equipment—a rolling stage—is indispensable around a comedy studio. This stage is erected on rollers on which rests the outer rim of the entire stage. Proper man power applied to the stage gives it a very realistic roll, useful in taking ship interior scenes or in many other situations which arise in comedy making.

Colonial Theatres To Build a Big One

BRISTOL, Connecticut, is going to have a new theatre and one that the city, as well as the builders, can be proud of.

D. A. Peters, A. H. Lockwood and Lewis M. Gordon, the three able showmen behind Colonial Theatres, Inc., have purchased a site on Main Street, in the city mentioned, and have begun plans which will end up by giving Bristol the most modern 1,800-seat theatre in the country.

Equipment is to be of the highest quality—the design is to pay particular attention to lighting, ventilation, heating, acoustics and patrons' seating comfort.

The astute showmen behind the new project have determined to leave nothing out that will contribute to the best surroundings in which to show motion pictures. The company's other theatres, the Bristol and the Princess, which will both continue to operate, demonstrate the ability of Messrs. Peters, Lockwood and Gordon to make motion pictures one of Bristol's institutions.

Fox N. Y. Exchange Chucks Out "Bad Reel" to Protect Prints

IN THE COURSE of re-organization of the Film Department, Mr. John Weinberg was installed as supervisor, with instructions to do whatever in his opinion would perfect the service and ensure absolutely perfect prints to Fox exhibitors.

Mr. H. H. Buxbaum, New York Fox Exchange Manager, says:

"After going very carefully into the matter, we decided not to use any reels unless they were absolutely new. The ordinary life of a reel with good handling on the part of the expressmen and operators should be about twenty days, but both the improper handling of reels in cases by expressmen and the careless handling by operators tends to lessen this time by at least half. The reel should be spread apart by the operator before it is inserted into the magazine. Operators are inclined to put the reel into the magazine and spread it apart at the same time, which makes the reel bulky and in most cases film catches against the door of the magazine, and we find that both film and reel have been damaged.

"We have come to a point now where between 1,500 and 1,800 reels are discarded yearly, as they cannot be repaired to give the kind of service which we are striving for. Our instructions from the Home Office are to spare no expense in our Film Department that will enable us to offer to our exhibitors film that is in first-class condition.

"Our exhibitors seem very well pleased with the condition in which our prints are going out to them, and we have reduced the number of complaints until they average never more than one a week, and sometimes none at all."

Clarks Building

MR. AND MRS. CLARK BROWN are building the new Roosevelt Theatre in Jamestown, N. Y. They have ordered two Powers projecting machines, two Powerlite low intensity lamps and a Dalite screen from the Becker Theatre Supply Company of Buffalo. Becker is installing two Simplex machines in the new Kenmore Theatre, Kenmore, N. Y., and two of the same brand in the Thurston Theatre, Rochester.

Busy Builders These; Coast Will Benefit

THE CONSTRUCTION work will start next month on the beautiful Hollywood theatre to be built for Warner Bros. at a cost of $2,000,000. This theatre will seat 3,600 persons and will be located in the heart of Hollywood. Instead of being a four story structure as originally planned the new theatre will be six stories in height.

Fred Miller and Lou Bard will build a new theatre in Hollywood to cost $500,000 and seat 2,500 persons. The building will be constructed by Ralph B. Lloyd with the Far West Theatres taking a twenty five year lease on the structure.

Another new theatre is to be built in Hollywood on North Vermont avenue by Bouttier Bros. at a cost of $250,000.

(By this Brother Budge means a sharp, rather loud humming sound. Editor.) Serial, Pathe; Stock unknown; Sharp; Noisy as per preceding one. Comedy, Pathe; Stock unknown; Sharp. Noise same as previous two. Feature, F. B. O.; Eastman stock; Round; Ran fairly quiet.

You will observe that out of thirteen sharp cornered sprocket hole films, only two ran quietly, though three ran fairly so, and three were noisy. Out of ten round cornered sprocket hole films, four ran quietly, four fairly so and none were noisy.

It really is too bad that a lot of you have not taken the trouble to comply with my request, and make such a complete report as this. The meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will probably have been held before this gets into print. Had I a few dozen such reports to present to the Standards and Nomenclature Committee of that body, instead of just this one and the report of Brother Gray covering one film, but doing it very well indeed, it would have had large value, because we (I belong to the committee) are right not considering the matter of standardizing sprocket hole shape and size.

Of course reports of relatively quiet running are not positive, conclusive proof that the quiet running hole shapes are best, but it at least gives us something tangible to work on. Brother Budge's work in compiling this report is appreciated.

Back on the Job

F. H. MOORE, Projectionist City Theatre, Taunton, Massachusetts, says:

Well, I am back at my old stand again. It seems good to be handling D. C. once more, after having bucked a D. C. arc all summer.

Why not publish the names and addresses of all the boys some week, so that if some of us happen to feel like writing to each other we can do it. It would be a good stunt, what?

We have fixed up the house to some extent this season. Redecorated it inside, and put in new fixtures on side walls; also a new lobby and marquee outside. The power company has given me a 3-wire Edison service, so now we have plenty of power. Have enlarged the 3-wire, 220-volt service for my generator. Formerly had a No. 6 circuit outside for feeder. Have a 00 circuit now, and it makes a big difference.

Next summer myself and wife will certainly drop in on you at your summer home. Intended to this year, but couldn't make it. Best regards and many happy returns of the day.

Now what in heck do you mean by that last. True I'll be fifty nine years old the 25th of this month (October) but how did you know that? I'm keeping the fact of my aged age a dense, dark, dank secrut. October next year I'll be sixty, if I stick around that long, and maybe, if you feel like it, I'll let you young squirts give me a party then.

As to the addresses, I think that, except for those few who have not given me their street address—not many of them—and the two (Hanover and Doe) who purposely keep their address (street and theatre) secret, as well as their real names, I have published the addresses of all department correspondents except (again except) once in a while one who, for good reasons, asks that his name and address be not published.

It would be quite a job to hunt up all those addresses now, and I'm something more than literally swamped with work as it is. You'll all know next spring why that is true.

Congratulations on the improved equipment. I am sure there is a loss due to too-small feeders and circuits in a goodly number of theatres which would astound those paying the bills did they know of it. That is why I have repeatedly advised projectionists to measure the wires of the circuits, and calculate the voltage drop according to the Bluebook tables. Like yourself, though, Brother Moore, they neglect it, and when finally larger wires are put in they are a bit astonished at the results.

I shall be very glad to have you and your beautiful wife (I've never seen her, but all women are beautiful) spend a week-end with me next summer, always provided Mrs. Moore will do the cooking. I'm all alone here, and I'll be gosh danged if any female woman is going to get the chance to give my cooking the he haw!

All That Gray Said

J. R. BAILEY, Projectionist, Kitchener, Ontario, says:

"Just finished a three day showing of "Introduce Me," and can indorse all that Brother Gray said in his letter about the singing and rattling. His letter was most interesting."

So you see, Gray, when you wrote me you also wrote to a man way up in Kitchener, Ontario. You also addressed men over in New Zealand, in Australia, all over the United States of America, and, in fact, men located pretty well all over the civilized world. And they read our "dope," too. Make no mistake about that.

At home you may discuss matters with a man or two, or maybe even with a dozen or two. At the A. P. S. meeting we even discussed matters with a hundred or more at one time. Through this department you can discuss matters of mutual interest with thousands of men each week scattered literally all over the surface of the globe. And that is no idle bunch of words either. Also we have a few readers in non-English speaking countries, and an occasional correspondent, too. Several most interesting letters have come from Norway. There have been many letters in the department from Australia and from New Zealand. There have been an occasional letter from other countries, including India, Ireland, Russia, England and even China.

Bluebook School Answers 421-426

(NOTE—There has been a mix-up of numbers in the Bluebook series of questions. Through a typographical error lists of questions appearing in December 5 issue and in December 12 issue both bear Nos. 422 to 426 inclusive, so that there are two 422, 423, 424, 425 and 426 questions.)

Question No. 421—What may happen if you cut straight through the insulation when stripping wire?

Brother Budge busts the Christmas calm with this answer:

Well, if you do that you are likely to amputate some of the small strands, if it be a standard wire, such as, for instance, asbestos covered, also you may 'nick' the wire, or cut a ring in its surface, which probably will cause the wire to break at that point if it be bent. Moreover, and also, should the wire be "alive"—which it should not be, of course, but we all do foolish things at times—and your body be grounded, you may get a peach of a jolt—just the current saying to you: "Pull that switch, you boob, before you begin taking my clothes off." ff

Question No. 422—Before connecting a wire to the terminal binding post of a switch, or other device, what should be done?

E. G. Steele, Salt Lake City, Utah; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; someone whose name is not on the answer sheet; G. W. Bennewitz, Sioux Falls, South Dakota; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Everett A. Fuller, Schenectady, New York; Allan R. Gengenbeck, New Orleans, Louisiana; T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, and S. T. Anderson, St. Paul, Minnesota, all have made fair to excellent answers to this one.

Gengenbeck says:

In making connection to a switch "or other" binding post includes two very different conditions, since the "other" connection may be to a rheostat or an arc lamp, where the connection would be subjected to a more or less high degree of heat.

In answering as to cold connections, I would say that considerable depends upon conditions. First, of course, the insulation is removed from the conductor for a sufficient distance, and no more, to permit of the operation which follows. The uncovered stub of wire should be thoroughly cleaned, either by scraping or with sandpaper—in practice usually by scraping. The terminal binding post to which the connection is to be made must be thoroughly clean, insofar as has to do with its electrical contact surface.

In theory a terminal lug should then be soldered to the wire end, the process of soldering being well described on page 121 of the Bluebook.

In practice, however, this is not always either practical or especially desirable. I would put it this way: where the wire is a large one, solder a lug to it without fail, the lug to, of course, be attached to the binding post. If the wire be a small one, this is neither necessary, or in many cases, such as incandescent lamp sockets, desirable or even possible.

Just what the dividing line ought to be I don't know, but would suppose anything larger than a No. 10 wire should have a terminal lug.

One reason for this is that large wires presumably carry heavy current, and the wire being round, when it is clamped under a binding post nut the actual contact between the round wire and flat metal surface of the nut and the binding post surface underneath is relatively small. With the smaller wire I believe it is proportionately considerably larger. In such matters my own procedure is to apply common sense and judgment. I think any man who ought to be allowed to make electrical connections at all should be able to tell when a lug is necessary and when it is not.

As to hot binding posts, I hold that a lug should always be used, for the reason that the heat the connection is subjected to will corrode the connection very rapidly, and the lug sets up a condition which will resist deterioration through corrosion much better than will the other sort of connection. The lug must of course be of the compression type, since the heat makes solder impracticable.

A most excellent, common sense discussion of the subject, it seems to me, Brother Gengenbeck, but to throw a monkey wrench into its wheels, I will quote friend Hanover's reply. He is right! So, I personally believe, are you. Where men are involved who have the ability to apply common sense, I hold set rules usually should always be tempered with that commodity. The danger lies in men who have not the real ability to form safe judgment attempting to temper set rules with common sense. That is the thing which kills many people in automobile traffic of today. The capable, level headed man or woman can do many things which badly fracture the set rules and do them with entire safety. The trouble is that so many who are not capable or level headed try the same thing and—trouble is apt to follow.

Hanover says:

Follow the Electrical Code rules and you will be safe.

That is absolutely correct, but Brother Hanover, doubtless thinking I knew the Code Rules by heart, said no more. Well, I don't, and unfortunately have not a copy of the Code by me. Just discovered that mine is gone. Probably loaned it to some one. Mad—spell it backward.

Question No. 423—What attention should terminal binding posts of switches, rheostats, etc., have, and why is this attention of importance?

Doe says:

They should be examined at periodic, set intervals, and kept clean as to their electrical contact. Once a month, say on the first, all connections should be examined carefully. To the average man it may seem a waste of labor to loosen and examine a connection which is apparently in good condition, but it is labor darned well wasted, just the same. It requires half an hour in the forenoon of the first day of each month for me to examine all electrical connections in my projection room, loosening them and making certain that the metal is clean and bright. It is labor well expended, and is no hardship to me.

Rheostat and lamphouse connections should be examined every two weeks, assuming that they are used several hours each day. If only used for an evening show, then once a month will do, provided the connections be well made in the first place.

Very good, friend Doe. I hold your "rules" to be good ones, and worthy of adoption in all projection rooms.

Question No. 424—Will power wasted in poor connections, burned wires, etcetera, be registered on the meter, and have to be paid for? Name the possible sources of waste of this sort.

Bennewitz says:

Power wasted in poor connections, burned wires, etc., will be registered on the meter and will have to be paid for as current consumed.

The possible sources of waste of this sort are: House main feeders or branch circuits working over the rated capacity of the wires. Burned wires, loose wire splices, wire splices not soldered. Switches or fuse blocks working over rated capacity. Loose, dirty, corroded, or burned switch blades or contacts. Loose, dirty, corroded or burned fuse contacts. Terminal lugs loose on wire, dirty, corroded, or not making good contact with thing to which it is connected. Old rheostats which have had many heated arguments. Dirty, corroded, or burned rheostat control arm or contacts. Dirty, corroded, or burned carbon jaws. Dirty or rough motor, or generator commutator. Motor or generator brushes making poor contact with commutator. Grounded circuit.

Which, I think, covers the ground very well, though the answer might be put into this form, as to possible sources of waste:

Inefficient projectionist or machine operator who either don't know how to keep his equipment in shape or is too demmad lazy to do it.

Question No. 425—What do Underwriters' Rules require as to the making of wire splices?

Bennewitz answers thus:

"Underwriters' rules require that wires must be so spliced, or joined that the bond will be mechanically strong and electrically perfect without solder. All joints except those made by some approved soldering device, must be soldered and all splices must be covered with insulation equal to that of the conductor itself." With which every one, in substance, agrees, so I think he must prob'ly be right.

Question No. 426—Describe the proper method of making a wire splice, beginning with stripping the insulation.

Bennewitz again makes a most excellent answer, as follows:

In making a wire splice, we start by stripping the insulation from the ends of the wire to be spliced. The proper method of doing this is to cut into the insulation two or three inches from the end of the wire, making a tapering cut towards the end of the wire, and not cutting straight in, as some do. After the insulation is removed, scrape the wire until it is perfectly clean and bright. Then place the ends together so that one faces your right and the other your left. Adjust them to the desired length of splice you want, then grasp the two wires (to one side of the center) with a pair of pliers and twist the free end of wire around the other wire. Not in a spiral direction, but so that each lap is snug against the preceding one, using another pair of pliers to twist it snug against the wire. After twisting one wire end, twist the other and solder the splice. Wrap with approved rubber tape, and then with approved friction tape to a thickness equivalent to that of the conductor.

On page 122 of the Bluebook, fig. 26 shows different methods of making wire splices.

Brother Fuller, the new "student," Schenectady, New York, also made an excellent answer, his remarks about acid in soldering flux, etc., having distinct value.

The correct method of making wire splices

Queestion No. 440—What is meant by a T. P. S. T. and a T. P. D. T. switch and where are such switches used in projection practice?

Question No. 441—What is a D. P. D. T. switch, and in what places might we have use for them in projection practice?

Question No. 442—What marks must be stamped on some part of every knife switch?

Question No. 443—May a knife switch be used for a higher or lower amperage or voltage than it is marked for?

Question No. 444—In inspecting your switches each week, what faults would you look for, and DO you make a weekly inspection—or any periodic inspection at all?

is to first remove the insulation from the ends of the wires to be joined for a distance from two to four inches, depending on the size of the wire. The insulation should be whittled away as if you were to sharpen your lead pencil. Never run the knife blade around, as you may cut in the wire and thus weaken it so that in time it would be likely to break at that point. After the insulation has been removed, the next step is to clean the ends of the two wires thoroughly—till they shine. This may be done with emery cloth or sandpaper, or scraping with a knife blade.

The metal must be clean in order to secure good electrical contact. The wire ends may now be twisted together tightly. The next step will be the soldering. Wet the joint thoroughly with soldering fluid, smear with soldering paste. Care must be taken in selecting soldering fluid, as some of them contain acids which will eat the metal, and thus cause trouble. After wetting the joint with the fluid, or paste, hold the wire over the blaze of a gasoline torch until it is warm. Also hold in the blaze a piece of stick solder or solder wire, until it melts and runs all through the joint. Care must be taken not to get the wire too hot, as that will injure the wire and reduce its carrying capacity; also if too hot the solder will run through—and out of the joint. If the soldering be properly done the splice will have greater mechanical strength, and as high carrying capacity as the wire itself. I might add that brazing the wires together with German silver makes a neat splice, but the above method is the one ordinarily used. All joints should be soldered, except for temporary use—say for one day only. After the soldering is properly done, the splice must be wrapped with rubber insulation tape, to about the depth of the original rubber insulation, over which adhesive cloth tape (friction tape) must be wound. After this is all done white shellac could be used over this outer tape, if it be a white wire, and black shellac on the black wire. This shellac will hold firm the piece of tape over the splice and make a very neat job.

Birmingham, Ala. Local Union Elects Officers

DOWN in the Southland they do everything we do but skate—even to getting a bunch of men to work for them for nothing for a year.

Local Union 236, Motion Picture Projectionists, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., down in Birmingham, Alabama, where they make railroad rails, big I beams and a lot of li'l things like that by the thousands of tons, has elected officers for the coming year.

L. Nation will wield the gavel at meetings, and boss things generally. He will be addressed as President and will be assisted by Brother J. Chambless, who will sit at the opposite end of the meeting room and be addressed as Mr. Vice-President when some one wants to take an appeal from the "chair"—if ever they do.

R. A. Root will be close to the root of things, because he is the new Business Representative—more power to him. The official pen will be wielded by Secretary J. F. Mankin, while W. B. Herring will keep the money the boys pay in—until it is wanted, of course. He will be Treasurer.

A. B. Jackson's duty will be to stand 'em outside if they don't behave themselves in meetings. He is Sergeant-at-Arms, though what kind of "arms" I don't quite know. The Trustees, whom we hope are trusty, and who certainly better not let themselves get rusty, are J. N. Cason, J. C. Harper and H. A. Rensford.

The Examining Board (ah, ha! they'd better be GOOD!!) is composed of R. A. Root, F. J. Emmerson and C. L. Gaston. J. T. Amberson will take a joy ride to the International Convention, where he will put up a stiff fight to eliminate the IDIOTIC "Operator" from the name of the organization, and substitute Projectionist. Ouch! Throwing brick is not fair, Brother Amberson. Y' didn't hit me, anyhow! R. A. Root will be delegate to the Alabama State Federation and F. E. Walker Chairman of the Banquet Committee.

Banquet! Gosh, I'd like to be with you all on that night, but I guess it's too costly a trip to even think about. And, anyhow, I'm probably not invited, though that wouldn't stop me if I were closer.

Well, men of Birmingham, I wish you all sorts of good luck—which you may have if you—work for it.

Some Language

A PROJECTIONIST in St. Charles, Missouri, hands me a sample of film punching which consists of the amputation of the right half of one picture, the left half of another twelve frames away, and the right half of one again twelve frames away. He says:

I thought I had seen all the varieties of film outrages it was possible for even the most expert inventor of cussedness to evolve, but the attached is, to me at least, a new variety.

It is rather hard to believe that any human being exists with an order of intelligence so low and a bump of destructiveness so enlarged that he would do so idiotic a thing as this. Which leads me to remark that the field of operatin' a pitcher machine would be in some danger of encroachment by clever anthropoid apes, who might be trained to thread, strike an arc, etc., and who might be expected to do such things as this, were theatre managers who employ the curiosities who perpetrate such crimes aware that they might be had a bit cheaper than even the present variety of film butcher.

Phew! That is some roast—but pretty thoroughly deserved all around. The theatre manager who tolerates men who do such things in his projection room is equally guilty with the man himself; also he has little if any more sense than the film destroyer he employs. However, I think the good St. Charles brother has covered the matter fairly well, so that's that. Next!

Lo a Voice from the West

MURL. STANSBURY, Woodburn, Oregon, radios the following via U. S. mail:

"Dear Mr. Richardson: An lo a voice from the far, far west! A confession! I am only an "operator," but believe you me, Mr. Richardson. I'm going to do my best to get out of the "motley crowd." To convince you of this I am herewith ordering a Bluebook.

Ever since I started work here, in the Bungaiow theatre, I have followed the projection department, and I am telling you straight that it has helped me. A lot of the Bluebook questions are 'over my head,' but just the same I do manage to answer some of them. Have all the departments cut out, and each subject filed under its own heading. Makes it mighty handy for me.

Have a cozy little projection room, eight feet by ——— feet in size, in which are two Motiograph DeLuxe projectors and a homemade stereopticon, all Mazda G. E. equipped. I would like to ask this: Does it hurt the the constant current regulator to get hot? Mine certainly do; also the ammeters. Have an eighty-five foot projectionistance, and a Minusa screen. The net result is, with careful work on the part of the gink in charge, a darned good picture, if I do say it myself.

Sounds good, as to room and equipment, though you did not say which way the eight feet were measured. Presumably front to back.

As to the "constant regulators," if you will turn to page 460 of your new Bluebook, you will find your question answered. Roughly speaking, if you can hold your hand on the device without discomfort it is not outside the range of safety in the matter of heating. However, that is not at all the right way, to determine such a serious matter. Get a thermometer—Centigrade if you can, if not then a Fahrenheit. Bed its bulb in rather stiff putty, place the putty in firm contact with the thing you desire to measure the temperature of, and leave it there long enough for the putty to get as hot as the part is. If the centigrade thermometer registers more than 90, or the Fahrenheit more than 194 degrees, then the device is operating outside the limits of safety, and will eventually probably "burn out."

The probable reason for overheating is that your line voltage is high. This is the more likely, because of the fact that, as I understand you, all regulators heat the same. If the regulators are found to heat beyond safety limits, then you may do either one of two things. First, you can take the matter up with the General Electric, through the company you purchased the equipment from, telling them exactly what the voltage reading is across the supply lines at the PRIMARY terminals of the regulator. Second, you may get hold of some old rheostat coils, or make some resistance coils from ordinary iron wire of sufficient size to carry the current, inserting sufficient resistance in one of the supply wires, near where it connects to the regulator, to reduce the voltage to 110, or whatever the supply voltage is supposed to be. This will be effective, but will waste power. Better consult the General Electric and get the job done right by them. Bye the way, tell them exactly how hot the regulators get if you write them.

I am, of course, glad to know you have found the department of value to you in your work. Your "filing under proper heading" of the articles is a corking good stunt. Such a reference file, plus the Bluebook, ought to tide you over many a rough spot.

A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

Hal Roach presents

Clyde Cook in "What is the World Coming To?"

Two Reels

Those who have seen, and played, "Starvation Blues" and "Should Sailors Marry" know what high class comedies the Roach studios are producing with Clyde Cook.

In this one the laughs begin like the patter of rain-drops on a tin roof; as it sweeps on toward its climax the laughter is like the drumfire of heavy artillery. Three pips in a row. Can they keep it up? Watch!

1926 HAS HITCHED ITS WAGON TO A STAR!

The New Year starts right.
Profiting by the experience of 1925.
Which was a great year.
Studded with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer successes.
1926 hitches its wagon to a star.
The Quality Fifty-Two.
There's a reason.
And soon you'll read the big news.
Of what those non-stop, fast-stepping, box-office-wise showmen-producers of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer have up their sleeve.
For coming months.
Yes, a lot of surprises.
But you get to expect surprises in the Quality 52—and we never disappoint.
Hitch your wagon to a star and let the rest of the boys watch your star dust.
1925 was a big M-G-M year.
But oh you 1926!

Mr. S. L. Warner
Warner Bros. Theatres
New York City

Dear Mr. Warner:-

After closing last week's business on HOGAN'S ALLEY, I just simply had to sit down and write you a letter telling you that I believe this picture is the biggest box-office picture of the year.

I played to a total of 16,082 paid admissions in a 684-seat house for a gross of $7090 on the week of six days, thereby breaking every existing house record for every day of the week, and breaking the previous high week's record by $2500, the business built steadily from the opening day and the Saturday record was "smashed" by better than $400.

I can't say enough for the picture and hope that this one is followed by many more of the same class, as it seems to be the type that gets the "big money."

I incidentally paid the Exchange $2008 for the picture, and in addition to that, showed a profit of $1699 for the house.

With kind regards and best wishes for the coming product, I remain

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES, leaders of the industry, offer you BIGGER PROFITS THAN EVER!

Titles	Stars and Casts	Producers	Authors	Box-office Angles
KIKI	NORMA TALMADGE, Ronald Colman heads supporting cast.	Joseph M. Schenck	David Belasco	One of the outstanding stage hits of the Twentieth Century. Six hundred performances on Broadway. Norma Talmadge as the waif of Paris makes this her greatest role. Directed by Clarence Brown
IRENE	COLLEEN MOORE	John McCormick	James Montgomery	The unforgettable musical comedy screened gorgeously. Not only a magnificent part for Colleen Moore but a style-parade on proportions never before attempted. Directed by Alfred E. Green.
MISS NOBODY	COLLEEN MOORE	John McCormick	Tiffany Wells	Adapted from the popular newspaper serial "Shebo," presenting Miss Moore as a delightfully feminine hobo. Huge exploitation backs this production.
SILKY ANNE	CONSTANCE TALMADGE	Joseph M. Schenck	Hans Kraly	Call this a twin-sister to "Her Sister from Paris." The play is the present vogue of the continent—a delicious thing with a title that clinches it at the box office.
"Puppets"	MILTON SILLS	A. L. Rockett	Frances Lightner	A finely dramatic role for Milton Sills with the full force of his stellar appearance in "Men of Steel" behind it.
MLLE. MODISTE	CORINNE GRIFFITH	E. M. Asher	Henry Blossom and Victor Herbert	Another musical comedy hit, screened splendidly under Robert Z. Leonard's direction. Corinne Griffith as the little Parisian milliner who made gay chapeaux for other women's heads and brought gayer chappies to her own feet.
ASHES	CORINNE GRIFFITH	E. M. Asher	Reginald C. Goode	Highly successful as a Broadway play, "Ashes" follows "Mlle. Modiste" and gives Miss Griffith opportunity for the finely dramatic portrayals that mean so much at the box-office.
JUST SUPPOSE	RICHARD BARTHELMESS, Lois Moran heads supporting cast.	Inspiration Pictures, Inc.	A. E. Thomas	Directed by Kenneth Webb. And that means a magnificent picture with Barthelmess as the boy who would sooner be a peasant in the kingdom of love than ruler of a nation. His best since "Shore Leave."
THE KID FROM MONTANA	RICHARD BARTHELMESS	Inspiration Pictures, Inc.	Katherine Newlin Burt	Sidney Olcott has been engaged to direct it. It affords Barthelmess as distinctive a role as he ever played, full of action, romance and comedy.
RAINBOW RILEY	JOHNNY HINES	C. C. Burr	Thompson Buchanan	Johnny Hines is a cub reporter sent to report a mountain feud, and what those wild mountaineers do to Johnny makes six reels of great comedy.
THE BROWN DERBY	JOHNNY HINES	C. C. Burr	F. S. Merlin and Brian Marlow	Another knock-out, with Johnny on the receiving end. Picture him in the prize-ring—an amateur pugilist! That's all. That's plenty!
TRAMP, TRAMP, TRAMP!	HARRY LANGDON	Harry Langdon Corp.	Harry Langdon	Harry Langdon's first for First National, one of the most eagerly awaited pictures of the year.
THE LUNATIC AT LARGE	LEON ERROL	Earl Hudson	J. Storey Clouston	Designed to out-do Errol's box-office success in "Sally" and "Clothes Make the Pirate." Directed by Fred Newmeyer—and he's a comedy director!

SPECIAL! Milton Sills in "Men of Steel" With Doris Kenyon

The epic of steel. Directed by George Archainbaud, under the supervision of Earl Hudson.

Titles	Stars and Casts	Producers	Authors	Box-office Angles
TOO MUCH MONEY	Lewis Stone, Anna Q. Nilsson	Earl Hudson	Israel Zangwill	Lead a wife from luxury and she'll find her own way back. John Francis Dillon, director of "Flaming Youth" and "We Moderns," carries that theme into a swift-moving story of London today.
THE RECKLESS LADY	Belle Bennett, Ben Lyon, Lois Moran, James Kirkwood, Lowell Sherman, Charles Murray	Robert Kane	Philip Gibbs	Philip Gibbs' best-seller brings one of the finest casts of stars ever assembled. A graphic picture of Monte Carlo and a woman who gambled against Fate. Directed by Howard Higgin.
THE DANCER OF PARIS	Conway Tearle, Dorothy Mackaill, Robert Cain	Robert Kane	Michael Arlen	Michael Arlen's best story screened at the crest of his vogue. Paris is the background for this drama of a little dancer whose feet tapped joyfully—then in despair.
THE FAR CRY	Blanche Sweet, Jack Mulhall, Myrtle Stedman, Hobart Bosworth	June Mathis	Arthur Richman	Arthur Richman's international stage-success, brought to a terrific spectacular climax when flames sweep upon the feasters at a Venetian pageant and leap across canals after escaping gondolas. Thrills, comedy, heart-punch!
THE DESERT HEALER	Lewis Stone, Barbara Bedford, Tully Marshall, Ann Rork.	Sam Rork Marion Fairfax	E. M. Hull	Written by the author of "The Sheik." Read by eight million already. It's a showman's picture by the man who gave you "Ponjola" and "Clothes Make the Pirate." Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
MEMORY LANE	Conrad Nagel, Eleanor Boardman	Louis B. Mayer	Original by John M. Stahl and Benjamin Glazer	A cast of popular players in one of those perfect slices of life that only John M. Stahl can bring to the screen.
THE GIRL FROM MONTMARTRE	Lewis Stone, Barbara La Marr	Sawyer and Lubin	Anthony Pryde	Sunlight and shadows of a Spanish island blended into a gripping story of a woman's past. Directed by Alfred E. Green.
THE SECOND CHANCE	Anna Q. Nilsson, Huntley Gordon	June Mathis	Mrs. Wilson Woodrow	Another best-seller by one of America's favorites. Thrilling race-track episodes, scenes that sweep from penitentiary cells to fashionable Fifth Avenue all make excellent audience stuff.
20TH CENTURY UNLIMITED	Lloyd Hughes, Mary Astor, Alec Francis, Dolores Del Rio	Edwin Carewe	Philip Gibbs	Adapted from Philip Gibbs' popular novel, "Heirs Apparent," a story not of war but of the aftermath, when the tides of glory ebbed to broken streams of life moving through the glare of London's lamps.
PALS FIRST	Cast to be announced	Edwin Carewe	Lee Wilson Dodd	Edwin Carewe calls this one of the best pieces of screen material that have come his way. The drama of a hobo who inherited a southern estate and of eyes of love that saw through him into incredible shadows.
MOLASSES	Cast to be announced	M. C. Levee	(Original)	Rum-row pictured for the first time. The Bahamas, the sea, the upperworld and underworld provide the strange figures of thrill and action that Al Santell directs.
GOOD LUCK	Conway Tearle	E. M. Asher	Seymour Hicks and Ian Hay	Straight from Drury Lane—and you know what that means! A big spectacular melodrama of thundering hoofs and throbbing hearts. Your box-office knows all about it!
THE SAVAGE	May McAvoy and Ben Lyon	Earl Hudson	Ernest Pascal	Here's the newest idea in surprise stories, commencing with a South Sea romance and developing the thrill of the newspaper world—an inside story told by the man who wrote "The Dark Swan" and "Hell's Highroad."

SPECIAL! "The Viennese Medley"—Conway Tearle and Anna Q. Nilsson

First National's spectacular "Secret Special" produced by June Mathis, directed by Curt Rehfeld.

Principals in Ufa Deal Are Back in U. S.

Wynne-Jones, Kent and Friedman Won't Talk

Frederick Wynne-Jones, head of UFA-USA, who represents UFA in the United States, returned on January 13 on the Majestic, but declined, for the present, to comment on the agreement reached for exchanging feature films between UFA and Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer, Paramount and Universal.

"I was very deeply impressed," Mr. Wynne-Jones said to a reporter for Moving Picture World, "with the absolute fairness of the M.-G.-M.-Paramount proposals to UFA. No attempt was made to take even the slightest advantage of the situation, as it existed. I do not care to discuss any of the details of the transaction, at this time."

The voyage was a trying one and Mr. Wynne-Jones avoided his offices in the Loew State Building, saying he was going home to get a needed rest.

Sidney R. Kent of Famous Players and Mr. Friedman of M.-G.-M. returned on the same boat. Neither would discuss the deal.

Wouldn't That Be A Real Mean Trick?

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Cincinnati, January 12.

It appears that Cincinnati is in the midst of an epidemic of theatre robberies. After bandits made a rich haul at the Capitol and Palace Theatres recently, they tackled the safe at the Cox, a stock house, but failed to find any money.

Now the Aragon Theatre at Twelfth and Vine streets has been visited by burglars who forced open a door and stole a projection machine valued at $350 and twenty electric light bulbs valued at $10. Maybe they will use the money and machine to start a competing house.

Avert Cleveland Panic

A short circuit in the projection machine, resulting in the explosion of the film at the Lakewood Theatre, Gladys and Detroit avenues, Cleveland, occurred recently when approximately 750 patrons were in the house. Although the auditorium was filled with smoke, a panic was averted by the organist assuring the audience that there was no danger and playing jazz selections. Antone Joniak, projectionist, was painfully burned.

French Aroused by Sale Of Film Rights to U. S.

See Local Producers "Asleep at the Switch"—Jean Sapene Will Urge Quota System and Increase in Tariff

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Paris, January 5.

French film circles are greatly excited these days by reason of certain incidents that occurred at a recent banquet of the Parisian press to which representatives of the film journals had been invited. There had been much comment not only in film papers but in every section of the French press on the fact that Americans had twice come into France, had taken specifically French subjects and had filmed them so well as to make them great box office pictures for the French exhibitors. The films alluded to are "Scaramouche" and "Madame Sans Gene."

One of the speakers at the banquet called attention to the fact that a million francs had been spent for advertising "Madame Sans Gene" in France alone. This was the remark that led to the abandonment of the set program for speeches and caused the after dinner orators to take sides for or against the persistent American invasion. The opinion seemed to be that the Americans were really not to blame. The French producers had had the same chances, and perhaps even better ones, but had been asleep at the switch, or words to that effect.

M. Jean Sapene, who takes the part of the native film and who, it is said, has had much to do with recent re-organization of the French Pathe, will eventually carry out his ideas, according to his friends. These ideas are chiefly the introduction of a quota system and a raising of the tariff on American films, whether positive or negative.

It is to be noted that the attitude of the French theatre owner is one of strict business neutrality. All efforts to commit the organization of French exhibitors to a preference for French films as such have thus far at least been unavailing. Their only standard of value is the report of the box office and not the question of nationality. If there is to be "a European film concert" or, as one man has expressed it, "a Locarno of the screen" with an edge directed against the dreaded competitor from across the sea, the leaders of the movement will hardly be found in France. The latest statistics on the percentage of American films in France show that we supply a little more than 80 per cent. This is an improvement over the previous year of about 5 per cent.

Wisconsin Plans Movie Mask Balls

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Milwaukee, January 13.

Every effort will be made by the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin to raise enough funds to send its full quota of eleven delegates to the national convention, according to Henry Staab, executive secretary at Milwaukee.

With this in view the association has planned a series of movie mask balls to be held at the Marigold Gardens beginning January 27. At each dance and entertainment prizes will be awarded.

The mask balls will be held every Wednesday night. Proceeds of the affairs will be given to the convention fund, and in event enough money is raised the entire quota of delegates will be sent to the national convention to represent Wisconsin. Four mask balls in all have been arranged and different programs have been completed for each event to secure capacity houses.

Fox Man Becomes Ascher Director

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Chicago, January 11.

Commissioner John Zanft, vice-president and general manager of the Fox Circuit of Theatres, has been elected a member of the board of directors of the Ascher Bros. circuit of theatres in Chicago.

Mr. Zanft, who has been the ostensible head of the Fox theatre for many years, is regarded as one of the keenest showmen in eastern motion picture circles. He is largely responsible for the growth of the Fox circuit from a local string to one of the great theatre circuits of the country.

In addition to his theatrical activities Mr. Zanft takes an active interest in local and state affairs and holds the honorary title of commissioner as the result of his appointment by Governor Alfred E. Smith to the board of managers of the New York State Reformatory.

St. Louis Now Contemplating Booking Pool

Mogler Compiling Much Data from Other Cities

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

St. Louis, January 12.

Independent motion picture exhibitors of St. Louis, Mo., are considering the formation of a booking pool to solve the economic problems presented by chain competition and other conditions that have developed recently.

Joseph Mogler, president of the St. Louis Motion Picture Exhibitors League, admitted that data is being gathered with a view of launching a similar arrangement in St. Louis.

Tentative plans contemplate more than fifty of the 108 theatres booking film in St. Louis and its suburbs entering the booking arrangement. However, no formal pledges have been taken as yet, since the details of the plan of operation have not been decided on.

Mogler said it was probable that every second-run theatre in St. Louis would be asked to join the new pool, including the twenty-five houses operated by the St. Louis Amusement Company, which is controlled by Skouras Brothers and Harry Koplar.

As is known, William Fox will be in St. Louis about January 15 to meet Mogler and other members of the exhibitor league to discuss the first-run situation in St. Louis. The exhibitors are opposed to any additional theatre construction in St. Louis at present and hope to convince Mr. Fox that he should refrain from building a large first-run house here. An effort will be made to have the existing first-run theatre take care of Fox pictures on an equitable basis.

Buettner Foresees The Dove of Peace

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Albany, N. Y., January 13.

Characterizing the entire trouble as being due to a group of jealous politicians in the business, Louis Buettner of Cohoes, N. Y., chairman of the Albany Zone Committee, declared recently that the whole situation between the Hays organization and the Albany and Buffalo zones would shortly be ironed out in a way that would be satisfactory to the exhibitor-members of the two zones.

Mr. Buettner said that the board of directors of the two zones would probably go to New York in the near future for a conference with Mr. Hays.

Lubitsch Ill

Warner Bros. were relieved to learn this week that Ernst Lubitsch is on the road to recovery from what had threatened to be a serious illness.

The director was stricken last week with an acute attack of kidney trouble and for a day or two it looked as though a serious operation would be necessary. Fortunately Mr. Lubitsch took a turn for the better just as the surgeons had decided to use the knife.

Reports state that the director, although still confined to his Beverly Hills home, is past all danger unless complications set in.

Friedman Promoted

Joseph Friedman, for several years manager of Universal's Detroit exchange and a veteran executive in the Universal sales forces, has joined the Universal home office staff as the new contact executive, a position created in that organization by Arthur Kane. Kane resigned some time ago to enter the production field. Friedman's new activities will be concerned with the maintenance of liaison between the studios at Universal City and the Universal sales force.

Lease the Delmonte

Jack Weil, independent picture distributor, and Ray Miller, who formerly operated the Grand Theatre, Mexico, Mo., have leased the Delmonte Theatre, St. Louis, from Fred L. Cornwell. It will become a vaudeville and picture house. Miller will have active charge.

Wellston Changes

The Wellston Theatre on Easton avenue in Wellston, Mo., on January 16 will be taken over by the Laventhal circuit under a ten-year lease. Fred Robinson, former owner, will be paid an annual rental of $12,500 for this 1,200-seat house.

Chinese Favor More American Film Theatres

Representative Is Here to Stir Interest

Motion pictures are having such an influence for good in China that the Chinese Government has sent a representative to the United States to encourage the building of more theatres in China by Americans and for the wider distribution of American films to the population of 400,000,000.

China's representative is Sum Nung Au-Young of Peking, formerly a student at Columbia University and now Commissioner of Social and Economic Research in America and Europe for the Chinese Government.

Mr. Au-Young is conferring with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America, of which Will H. Hays is president, and with various motion picture distributors. Before coming to New York he spent several weeks conferring with producers in Hollywood.

"China wants American pictures," said Mr. Au-Young. "At present there are less than eighty theatres in all of China and these are heavily patronized.

T. O. C. C. Dance On February 12

The Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce of New York City announces its annual dinner and dance on Lincoln's Birthday, February 12. This function will be the sixth of its kind and the Hotel Astor has again been selected.

The T. O. C. C. is desirous of obtaining a new clubhouse and therefore every effort is being made to make the function an unprecedented financial success.

In former years only the Gold Room of the Hotel Astor was utilized, but this year's plans are so extensive that the entire chain of ball and banquet rooms have been acquired. Vincent Lopez and his celebrated Casa Lopez Orchestra, augmented for the occasion, will furnish the dance music. With Lopez will be his famous dance team, Addison Fowler and Florence Tamara.

The Ball Committee is headed by Lee A. Ochs. With him are S. I. Berman, Hy Gainsboro, J. Louis Geller, J. Arthur Hirsch, Joe Hornstein, Charles Moses, J. L. Ryan and M. D. Schwartz.

A Zealous Worker

When Mrs. F. E. Brooks, the Evanston, Ill., movie censor, finished with censoring the film "Powder and Paint," there was little left besides the captions, so the management of the Campus Theatre decided not to show the remnants of the picture and refunded the money to patrons.

Scores Commend Latta on Stand

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Des Moines, Jan. 12.

The story of C. J. Latta, exhibitor at Shenandoah, Ia., who advertised that he had a poor picture one week and did not want the public to spend its money for the show, has not yet quit going the rounds. It has been the subject of newspaper and magazine articles and editorial comment all over the country, and the subject for many after dinner talks. Even speakers before Ad Clubs have held the Latta case up as a remarkable case of frankness in advertising.

Mr. Latta is staring a file in which to keep the letters that are pouring in from all over the country. The superintendent of the St. Joseph, Mo., Humane Society has written him that the fathers and mothers of the community will surely support him. H. B. Rice, amusement inspector of San Antonio, Tex., commended him and asked to be told which film it was that he thus advertised.

Charles Moning, manager of the Colonial Amusement Co., Plymouth, Mass., wrote that he had long employed a similar policy in his own theatre, and he congratulated Mr. Latta for his stand. A man from Bangor, Maine, wrote that honesty pays in the long run.

Jazzbo Club to Jazz At Astor on March 26

The first annual ball of the Jazzbo Club, the social organization of Producers Distributing Corporation, will be held on March 26 at the Hotel Astor, New York.

Plans are being made to make this affair one of the most noteworthy events in the social activities of motion picture circles. An elaborate supper will be served at midnight.

M. P. T. O. A. Meeting

The Administrative Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America will meet at national headquarters at 745 Seventh avenue on January 26 and 27. The first session will be called sharply at 2 p. m. The meetings are of special importance.

Seider May Call Conference on First National

He Professes to See Its Members in Danger

The M. P. T. O. A. will call a conference of First National franchise holders, large and small, announced Joseph M. Seider, business manager, at a meeting of Western Pennsylvania theatre owners at the Hotel William Penn, Pittsburgh, on January 6. He said:

"I am addressing myself to the First National franchise holders. Is there any danger of your being disfranchised? Do some of you believe it will be necessary to engage counsel to go into the affairs of your company? If there is anything to be done and if there is anything that can be done, you will find a haven in the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America."

He indicated that the call for a conference will be sent through the next issue of the Official Bulletin.

First National officials had no comment to make.

Wisconsin Showmen Bar Medicine Show

Theatre owners of Whitewater, Wis., waged a successful fight against a medicine show which had planned to invade the town and which advertised stage attractions and motion pictures each night during the week in the National Guard Armory.

K. G. Uglow, of the Strand Theatre, heading the fight, appealed to the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin with headquarters in Milwaukee, and Henry Staab, executive secretary, took the matter up with National Guard officials at Madison. The medicine show contract was canceled by the National Guard office at Madison and the theatre owners continued to present their regular programs without worry of invasion.

Williams Arrives

J. D. Williams has announced to the British press that "Nell Gwyn," the first release of British National Pictures, will open the new Plaza Theatre in Lower Regent street, London, during February. He has just arrived in New York to arrange for distribution in this country.

Slight Fire Damages

Fire recently broke out in the engine room of Park Hall Theatre, Oakley, Ohio, before the theatre opened for the day. The damage was slight.

OBITUARY

John G. Sheehy, one-time manager of the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, died at the Melbourne Hotel, St. Louis, on January 5, following a week's illness with pneumonia. He had been manager of the Greenwich Village Follies. He started his theatrical career as an usher for the old Havlin's Theatre in St. Louis in 1885.

First in 1926

The first names to appear on the new marriage license book in the office of the clerk and recorder of the City and County of Denver, Col., are those of A. H. Vincent, assistant manager of the Paramount theatres in Denver, and his bride, formerly Miss Ruth Fuqua of Denver.

Determined to be the first to secure a license to be married in 1926, Mr. Vincent and his bride routed out the clerk and recorder at 3 a. m. on New Year's morning. They were married that day and are now living at the Mills Hotel in Denver, but plan to leave in the near future for a honeymoon trip in the East.

Nevins, Typical American Boy, Likes Movies

Prefers Theatres to Broadway Lights

The typical American boy likes the movies.

Joseph Nevins, 13 years old, chosen the most representative American boy by the Boys' Club of Washington, D. C., showed his preferences plainly on his visit last week to New York City, his reward for winning the honor, by attending the movies instead of marveling at Broadway. The boy not only spent the first evening in a picture theatre, but visited them regularly the following days of his visit, accompanied by his mother, Mrs. John Nevins. Dad is with a Washington paper.

Hoffman New Manager Of Paramount Studio

The appointment of Milton E. Hoffman as executive manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood is announced by B. P. Schulberg and Hector Turnbull, associate producers.

Mr. Hoffman, who is now production manager at the Cecil B. DeMille' plant in Culver City, will join Paramount immediately to carry out plans for the installation of the production forces in the newly purchased quarters —the twenty-six acre United Studios.

Many Pathe Employees In Service Long Terms

Just 434 Faithful Over Five Years, 353 From Five to Nine, 64 From Ten to Fourteen, 17 Over Fifteen—Award Emblems

The remarkable record of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in having 27 per cent. of its employees in service with the firm for five years or more, proves conclusively that there is stability in the motion picture business.

Twenty-seven per cent., or 434 of approximately 1,600 employees, have been with the house of Pathe for five years or more, while 353 Patheites have from five to nine years of service to their credit; 64 have from ten to fourteen years' record, and 17 have fifteen years or more of continuous service with Pathe.

To celebrate the terms of long service and express appreciation of its employees' loyalty, Pathe presented diplomas and gold emblems to those in service five years or more in a ceremony unique in motion picture annals. Seventy-five of the home office staff were summoned to the office of Vice-President and General Manager Elmer Pearson where each was presented with a gold emblem and a diploma. The presentations were made by Mr. Pearson, who signed each diploma with Paul Fuller, Jr., president of Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Following the home office ceremonies, the presentations were duplicated in every one of the thirty-four branches throughout the United States and in the laboratories in Bound Brook and Jersey City.

Leon Franconi, manager of the Film Editing Department, a seventeen-year man, is the oldest employee at the home office. Others at this office with long-time service records are: Samuel Macknovitch, 15 years; Gaston L. Chanier, 13; Brendan P. Egan, 13; Mario Frejmann, 13; P. Allen Parsons, 12; Manuel Rivera Regalado, 12; John W. Kyle, 11; Sadie Gilde, 11; Arthur Rosseau, 11, and John Humm, 11.

At the Bound Brook Laboratory the leaders in point of service are: Antoinette Despland, 18 years; Thomas Fellows, 18; Katherine Furtner, 18; Josephine Bullock, 18; Reba Kershner, 18; Edward Mangeot, 18; Alex Pluhar, 17; Walter Conklin, 17; Andrew Hoagland, 16; Katherine Gulick, 16.

At Jersey City, Juliette Champion is just what her name states, with a record of 18 years of service.

At Pathe News, Nettie Kuver and John A. Bartone top the list with records of 11 years, followed closely for honors by Editor Emanuel Cohen, who has headed the pioneer newsfilm for ten years.

Five, ten and fifteen year emblems and diplomas have been awarded to those named above in recognition of their respective lengths of service.

Charge Soldiers With Burglary

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

San Francisco, January 12.

The attempted burglary of the safe of the Monterey Theatres Company at Monterey, Cal., on the morning of January 4 has resulted in the arrest of Lieutenant Clarence Aikin and Supply Sergeant Charles Barnes, of the United States Army, stationed at the Presidio, Monterey.

Earlier in the evening, Mark G. Keller, manager of the theatre company operating these houses, went to the office to place money in the safe and was held up by a masked man in the hallway. Instead of complying with the demand that he hand over the cash, he slipped into the office, locked the door and shouted out of the window for help. The men fled and the money was placed in the safe.

Later a patrolman passed the building, and hearing a noise ascended to the second floor. Here he saw two men drop a kit of tools and attempt to hide in a closet. Not until he had fired a shot through the door did they come out. On the way to the police station the men broke and ran, but one was recaptured after a chase and the other was located shortly afterward at the barracks.

Denver Film Men Elect Officers

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Denver, January 12.

As a result of a semi-annual election on January 4, the following new officers were installed in the Denver Film Board of Trade for the first six months of the new year:

President, J. H. Ashby, First National; vice-president, W. E. Matthews, F. B. O.; secretary, A. P. Archer, Educational; executive secretary, treasurer and general counsel, Duke W. Dunbar.

Members of the Board of Arbitration who will represent the Denver Film Board of Trade for the coming period are Charles R. Gilmour, Warner Brothers; W. E. Matthews, F. B. O.; S. B. Rahn, Pathe. The new Fire Committee is composed of G. E. Rosenwald, Universal; Charles R. Gilmour, Warner Brothers; W. E. Matthews, F. B. O.

Rossman Appointed

Earl Rossman, producer of Pathe's "Kivalina of the Ice Lands," has received the notable distinction of being appointed official photographer of the Detroit Arctic expedition.

No Soft Pedal

There is a unique endurance contest these days at the Albany Theatre in Albany, N. Y., due to the fact that bowling alleys have been installed on the floor above the theatre.

The only music is furnished by a pianist. When the crash of the balls is loudest she crescendos with might and main.

The noise of the bowlers is so great that it has been necessary to rearrange the playing schedule of the two pianists so that there is now no interval when the piano is not heard from 10 a. m. until 11 p. m.

Balaban & Katz Transfer Many House Managers

Zetterholm Made Assistant to Immerman

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)

Chicago, January 13.

Several changes were made during the past week in the managers and assistants of the various theatres of Balaban & Katz. M. E. Zetterholm has been named assistant to Manager Walter Immerman of the Chicago Theatre and Harry Potter has been made treasurer.

R. L. Davis has been transferred from the Roosevelt to be assistant to Manager L. H. Dally of the Tivoli, who was formerly at the Riveria. J. B. Casey has been advanced to treasurer.

H. DeRonchi has been named assistant to Miles Concannon, manager of the Uptown, and C. D. Krepps is now treasurer of that theatre. Frank Chamski has been named assistant manager of the Central Park and A. Berg, formerly treasurer of the Chicago, has been advanced to managership of the Roosevelt, with J. G. Sauve as assistant and Carl M. Eggers as treasurer. G. R. Fouche is now manager of the McVickers, with Roy Bruder as assistant and Earl Doob as treasurer.

Jesse Crawford, premier solo organist of Balaban & Katz, has gone on tour and opened last week at the State Theatre in Detroit for a limited engagement. He will be away for some time on an extended tour of the larger eastern houses of the Publix circuit.

Lasky a Major

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production, has been sworn in as a major of the Officers' Reserve of the United States Signal Corps.

Canadians See Favorable Year for War Films

Five Already Set For General Release

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Toronto, January 12.

Judging by activities in moving picture and government circles, Canada is in for a season of outstanding war record pictures, practically all of which have not been publicly screened in the Dominion before.

Of unusual interest is the announcement at Toronto that Regal Films, Ltd., will release the Imperial war picture, "Ypres," as a special production starting in February. This is to have its first runs under brilliant auspices. It shows many activities of the Canadian Corps in Flanders during the war years.

Another indication of the trend toward official war pictures in Canada at this date is the fact that the first presentation of a "new" subject, "The Canadians at Mons," had its first special screening at Ottawa on January 5 before a large gathering of military officers and representatives of the government. This picture, about 2,000 feet, is the property of the Canadian Militia Council, but is to have public showing.

Still another big war feature, "The Battle of Arras," belonging to the Canadian Archives at Ottawa, is ready for public release. This is a five-reel record of the fighting in that sector. It was given a special pre-release 6, after which the print was sent screening at Ottawa on January 6.

Two features that have made excellent headway during recent months in Canada have been "The Battle of Zeebrugge" and "Canadians in Action," a review of the war insofar as the Canadian corps was concerned from the Battle of Langemarck to the occupation of Cologne.

"Mike" Shea Opens New Buffalo House

Buffalo, January 13.

With a distinguished audience of city officials, theatre celebrities, motion picture magnates, exchange officials, exhibitors, newspaper men and guests, Shea's new Buffalo theatre will open with a private presentation on Friday evening, January 15. A special train from New York will bring Adolph Zukor, Marcus Loew, Richard H. Rowland, E. F. Albee, J. J. Murdock, Sam Katz, Harold B. Franklin, several screen stars and others. The Shea interests in Buffalo have recently been merged with the Publix Theatres Corporation. The guests will be received by Michael Shea, president of the Shea Operating Company, and Vincent R. McFaul, manager of the new company recently organized to operate the houses under the Shea-Publix banner.

De Mille to Study Wisby Film Plan

THE Wisby Plan, presented to the motion picture industry by Moving Picture World, has so interested Charles Behan, of Producers Distributing Corporation, that he will introduce Hrolf Wisby to Cecil De Mille on the latter's arrival in New York City in about two weeks and afford the master director the oppottunity to examine it. .This plan of production, Mr. Behan beleives, has two especial benefits—the production of more original pictures and the saving of much money. .He has given it what he calls "as surface examination," and he is satisfied that it has much of value.

Such a plan, assuring, as it does, a continuity of effort on the part of all human units engaged in producting a picture, should particularly appeal to Mr. De Mille because of the magnitude of every picture he makes. De Mille pictures, because of their unified plots, striking backgrounds, careful attention to detail and wealth of imagination require much preparation and much personal supervision by Mr. De Mille himself, and the Wisby Plan, it is felt, would make it a more simple matter for him to keep his fingers at all times directly on the pulse of the picture.

Saxe Building More Theatres

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Milwaukee, January 13.

Saxe Amusement Enterprises, headed by Tom Saxe, will have two more large picture houses added to their list of Milwaukee theatres in 1926, according to announcement. Milwaukee's theatregoers have centered their interest on the opening night of the Tower Theatre, set for March 1.

The Tower, located at seventh and Wells Street, will be a show house equal to any of the downtown theatres and one of the largest neighborhood theatres in the city.

Architects are working on plans for the Saxe house to be located at Farwell Avenue, near North Avenue. Construction work will begin soon and the theatre is expected to be opened before 1927. The cost is estimated at $800,000. It will seat 2,500.

The most recent addition to the Saxe theatres is the Retlaw at Fond du Lac, Wis., which was opened December 26. This opening brought the total of theatres operated throughout the state by Saxe Amusement Enterprises to twenty-nine.

TO IMPORT FILMS

The National Administrative Council of Uruguay, states American Consul O. Gaylord Marsh, at Montevideo, in a recent report to the Department of Commerce, has appropriated 2,000 pesos to purchase moving picture films showing modern agricultural methods employed in the United States. These films are to be displayed by the Information and Educational Section of the Direction of Agriculture of Uruguay.

Fleischer Succeeds Fadman at Red Seal

Edwin Miles Fadman has resigned as president and general manager of the Red Seal Pictures Corporation, short reel distributors. His resignation in no way affects the policies of the company, which will be carried on as heretofore, nor does it affect his personal stock holdings in the Red Seal Pictures Corporation. Mr. Fadman will sail for Europe to enter there on a program of novelty productions for American distribution.

Max Fleischer, creator of the Out of the Inkwell product, the Ko-Ko one-reel antics and the Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes, was elected president of Red Seal immediately after Mr. Fadman resigned.

SKOURAS STOCK ACTIVE

The annual report of the St. Louis Stock Exchange shows that during the year 1925 41,299 shares of Skouras A stock changed hands on the exchange while 4,504 shares of St. Louis Amusement Company stock was bought and sold. The records of the stocks for the year were: St. Louis Amusement, $63 high, $50 low, and $54.40 close for the year; Skouras A, $68 high, $36 low, and $52 close.

PLAN NEW CENSORS

Following the reorganization of the Board of Moving Picture Censors for New Brunswick, announcement has been made at Halifax that the Censor Board for Nova Scotia has been dissolved and new members are to be appointed for 1926. The inference is given that there has been no complaint regarding the Nova Scotia board as previously constituted.

Several Houses Opening Soon In Windy City

1926 Outlook for New Theatres Beats 1925

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Chicago, January 13.

The outlook for new theatres in the Chicago territory for 1926 is ahead of that of the past year. The following new theatres are scheduled for early opening this year:

Balaban & Katz will open the new Randolph street theatre in the Masonic building in March, and the new Howard avenue theatre, which will be operated by the Clark Howard Theatre Company, about two months later.

Andrew Karzas says that the new North Center Theatre will open early in February. The house has been built in horseshoe shape and will have some very attractive interior decorations. Pictures and stage presentations will be featured, and a large orchestra will be used for the musical programs.

The Ascher circuit opened the Terminal Theatre this month at Lawrence and Spaulding avenue, and the other houses under construction by this circuit will be opened at the earliest possible moment, according to Ralph Kettering, publicity manager.

Lubliner & Trinz is pushing completion of the new Belmont Theatre at Belmont and Lincoln avenue, the new Grove on the South Side and the new Tower on East 63d street, and plans to have the houses open before the summer.

The Schoenstadt circuit is pushing the work on the new Piccadilly in Hyde Park and the reconstruction of the Atlantic.

The National Theatres Corporation is rushing work on the Avalon Theatre on the South Side and the new Paradise Theatre on the West Side. This last house will be the largest of the circuit.

Ottawa Papers Grant Reviews

(Special Dispatch to MOVING PICTURE WORLD)

Ottawa, January 23.

The leading exhibitors of Ottawa, Ontario, have been granted an important concession by the two newspapers, the Journal and the Citizen, in the way of a permanent arrangement for staff reviews on all picture programs. While the local press has always granted space for criticisms of dramatic presentations and recitals, this is the first time that the papers have conceded the point of giving reviews on picture presentations.

Those who now benefit include Manager J. M. Franklin, B. F. Keith's Theatre; Manager Leonard Bishop, Regent Theatre; Manager O'Regan, Imperial, and Manager Don Stapleton of the Centre. These are the ones who are advertising regularly with display announcements in the local dailies.

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

THE "NANTUCKET SLEIGH RIDE"—John Barrymore and his maniacal crew getting a foamy tow from "Moby Dick," the great albino whale, against which this mad and motley crew has sworn vengeance to the last harpoon. A scene from Warner Brothers' "The Sea Beast," in which Barrymore, as a young seaman and later as a half-crazed whaling captain, gives an inspired performance.

Beginning—a new chapter in trade papers

HERE begins a NEW chapter in the trade papers of the moving picture industry. The BEGINNING of a CHAPTER. It will not be long until the Chalmers Publishing Company has written an entire new BOOK on the subject.

Back in 1907 when the drama which is called the silent one needed a VOICE, that voice came from the HEART of J. P. Chalmers

Every trade paper that followed, early and late, has been but a PROOF pulled from the ORIGINAL ENGRAVING that was the CREATION of J. P. Chalmers.

Every voice that followed has been but an ECHO.

Today the voice of Moving Picture World is going on the air clearer and stronger than ever before.

Beginning with this issue, we are making a number of changes in the physical appearance of Moving Picture World; we are giving a new form of TREATMENT to its NEWS PAGES and its SERVICE departments; we are ADDING to its staff. We are laying the FOUNDATION for a service which the Chalmers Publishing Company ALONE from points of view of organization MAN POWER, STABILITY, RESOURCES, and DESIRE is prepared to give to a great and most active industry.

The DESIRE of Moving Picture World to serve a 1926 model film industry in a 1926 manner will be translated through its pages in just THAT form—a 1926 manner.

And it is important to remember that the value of any trade paper to any industry is in direct proportion to its DESIRE to serve that industry.

This issue begins Chapter ONE of the 1926 Moving Picture Trade Paper. The rest of the book will be written—not forgetting that you are a human being as well as a business man—in this LARGER sense of MODERN service.

Moving Picture World is a grand old name. As you will see, it is a grand NEW name with a BRAND new significance.

WILLIAM J. REILLY.

Distinguished Picture People

By

COVARRUBIAS

R. F. WOODHULL

President, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

"Pete" Woodhull has lent to the office of president of M. P. T. O. A. a spirit of kindliness and optimism. This spirit reflected in his face and actions, was responsible for the kindly manner in which Covarrubias treated his caricature after meeting him. For Covarrubias is described in his own book, "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans," as "The Murderer." Covarrubias has pictured Mr. Woodhull in the manner in which he is best known to the industry—behind the speaker's table. Then—just as soon as he can get back to the Baker Theatre in Dover, N. J., Mr. Woodhull practices what he preaches. It is fitting that the first exhibitor of the land should be chosen to head the list of "Distinguished Picture People," a weekly caricature Hall of Fame based upon achievement in this industry, and given form by the genius of a great artist, Miguel Covarrubias.

Something That Is Constructive—By Bill Reilly

Covarrubias, Lion of Hour Joins Moving Picture World

ON the opposite page, as one of the NEW features of the NEW Moving Picture World, we inaugurate a series of caricatures by Miguel Covarrubias, the artistic LION of the hour, author of the book, "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans."

EDDIE CANTOR
In "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans"

OTTO H. KAHN
In "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans"

That book title is what, in this business we term "BOX-OFFICE." And so is Mr. Covarrubias' WORK. In his very early twenties, this young Mexican is in more DEMAND from American publishing firms in ALL fields than any other artist of the day. It is a pleasure to bring his GENIUS to the film industry EXCLUSIVELY through Moving Picture World. We repeat: We are editing a book for HUMAN BEINGS as well as for BUSINESS MEN.

BABE RUTH
In "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans"

MARY PICKFORD
In "The Prince of Wales and Other Famous Americans"

Once a week, in Moving Picture World, Mr. Covarrubias will size up a face well known to the industry and give you a line analysis of the PERSONALITY behind it.

Carl Van Vechten, the eminent writer, in his preface to Mr. Covarrubias' book, says: "His caricatures almost invariably go deeply behind the mere SCULPTURAL FORMATION of the face. They are often a complete CRITICISM of personality. Moreover, the artist does not depend on ridiculous collocations of figures or witty captions, in the manner of Max Beerbohm, for his effects. His arrangement of the LINES of the FACE alone tells the story, occasionally, it must be admitted, a cruel story."

Readers of Moving Picture World will get, in the work of Miguel Covarrubias, the best money can buy. The accompanying caricatures are from the book published by Alfred A. Knopf.

Most Representative American Boy Is An Ardent Screen "Fan"

JOSEPH NEVINS is a 13-year-old lad who was chosen by the Boys' Club of Washington, D. C., as the MOST REPRESENTATIVE American boy. He was given a trip to New York in honor of his selection.

With his mother Joseph came to town on last Wednesday evening. He was asked what HE wanted to do on his FIRST NIGHT in New York.

The most representative American boy did not want to see the lights of Broadway, or ride in the subway, or do any one of a score of spectacular things that MIGHT have popped out of his store of boyish desires.

HE WANTED TO GO TO THE MOVIES!

And he WENT to the movies!

The PROFESSIONAL movie hater will find therein a sermon on the baneful hold which the moving picture has on the mind of the young. The story lends itself easily to SUCH treatment. But the professional movie haters never knew, as children, the FASCINATION of the SCREEN. They were old and BRAIN-BOUND when the picture flower was bursting into FULL bloom.

"Suffer the children to come unto Me for theirs is the KINGDOM of HEAVEN."

Suffer the children to come unto the screen for theirs is the KINGDOM of IMAGINATION.

What's RIGHT with the movies?

The MOST REPRESENTATIVE American boy, on his first night in New York, goes to see them!

Richard Strauss' Opera-Movie Opens Shining Field to Screen

RICHARD STRAUSS, the greatest LIVING composer, has just produced his opera, "Rosenkavalier," on the screen in Dresden. The picture-opera was accompanied by a score especially adapted by Strauss himself.

The composer was asked some time ago to write the music for the script. Instead, Strauss suggested that he write the SCRIPT for the MUSIC. And "Rosenkavalier" was made in that manner, just contrary-wise to the usual production procedure. With a metronome, Strauss worked out the picture with the director, the action in picture FOLLOWING the theme of the music.

The moving picture has vastly broadened the appeal and the acceptance of good music. When men like Richard Strauss and Michael Bohnen, the great OPERA SINGER, who appeared, SILENT on the screen in "Rosenkavalier" turn to the moving picture as a means of ENLARGING the scope of music, a shining, green field opens to the screen. And millions of NEW friends of the now so-called "silent" drama are made.

In this connection it is interesting to note the manner in which James Fitzpatrick is handling his new "Famous Melodies" series for Pathe. Taking the first of the series, "Songs of Ireland," for instance, Fitzpatrick has made a picture which is a SCENIC, a STORY, and a SONG. Suiting the action to the melody and the melody to the action he has filmed such well-loved songs as "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms," "Killarney," "Peggy and Her Low Backed Car." That's SOMETHING CONSTRUCTIVE.

The picture can go farther in SELF DEVELOPMENT as a means of entertainment than any other form of entertainment known today. It has, more than any other art, the qualities of FLEXIBILITY and ABSORPTION.

Any other form of entertainment, such as vaudeville, which wants to make official war on the moving picture, is in for a licking.

Radio-Movie Further Shows Reaching Power of the Screen

NOT long after writing the above, we heard a "dress rehearsal" of the FIRST MOVIE to be broadcast over the RADIO. Station WJZ of the Radio Corporation of America and First National co-operated on this innovation, whereby a 30-minute playlet, adapted from "Too Much Money," featuring Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson, was put on the AIR. The screen's first "Mike" test was a success.

Here again the picture demonstrated its quality of ABSORPTION. As Sam Spring said, two GIANTS were hitched in tandem. The story, as broadcasted, planted the plot of "Too Much Money," leaving off at a point where the INTEREST of the audience had been worked up to the "desire-to-see" point. Acting, in other words, as an advance story on the picture listened to by some 12,000,000 people.

This was the first of a series of such RADIO-MOVIES to be broadcast by First National over WJZ.

The advertising men of the picture business should be able to SWAP a RADIO tie-up with manufacturing concerns using the air, for MERCHANDISING tie-ups executed by the field forces of the FILM COMPANIES, and participated in by the EXHIBITOR. There are several ways in which a co-operative plan of this nature could be made acceptable to all parties concerned, INCLUDING the radio audience.

Radio, in several ways, has been used by the picture industry for some time. First National, however, is the first to broadcast a radio movie. A most CONSTRUCTIVE move.

Universal Over 2 Years Uses Advance Press Books Well

LAST week we spoke in praise of ADVANCE press books, and specifically of advance press books as done by Paramount. We since learn that Universal has, for TWO YEARS, been putting press books in its exchanges TWO MONTHS ahead of the arrival of the print, the exchange serving as the distribution point to all parts of the field.

Universal's advance press books contain cuts and advance advertising copy complete. We have seen a number of these books, prepared by Paul Gulick. They are real IMPLEMENTS, deserving of wide use.

"BIG CHIEF MANY PICTURES"

By NYBERG

Moving Picture World Staff Artist

In writing of "Ben-Hur" last week we spoke of Marcus Loew as "Big Chief MANY Pictures."

Where the TYPEWRITER left off, the cartoonist's PEN took up. Nyberg, Moving Picture World's new staff artist, has pen-and-inked "Big Chief MANY Pictures' 'on the PRODUCTION warpath with HEAP MANY scalps at his belt.

It looks as if "Loew the Great Indian," as he is known to the medicine men, is still pushing along paths where only the strongest braves hunt.

Heap BIG talk, heap BIG industry.

Mr. Nyberg, we would like to add, is ANOTHER feature ADDITION to the 1926 model trade paper.

"Somebody Oughta Give 'Em a Medal" —So Here Goes!

REGINALD DENNY has been awarded the court-plaster nose in "California Straight Ahead." Florida boosters probably got him at the cross-roads. Mr. Denny gets a medal because he is one of the screen's finest developments. Denny himself, plus Universal exploitation, did the developing.

TO NORMA SHEARER we give a medal, not because she is a find, and not because, in "His Secretary," she shows again that she merits M.-G.-M. stardom, but because she is one of those rare combinations of beauty and brains that are becoming more and more vital to the increasing success of a vast business.

THE LAUREL WREATH has just been tossed to Ramon Novarro for winning the great chariot race in Ben-Hur. We give this M.-G.-M. star a medal because, in the last hours of 1925, the public saw him give a performance that will endure until the last hour of the moving picture.

THE THANKS of the world is what Harold Lloyd deserves. But we'll give him a medal because no one has been able to approach him in his field. We show him above "as is" because "as is" he is a most regular citizen, just as in character he is a most regular comedian. His first for Paramount, "For Heaven's Sake," should be seventh heaven for the box office.

OF STANLEY KETCHELL it is said that he was born with his fists clenched. John C. Flinn, too, was born with two fists ready to clean up. That's why we give him a medal. The broom above is but a figure. But he is set for a clean sweep for P. D. C.

HORSESHOES were never Eph Ascher's lot. Luck never bothered him and he never bothered luck. That's why Conway Tearle is slipping him the horseshoe now. We slip him a medal because he has made himself a progressive factor in production, particularly by signing Corinne Griffith and aligning himself with First National.

PATHE gets a medal, not because it is awarding medals, like the above, to men who have been in its service 5, 10 and 15 years, but because it is the kind of institution that holds men in its ranks for that length of time—the kind of outfit men don't forget.

MARY PICKFORD gets a medal, not because she makes life happy around the world, but because she gave "Spec" O'Donnell a big chance in "Little Annie Rooney." Which "Spec" accepted with all the poise and talent of a master. And Mary kept him for her next United Artists—Scraps! "Spec," above, gets a medal, too, because, in a word, he is THERE.

Looking Them Over—With Gray Strider

Reviews from the Screen Angle of Plays, Books, Stories and Operas

"The Jazz Singer"

IT doesn't make any difference what your birth, religion and background are, "The Jazz Singer" is going to appeal to you. Furthermore it's not only going to appeal to you, but it's going to get you. And you're going to cry, not in any dainty, lady-like fashion, either, but in a way that tears up something deep down inside you.

Sam Harris is presenting this comedy drama at the Cort Theatre. Jakie (George Jessel) is a young Jewish boy who runs away from home to become a black-faced coon shouter. His father is a Cantor with five generations of Cantors behind him. His whole soul is bound up in seeing Jakie take his place in the Synagogue when his own usefulness is past. But Jakie is of the younger generation. He must live his own life and his ambitions are about to be realized for he is going to open as the chief attraction of a Musical Comedy on Broadway, singing his Mammy songs.

The lonesome Cantor falls ill on the Eve of Atonement and is taken to the hospital. He sends his old wife to the theatre to beg his son to come home and sing that night in his place in the Synagogue. And Jakie on whom the whole show depends—the show which opens that same night—must either give up his career and the Christian actress whom he loves or break his parents' hearts and leave them alone in their aged affliction.

So the Jewish lad goes home and prepares to take his place in the Synagogue. But his sweetheart comes to him and pleads for his career, for his love. His own mother tells him to go back if the stage means more to him than the Synagogue; that the Cantor has always stood for truth and if Jakie sings in the Synagogue on the Eve of Atonement with no love and belief in his heart, his father would know it.

Jakie acknowledges that the stage is his life and his understanding, loving mother leaves to fetch her shawl to go alone to the House of God.

The telephone rings. Jakie's father is dead. The mother comes out with her lighted candles and shawl and Jakie, not telling her of the tragedy, puts his arm around her and leads her to the Synagogue where he chants the music of his race. The Hebrew Pagliacci sings his hymns of praise with anguish in his heart. His voice breaks in his agony. But his song rises higher and higher, clearer and clearer until the Jazz Singer's symphony reaches the throne of God.

"Head First"

EMPTYING the garbage and scouring the sink; scouring the sink and emptying the garbage were for five years the chief diversions of Anne Beckwith in Oliver Morosco's "Head First" which is being presented at the Greenwich Village Theatre.

Well, any woman gets tired of that. And when you add to it a husband who is only a file clerk in Mason's Department store, you get the plot.

The husband, Frank, is getting paid $50 a week for what any eight year old flapper would be glad to do for $20. Jacob Stein, the German-Jewish head of Mason's, fires Frank. Anne goes to beg Mr. Stein to reinstate her husband. He refuses, but offers Anne the job at $20 and promises to make Frank a shipping clerk at $30.

You can guess the rest. In two years Anne is Mason's Manager in Paris at $10,000 a year. And the little boy husband is still making all of $30. Of course, there's another woman, Lilyan Joyce, who believes in Frank, despite his lack of shrewdness. She gets him a job with her brother hauling garbage for the city of New York. They procure a contract which will net them $12,000 a year just as Anne returns from Paris, dazzling in her new found independence.

But she doesn't fall into the arms of her husband. She has divorced him with one of these trick Parisian decrees. She doesn't care to be the wife of a garbage hauler. Somehow you smell Jake Stein in the air. The wife departs for the Ambassador Hotel where Jake has engaged her a suite. The husband throws his hat into the ring and decides to try to win her back. The good girl, Lilyan, stands by with breaking heart.

There is a lot of bunk in this play and much truth also. It could be touched up and pruned down into something very fine and homely for the movies, something that would entice most of the housewives to the theatre. But the audiences will be sickened if more judgment isn't used. Any wife, with no business experience and with very little intelligence and charm, who has been sitting on her haunches for five years, doesn't get promoted in two years from a $30 a week file clerk to a $10,000 a year manager. Not unless she wields mightier weapons than the file basket. And the author of this drama assures us to the contrary.

Byron Beasley, as Jack Stein, is a joy and a marvel. If this "new comedy on somewhat different lines" reaches the screen, my vote is for him to head the cast.

Strauss, Greatest Living Composer, Writes Own Film and Score

A new era, both in the film and the musical world, was introduced on January 10th in Dresden. Richard Strauss, that genius of Vienna, demonstrated to an audience of critics the enormous scope of the moving picture industry when his well-known opera, "Rosenkavalier," was shown on the screen, accompanied by a specially adapted orchestration.

Strauss himself wrote the film and allowed the spirit of the music to suggest appropriate action for the picture. Michael Bohnen, one of the greatest of grand opera singers, played the voiceless lead.

Regardless of the wagging of the opposition, the opera is coming into its own on the screen. With the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of "La Boheme" in the offering, other operas are bound to be filmed to the inestimable benefit of audience and box office.

Added to Scenario Staff

F. Hugh Herbert, author of "There You Are," and other well known stories, has been added to the scenario organization at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Mr. Herbert left New York on December 29 for Culver City to take up his new duties.

Title of Menjou Picture

"A Social Celebrity" has been chosen as the release title for the new Adolphe Menjou picture which is now in production at Paramount's Long Island studio. This title supplants "I'll See You Tonight."

"The Skyrocket" takes off from the Leviathan

ONE of the most novel, notable and brilliant affairs in the annals of filmdom was the premiere showing of Peggy Hopkins Joyce's big Associated Exhibitors' special, "The Skyrocket," in the Grand Ball Room of the S. S. Leviathan on the evening of Thursday, January 7. Through the courtesy of the United States Lines, Miss Joyce was hostess to upwards of a thousand of the most representative folk in picture circles, society and newspaperdom.

Reception To The Star

It was the concensus of opinion among the guests that the affair was without an equal in its atmosphere and in the general manner in which every feature of a memorable evening was presented. And the evening was a scintillating procession of dazzling features.

First of all came the reception. Miss Joyce, who had traveled to New York from Hollywood especially for the showing, held forth in the beautiful Palm Garden of the giant liner. Receiving with her in a blaze of glitter were Captain Hartley, Staff Commander Moore and Purser Summit, of the Leviathan. The entire period previous to the screening of the picture was a general get-together of everybody present. Beautifully gowned women and handsomely garbed men moved about the fully-manned, blazingly lighted floating palace in a never-to-be-forgotten picture.

Famous Radio Stars Entertain

When the crowd had assembled in the spacious ballroom of the liner, which had been made over into a rich picture auditorium by the ship's staff, and the picture was about to begin, Miss Joyce's arrival in the auditorium created a furore, which did not settle down until the picture had started. Music for the picture was compiled and the known radio talent was on hand, among the artists being Mae Singhi Breen and orchestra directed by Joseph Hollander. Many comments were heard on the excellence of the musical settings arranged for the film.

PEGGY HOPKINS JOYCE, Star of Associated Exhibitor's Special, "The Skyrocket," Silhouetted Against the Leviathan.

During the showing of the picture and after it had been projected a radio program was being broadcast from the Palm Garden through station WMCA, the high-powered broadcasting unit of the Hotel McAlpin. For the broadcasting Harry Hershfield was master of ceremonies, and some of the best known radio talent was on hand, among the artists being Mae Singi Breen and Peter De Rose, Benjamin Riccio, dramatic baritone; Gene Austin, the four Jack Roses, Ira Shuster, Jimmy Flynn, Jack Val and many other favorites. Miss Joyce and Oscar Price, president of Associated, as well as Captain Hartley and other officers of the Leviathan also greeted the radio audience before a battery of movie and still cameras. Announcing was T. M. Nelson of Station WMCA. One of the big features of the air was the music of the S. S. Leviathan Orchestra.

After the picture was projected in the Ball Room, a supper was served in the immense dining room of the big ship. Any one who saw the picture of almost a thousand evening-clothed men and women seated in that dining room will never forget it. The extreme success of the supper was due to the careful arrangements of Chief Steward William Linn.

Dancing Follows The Supper

Following supper dancing to the music of two orchestras was in order. Dancing was held in both the Ball Room and the Palm Garden, and between dances guests rambled all over the ship on personally conducted tours of inspection of almost all of the ship's exclusive features.

During the course of the post-showing festivities a reel of film presenting the affair itself was projected. The making of this reel was in the capable hands of Leonard Mitchell, chief of the United States Lines' Motion Picture Department, to whom credit is also due for the wonderful projection of the picture. It was the general consensus of the hard-boiled film men that the projection was perfect—no small matter when the handicaps were considered. The film showing arriving guests, etc., was projected just exactly one and three quarter hours after the last scene had been shot.

U. S. Lines Supervise Projection

The projection installation was made by the U. S. Lines Motion Picture Department, of which Charles Fierer is Chief. The projectionist of the Leviathan is Thomas McAuley. It might be interesting to note that both projectionists worked in evening clothes. The event passes into the list of those long remembered.

March with F. B. O. During March

Sales Head to Announce Details of Big Drive to Branch Managers

COLVIN W. BROWN, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of distribution, announces that March will be known as F. B. O. Month. A concerted drive will be launched by the thirty-four exchanges of the company to bring the F. B. O. product to the attention of exhibitors and the public, with special stress laid on the four features releases and six short subjects listed for distribution during the month.

Colvin Brown

This will be F. B. O.'s biggest sales drive. An advertising publicity and exploitation campaign is being laid out, with special accessories ordered for the branches of the company and for five thousand exhibitors throughout the country.

The full details of F. B. O. Month will be presented to branch managers and their staffs by Lee Marcus, general sales manager of the company, who is now on a tour of the exchanges. On this whirlwind trip, Mr. Marcus will confer with important exhibitors in the localities visited, in addition to holding meetings at the exchanges. Mr. Marcus will cover Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Ore., Seattle and Chicago on the return trip.

The sales and advertising departments have been perfecting plans for the drive for several months in the expectation that this drive will be the forerunner of the biggest year in the history of the company.

The production listed for distribution during March on which special emphasis will be laid are:

Lee Marcus

A Tom Tyler production, as yet untitled, scheduled for release on March 7th. A romantic drama starring Evelyn Brent on March 8th, with "The Night Patrol," starring Richard Talmadge, on March 14th. "The Non-Stop Flight" a dramatization by Emory Johnson of the navy's recent historic hop to Hawaii, listed as an F. B. O. Gold Bond, will be distributed on March 28th.

The short subjects will include "The Go-Get-Her" and "And How!" episodes, four and five of "Fighting Hearts," F. B. O.'s new series based on stories by Sam Hellman, in which Alberta Vaughn is starred. Two Bray cartoons will be released during March as well as "A Beauty Parlor," a Standard Fat Men comedy and "A Fraternity Mix-Up," a Blue Ribbon comedy starring Alice Ardell, both from the Joe Rock Studios.

March is F. B. O. Month!

"Flaming Frontier" Big "U" Western Ready for Shipment

Built Around Custer's Last Stand
Hoot Gibson and Dustin Farnum in Big Roles
One of Universal's Most Ambitious Pictures

WORD has just reached the Universal home office that the greatest "super" western picture ever attempted by Universal is ready to be shipped East. It is "The Flaming Frontier" an epic of the '70ties, produced by Edward Sedgwick with Hoot Gibson and Dustin Farnum in the principal roles. It is one of the most ambitious pictures Universal ever made and is said to be an epoch making photoplay of the historic-drama type. It has as its climax the world famed Battle of Little Big Horn, popularly known as Custer's Last Stand.

Timed for release during 1926, the fiftieth anniversay of that famous massacre, "The Flaming Frontier" is particularly opportune as a screen offering for the coming season. It has been made on a lavish scale, with a large cast composed of many big names in the industry, and with a fidelity to detail and historical exactitude rarely equalled in the moving picture industry.

Dustin Farnum Plays Role of General Custer

The picture is filled with romance and colorful surroundings, political intrigue and the thrilling and spectacular events of the Indian fighting days. The story was written by Edward Sedgwick himself, after months of research and study of the history, costumes, and customs of that period. It was adapted by Edward J. Montagne and Charles Kenyon.

Hoot Gibson plays the role of the young scout. It is the greatest role ever entrusted to Gibson and comes as a result of his extraordinary success in Universal westerns and more recently, the popularity of his current Jewel releases. As General Custer, Universal induced Dustin Farnum, famous stage and screen star, to forsake the stage again and accept another big screen role. Senator Stanwood is taken by George Fawcett; and his daughter, Betty, played by Anne Cornwall, is the heroine of the picture.

Players of Historical Characters

Other historical figures in the cast include the famous Sioux leader, Sitting Bull, responsible for the Custer massacre, a role which is admirably played by Noble Johnson; Sam Belden, played by Ward Crane; Lucretia Belden, played by Kathleen Key, said to be the best "vamp" part that popular "heavy woman" ever played; President Grant, played by Walter Rodgers, and Chief Rain-in-the-Face, played by Joe Bonomo.

Others in the featured cast are Eddie Gribbon and Harry Tod as "Jonesy" and "California Joe," respectively, two humorous frontier characters; Harold Goodwin as the weak son of Senator Stanwood, Charles K. French as Senator Hargess, Custer's enemy, and William Steele as Cyrus Penfield.

Ralph Ince Supports Olive Borden In "Yellow Fingers"

RALPH INCE, veteran of the film who is well known both as a director and as an actor, has been cast in the leading role supporting Olive Borden, one of the newest feminine stars, in "Yellow Fingers." The picture has just been started under the direction of Emmett Flynn, according to an announcement from the Fox lot in Hollywood. It is based on a story by Gene Wright, and Eve Unsell wrote the scenario.

Edward Piel will play Kwong Li, the chief villain. Claire Adams and Otto Matiesen have the second leads. Nigel de Brulier and Armand Kaliz will portray the other principal supporting roles.

Paramount to Produce Fantastic Comedy Starring Griffith

THE most radical departure ever attempted in motion picture production was made public in announcement by Hector Turnbull, associate Paramount producer, that Paramount will film a picture to be known as "The Ship That Sailed to Mars," a fantastic comedy starring Raymond Griffith.

Secret preparations for the filming of this production have been under way for sixteen months, he said, and it will be at least three months before actual work can begin.

Active in the making of this unique picture will be Roy J. Pomeroy, the master of magic who achieved the opening and closing of the Red Sea in "The Ten Commandments" and numerous wondrous and mystifying effects in "Peter Pan." Clarence G. Badger, who has directed Griffith in some of his greatest starring successes, will direct "The Ship That Sailed to Mars."

The picture will mark the supreme effort of Pomeroy and will contain more astounding magical effects than anything the screen has ever seen. The idea for production came to Pomeroy while he was engaged in research work for "Peter Pan" nearly a year and a half ago. The more thought he gave it the more he realized its possibilities and when he had the theme fairly well worked out he approached Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Paramount in charge of production, and Hector Turnbull.

Lasky and Turnbull caught Pemeroy's enthusiasm and ordered him to proceed with all speed in making plans for the picture

Fox Puts on Schedule for February Release Four Supreme Attractions

THAT Fox Films intends to take full advantage of every one of the twenty-eight days in February is amply borne out by a glance at the group of pictures to be released by that producing organization during the short month. These releases include four Supreme Attractions of exemplary merit, a Tom Mix starring vehicle, two Imperial Comedies, the fifth of the O. Henry two-reelers, the fifth of "The Married Life of Helen and Warren" series, two one-reel Fox Varieties and the usual Fox News issues.

The initial February Supreme Attraction is "The Road to Glory," directed by Howard Hawks from an original screen story written by the director himself. A cast with box-office value in every name was selected for this attraction by General Manager Winfield R. Sheehan, who is now at the West Coast Studios of the Fox Company supervising all productions.

May McAvoy Has Feminine Lead

In the feminine lead is that charming and capable little actress, May McAvoy, with the accomplished Fox stock company player, Leslie Fenton, acting opposite her. In the important heavy role is the extremely versatile Rockliffe Fellowes, with the other vital character parts being enacted by such distinguished performers as Ford Sterling, Milla Davenport and John MacSweeney. In another all important supporting role is the inimitable Hank, the dog star of Hollywood's motion picture colony. February 7 is the release date of this production.

"The Johnstown Flood," released on February 14 by the Fox company, is a thrilling spectacle which Fox officials believe will be the sensation of the season. Produced at high cost, it will bring to the screen all the happenings incident to that greatest of American catastrophes with an exactness of detail that is awe-inspiring. Irving Cummings directed this production which, incidentally, is his first for Fox. George O'Brien heads the splendid cast in this film, with Florence Gilbert, Janet Gaynor, Anders Randolf and Paul Nicholson playing other important featured roles. Supporting the featured players are Walter Perry, Paul Panzer, Max Davidson, Georgie Harris and Sid Jordan.

Powerful Crook Drama Follows "The Johnstown Flood"

"Dangers of a Great City," a crook melodrama by Howard Hawks, follows "The Johnstown Flood" on the Fox release schedule with February 21 as the date set. Chester Bennett is directing this production with Rockliffe Fellowes and Pauline Starke playing the leading roles. In the principal supporting roles of this production are Johnny Walker, Grace Darmond and Mickey Bennett.

A week later, on February 28, the Fox company has a couplet of entertainments scheduled for release which all exhibitors should find to their liking. One stars that superior box-office magnet, Tom Mix, and is titled "My Own Pal." The other is a delightful rural comedy drama which was directed by Frank Borzage, "the man," so says James R. Grainger, "who just cannot make a bad picture," and is titled "The Dixie Merchant."

Also a Mix-Vehicle and Six Short Subjects

"My Own Pal," Fox officials are unanimous in declaring, is the best Mix picture since the great "Untamed." In it there is comedy and drama of surpassing excellence supplemented by some marvellous touches, every one of which is brand new and as thrilling as any ever pulled before by Mix or any other screen artist.

Three Surprises in Cast Of "My Own Pal"

In addition there are three surprises in the cast for the film audiences of the world. One is the leading woman, Olive Borden, the other is little Virginia Marshall, a tot whose acting almost steals the picture and the other is a little not too white poodle who, Tom and Tony admit it themselves, does steal the picture. Exhibitors will be requested by the Fox company to call this Mix release to the attention of their women patrons. Although it is chockful of Tom Mix action, it is full of heart throbs and lots of other stuff that women like.

MacDonald Has Title Role In "Dixie Merchant"

"The Dixie Merchant" is an adaptation of Barry Benefield's best selling novel, "The Chicken Wagon Family," which has just gone into its sixth edition. Madge Bellamy and Jack Mulhall have the leading roles in this one, with the title role enacted by J. Farrell MacDonald. Others in the cast are Claire McDowell, Harvey Clark, Onest Conly, Evelyn Arden and Edward Martindale. Something to bear in mind regarding this one is J. Farrell MacDonald under the direction of Frank Borzage, the director of deft touches with the artist who knows how to put them over.

Coming down to the all important short subject releases, we find on the Fox release schedule titles that mean something and which show that the Fox organization meant it when they said they had "titles for the marquees" for all "shorts."

Three Fox Short Subjects Put on Schedule

"Egypt Today" and "A Bankrupt Honeymoon," released on February 7, are the feature attraction-titled short subjects that start the month. The first is a one-reel Fox Variety subject showing the ancient land of the Pharoahs in a new light. The second is an Imperial Comedy of two reels which was directed by Lew Seiler under the supervision of George Marshall with Harold Goodwin and Shirley Palmer raving the leading roles.

On February 14 Fox Films releases "A Woman of Letters," another of those hilarious "Helen and Warren Married Life" comedies. Hallam Cooley continues in the role of husband Warren and Kathryn Perry is the delightful wife. Albert Ray directed this production under the personal supervision of George Marshall.

February 21 will see three Fox short subjects released. They are "Elsie in New York," an O. Henry two reeler; "Officer of the Day," an Imperial "wow," and "Sawdust and Spangles," a one-reel Fox Variety. Gladys McConnell and Hallam Cooley play the leading roles in "Elsie in New York," which is another Ray directorial effort, also made under the supervision of Mr. Marshall. The genial Fox comedy chief also supervised the direction of "Officer of the Day," with Max Gold and Andrew Bennison jointly wielding the megaphone. Harold Goodwin and Eugenia Gilbert have the leads in this production.

Norman Trevor Signs Big Contract with Paramount

NORMAN TREVOR, prominent for 20 years on the stage here and in England, and more recently active in motion pictures directed by Herbert Brenon, has been signed to a long-term contract to appear in Paramount films exclusively, it is announced by William LeBaron, associate producer in charge at the Long Island studio.

Mr. Trevor will leave the cast of "Young Blood" in which he has been appearing with success on the stage in New York, to assume his first picture work under the new contract. This is to be the role of "Beaujolais," a major in the French Foreign Legion, in the Paramount screen version of P. C. Wren's novel, "Beau Geste," which Herbert Brenon will produce in France and at the Legion headquarters in northern Africa. He will sail with the large production unit and a cast of notables who leave here on January 30, their first location stop being Paris.

To Direct MacLean

William Beaudine will direct Douglas MacLean in the comedian's forthcoming picture, "That's My Baby," it was announced by the MacLean production office.

Beaudine, who directed Mary Pickford in "Annie Rooney" and "Scraps," has been signed for the MacLean comedy by arrangement with Warner Brothers who hold a long term contract for his services. The starting date of "That's My Baby" has been postponed a week in order to permit Beaudine to finish "Leave It To Me," which he is directing for Warners.

Books "Mazie" Series

J. J. Sampson, manager of the F. B. O. exchange at Chicago, has sold "The Adventures of Mazie" series, starring Alberta Vaughn, to the Bijou Theatre at Decatur, Ill., for early showing.

"For Heaven's Sake" Is Lloyd's First Paramount Production

Comedian in Story on Slums of City
Jobyna Ralston Plays Opposite Star
Same Technical Staff with Player

IN "For Heaven's Sake," his first for Paramount, Harold Lloyd foresakes the gay and colorful atmosphere of college life for the sombre environment of the slums of a big city. This change in locale, however, has not robbed the picture of the human note so dominant in all of the star's pictures, according to officials of the Lloyd corporation.

"For Heaven's Sake" is the story of a rich boy who finds, after a life of luxury and ease that the real joy of living is found in helping others. He goes to the slums to aid a hard-working, down trodden missionary. Around these experiences Lloyd has woven one of the most humorous stories of his career. Lloyd's seemingly inexhaustible supply of gags has been drawn upon heavily for this attraction.

Sam Taylor is again directing the comedian, with Jobyna Ralston, as leading woman, adding charm and beauty to the underworld scenes. Others who have important roles are Constantine Romanoff, Richard Daniels, Earl Mohan and Francis Gaspart.

The story for the picture is credited to Ted Wilde, John Grey and Clyde Bruckman.

Those who have seen rushes from the picture say that it will be typically Lloyd, with an abundance of fast action, yet with a motivating thought that mingles drama with comedy.

"Lloyd has been working on the picture for more than five months," said a Lloyd officiol. "From a production angle it is one of the most elaborate pictures he has ever attempted. One entire section of the studio has been devoted for months to what is probably the largest set Lloyd has ever used. It is a reproduction of a slums section of a big city.

To obtain the proper atmosphere for this production, Lloyd and his production manager, John L. Murphy, spent considerable time along New York's Bowery during their trip East. To carry out this atmosphere to the fullest extent many character bits are included in the supporting cast. On the Lloyd lot has been one of the best crops of cauliflower in Los Angeles, for the star has lured from the squared circle many well known mitt wielders. Among them are Joe Rivers, Gene Delmont, Willie O'Brien, Eddie Macey, Eddie Darrah, Ed Landon, Jimmy Marcus, Johnnie LaReno, Red Fitzsimmons, Dave Taylor, Charlie Sullivan and others.

Virtually the same staff associated with Lloyd in his previous pictures was engaged for "For Heaven's Sake." William R. Fraser is general manager of Harold Lloyd Corporation; John L. Murphy, production manager; Sam Taylor, director; Ted Wilde, John Grey and Clyde Bruckman, scenarists; Robert A. Golden, assistant director; Walter Lundin, chief cinematographer; Henry Kohler, assistant cameraman; Liell Vedder, art director; William MacDonald, technical director; Cecil Bardwell, chief electrician, and Allan McNeil, film editor.

To Direct "Alice Blues"

Gilbert Pratt will direct Sid Smith and Alice Ardell supported by a notable cast in "Alice Blues," Joe Rock's initial Blue Ribbon production for 1926. Filming will start at once under Rock's supervision.

The first of Rock's Standard Comedies for the new year, starring "Fat" Carr, "Kewpie" Ross and "Fatty" Alexander, known as "a ton of fun," will go into production soon

RICHARD BARTHELMESS, "Just Suppose" Bijou Fernandez played opposite you. Well, she does in the First National picture of that title.

Prominent Players Are Added to Cast of "Kiki"

NEW players of importance have been added to the cast of "Kiki" in which Norma Talmadge is being starred by Joseph M. Schenck. The principals in Miss Talmadge's company now include Ronald Golman in the role of Victor Renal; Gertrude Astor as Paulette; Marc McDermott as Baron Rapp; George K. Arthur as Adolphe; and Frankie Darrow as Pierre.

Under the direction of Clarence Brown, this famous Belasco stage success in which Leonore Ulric was starred, is being given an elaborate production. A full sized replica of a Paris theatre has been built at the United Studios in order to achieve a convincing atmosphere. This story of a Paris street gamin who aspires to become a great lady is the first picture Miss Talmadge has made since her sensationally successful production of "Graustark."

Mr. Schenck states that he believes "Kiki" will surpass anything that the popular star has ever done, not excepting "Smilin' Through," "Secrets" or "Graustark." It is scheduled for release by First National early in April.

Hans Kraly, noted European scenarist, who recently wrote "Her Sister From Paris" for Constance Talmadge, is the adapter and continuity writer; William Cameron Menzies, United Artists art director, is the designer of sets and chief technical adviser; Jean Bertin, former Paris stage manager and designer, is in charge of all French detail and research work. Many of Miss Talmadge's gowns and costumes have been designed by experts brought to Hollywood from France for the one picture.

New Hines Picture Gets Ovation At Test Showing

"RAINBOW RILEY," Johnny Hines' second picture for First National, went over with a bang last Friday evening when it was given a try-out performance at the Rialto Theatre, Whitestone, L. I. This test showing was arranged in order to gauge the entertainment value of the picture and enable the producer, Charles C. Burr, to figure out what parts could best be eliminated in cutting the film down from ten to six and a half reels.

"Rainbow Riley" was put on "cold" immediately following the house program of ten reels. Despite the lateness of the hour, the audience remained for the full run of the picture and applauded enthusiastically at the conclusion.

The ovation accorded the picture at the Rialto where "The Live Wire," "The Crackerjack" and other Hines features had been tried out preliminary to national release, was unprecedented. Manager Gainsboro of the Rialto claimed "Rainbow Riley" to be by all odds the best picture Hines has made. The national release date set by First National is February 14.

Charles Emmett Mack Plays Title Role in "Unknown Soldier"

CHARLES EMMETT MACK, according to an announcement by Renaud Hoffman, has been chosen for the title and stellar role in "The Unknown Soldier," to be released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

"The Unknown Soldier" is the pet brain child of Renaud Hoffman, creator of "Not One to Spare," "Off the Highway" and other noteworthy subjects. For two years Hoffman has been developing "The Unknown Soldier," a story of international interest, and it is predicted that the picture will exert a powerful appeal as a poignant post-war document.

The story of "The Unknown Soldier" is credited to Dorothy Farnum and has been developed around the especial genius of Mack for the expression of intense emotion contrasted with comedy of a light nature and colorful quality.

With Charles Emmett Mack will be Henry B. Walthall and a duo of famous players whose names are yet to be divulged.

Production will start at the Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood on Monday. Certain sequences will be shot in New York, where the entire company will be brought six weeks hence.

Lois Moran to Support Barthelmess in New Film

Lois Moran, one of the most captivating of the younger screen actresses, has been engaged by Inspiration Pictures to play opposite Richard Barthelmess in "The Kid From Montana," his coming starring vehicle for First National Pictures. Miss Moran gave such a fine performance in "Just Suppose," Mr. Barthelmess' most recent picture, that she was the first choice of the star and the producers for the leading feminine role in "The Kid From Montana," a story in which she will portray an eastern society girl who falls in love with a devil-may-care cowboy as presented by Barthelmess. The part is said to be admirably suited to Miss Moran's personality.

"The Kid From Montana" is an adaptation from the novel "Q" by Katherine Newlin Burt. Sidney Olcott, recently placed under contract to direct two of Mr. Barthelmess' pictures, is directing this production.

Signs New M-G-M Contract

Renee Adoree, heroine of "The Big Parade," the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer hit from Laurence Stallings' story, directed by King Vidor, has signed a new contract with M.-G.-M., according to an announcement made last week by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production.

Miss Adoree has just completed the leading feminine role in Lon Chaney's next release for M.-G.-M. "The Black Bird," which is set for release on January 11.

Warner Bros. Start New Year With Five Companies Producing

"The Sap" Features Kenneth Harlan
Beaudine's First on Return to Warners
New Syd Chaplin Comedy About Ready

WARNER BROS. are ushering in the new year with production in full swing. They have five companies at work, four productions in the process of editing and four stories being prepared for an early start. Of the five companies now at work, two were started this week.

"The Sap," Raymond Hitchcock's stage success, started with Kenneth Harlan in the leading role. Mary McAllister has the leading feminine part, while the others include "Heinie" Conklin, Dave Butler, Eulalie Jensen and John Cossar. The adaptation of the story was made by E. T. Lowe, Jr., and Phillip Klein with the scenario written by Lowe. Erle Kenton is directing.

"Why Girls Go Back Home" is under way with James Flood handling the megaphone for an all star cast. It is headed by Patsy Ruth Miller and Clive Brook, the latter having just returned from New York where he played the leading male role opposite Mrs. Rudolph Valentino in her latest production. The others are George O'Hara, who is appearing in his first picture since "The Sea Beast," Myrna Loy and Jane Winton. The story is by Catherine Brody, adapted by Walter Morosco, with the scenario by Sonia Hovey. Charles Van Enger is first cameraman.

"The Grifters," a crook story with a decidedly new angle, is well under way with Dolores Costello and John Harron in the leading roles. The others in the cast are Matthew Betz, Dot Farley, Lee Moran, Gertrude Claire and Joseph Dowling. Roy Del Ruth is directing. The story is by C. D. Lancaster with the script and adaptation by Darryl F. Zanuck.

"Leave It to Me" is William Beaudine's first production since returning to the Warners. The cast is headed by Dorothy Devore, John Patrick and Montague Love, supported by George Pearce and Jim Gordon. The story is by Darryl Francis Zanuck, adaptation by E. T. Lowe, Jr. George Webster is assistant director and John Mescall first cameraman.

"The Night Cry," Rin-Tin-Tin's newest feature, is nearing completion. June Marlowe and John Harron have the leading human roles with Gayne Whitman, "Heinie" Conklin, Don Alvarado and Mary Louise Miller supporting. Herman Raymaker is directing. Ewart Adamson is responsible for the story and script.

"Other Women's Husbands," which again has for its leads Marie Prevost and Monte Blue, is almost ready for release. Huntly Gordon and Phyllis Haver have featured parts. This was directed by Erle Kenton.

"Oh! What a Nurse!" Syd Chaplin's second big comedy, is another almost ready for distribution. Those who have seen it at its various previews declare it to be the best thing Chaplin has made to date. Patsy Ruth Miller has the leading feminine role. Matthew Betz, Ed Kennedy and David Torrence are also featured.

Irene Rich's next picture, according to an announcement from the Warner Bros.' main offices this week, will be "Silken Shackles," a smart, sophisticated comedy by Walter Morosco, most of its action laid in Budapest.

The next picture to be directed by J. Stuart Blackton is "Hell Bent-for-Heaven," from the moving play by Thatcher Hughes. Marian Constance is now writing the scenario.

FROM REPORTS seems that those who said "Be Mine" to F. B. O.'s "Keeper of the Bees" got a license to smile with the ring of the cash at the box office.

Producers Distributing Holds "Progressive" Sales Conference

District Managers Received Individually
System Gives Insight Into Wants of All Sections
Each Branch Head Is Given Whole Day with Sales Head

A BRAND new form of "sales meeting" has been in progress for the past ten days, at the home office of Producers Distributing Corporation, where seven of the eight district managers have individually reported, one at a time, to Sales Manager W. J. Morgan and in private all day conferences have summarized conditions in their respective territories.

Contrary to the usual procedure, Producers Distributing Corporation called a "progressive" convention of district managers, in two periods, of five days each. The first four days in each period were given over to private conferences between Mr. Morgan and an individual manager and on the fourth day an open meeting was held, attended by the four managers present in each period.

This system gave Mr. Morgan an opportunity to gather the most minute details of prevailing conditions in every nook and corner of the United States and at the same time afforded an exchange of ideas and views in the "open" meetings.

Next Best Thing to a Personal Visit

Commenting on the "progressive" sales conference innovation, Mr. Morgan said: "I found this form of sales meeting, the next best thing to a personal visit to every section of the country. In private, uninterrupted, intimate talks with our division managers, facts were brought out that would be overlooked or crowded out in the usual procedure of a general sales conference. By receiving one manager each day, and devoting the whole of that day to a discussion of his problems, the meetings took the form of a personal visit during which the desires of exhibitors and the varying demands of the public in specific localities were disclosed in the most illuminating manner.

"The information gleaned in these meetings has given us a most comprehensive mental picture of the demand for entertainment even in the most remote sections of the sales territory, and this knowledge will be used to advantage in my coming conference in Los Angeles with our producers."

Attending the first five-day period of the Producers Distributing convention were L. J. Hacking, P. H. Clark, G. F. Lenehan and Robert Cotton, representing sales divisions 1, 2, 3 and 4, covering the eastern and central sections of the United States. The second five-day period was attended by C. E. Maberry, C. D. Hill and R. A. Morrow, representing districts 5, 6 and 7; covering the mid-western division, and Tom Brady representing Canada.

L. W. Weir, manager of district 8, embracing the west coast exchange, was not present at the New York meetings. A conference with Mr. Weir will be held by Mr. Morgan upon his arrival in Los Angeles, the latter part of January.

"Padlocked" Will Be Big Fall Picture By Paramount

ONE of Paramount's biggest productions for next fall will be its picturization of "Padlocked," which is said to be the greatest novel Rex Beach has ever written.

The first step of B. P. Schulberg, associate producer of Paramount, in his plans to make this an outstanding ottraction is the assignment of Allan Dwan to direct.

"Our selection of Mr. Dwan follows as a reward for the particularly fine directorial ability manifested in 'Sea Horses,' which he has just completed," said Mr. Schulberg.

"'Padlocked' is considered the finest story that Rex Beach has ever penned. This author's stories are especially adaptable to the screen, but in none of his writings has he touched the human note as he has in 'Padlocked.' It is a story of unusual depth, with a theme that touches in a dramatic manner upon important problems of today. An amazingly truthful picture of life itself is presented."

Mr. Dwan believes that "Padlocked" is the best motion picture material he has ever seen. "Not only is it out of the rut," he said, "but it is also the most colorful and dramatic story ever placed before me."

"Padlocked" is a dramatic story with its locale in New York and the surrounding country. The theme is that of a Puritan father who, through his narrowmindedness, drives his wife to suicide and almost wrecks the life of his daughter.

Has Feminine Lead Role

Gertrude Olmsted, one of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock players, has been cast for the leading feminine role opposite Lew Cody, in "Monte Carlo," a satire on American tourists abroad from the story by Carey Wilson and now being directed by Christy Cabanne from the scenario by Alice D. G. Miller.

CLAIRE WINDSOR

This featured M.-G. M. player wears a straight "bob" in "Dance Madness," the S. Jay Kaufman story, which Robert Z. Leonard directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer from the screen adaptation made by Frederica Sagor. Conrad Nagle is featured with Miss Windsor.

Big "U" Seeks Owners of Four Selznick Negatives

Film companies in former days frequently had to search far and wide for missing prints, but it remains for Universal to come to the front with an entirely novel search—that of finding the owners of several picture negatives.

The negatives were taken over by the Universal Pictures Corporation of Delaware, an organization formed to take over the old Selznick properties. Four negatives were found in the Selznick effects the ownership of which cannot be traced.

They are, a second negative of "Fighting Coward," a five-reeler featuring Mrs. DeWolf Hopper, William B. Davison, Warren Cook and Charles Gerard; "Is Love Everything?" a second negative of a six-reel William Garson production, with full titles, produced by the C. R. McCauley Photo Plays, Inc.

The Universal Pictures Corporation of Delaware, with offices at 730 Fifth Avenue, New York City, is anxious to turn these negatives over to the proper owners.

Berenger Leaves F. P.-L.

Clara Berenger announces that she has left Famous Players-Lasky and from now on will free lance entirely.

During her eight years of service with Famous Players-Lasky, Miss Berenger has not only adapted many of their best sellers to the screen, including "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Grumpy," "Miss Lulu Bett," "Only 38" and "Clarence," but also written several original stories including "The Gilded Lady" and "Locked Doors," which were equally successful. Her most recent adaptation was "New Brooms," and her latest original "Polly of the Ballet."

ROLLAND FLANDER
Who plays the sheik in "Seven Wives of Bluebeard," the Robert T. Kane production for First National Pictures, in which Blanche Sweet and Ben Lyon are featured.

Roland Flander Signs To Appear in Big Tenneck Film

ROLAND FLANDER maintains his record stride for young leading men, working in several productions at one time.

After completing work on the Patheserial, "Enemies of Uncle Sam" and the Arthur Kane-First National production, "Bluebeard's Seven Wives," Mr. Flander remains at work on "A Lunatic at Large," the Leon Errol-First National production, and he has also signed with Director John L. McCutcheon for work in a feature production which this skilled directors will make for Tenneck Film Corporation.

The forthcoming Tenneck production is tentatively titled "The Inventors."

Jane Arden in Goldwyn "Sally, Irene and Mary"

Director Goulding discovered Miss Arden as one of the extra girls in this picture and gave her several very difficult bits of business to do. Her work with Constance Bennett pleased him so much that he kept her for the entire picture.

Miss Arden has been in pictures for about a year and is known as one of the most beautiful blonde types in Hollywood. She is a wonderful swimmer, plays on the Metro-Goldwyn water polo team and is in great demand for pictures requiring girls with athletic ability.

It is understood that she will be considered this year by the Wampus when they select their Baby Stars for 1927.

Jane Jennings Signed

Jane Jennings, Cameo Mother of the Screen, has been engaged for one of the roles in "New Klondike," the Thomas Meighan production now being filmed at the Famous Players-Lasky Studios in the East, under the direction of Lewis Milestone.

Four Big Pictures Scheduled for February Release by M-G-M

Beach's "Auction Block" Heads List
Christianson's First American Production
Ibanez's "Torrent" Made by Monta Bell

THE Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer announcement of releases for the month of February seem to make good the boast of that company, "1926 is another Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer year." The four pictures scheduled for early release in the next month are, "The Auction Block, "The Devilkin," "Money Talks" and "Ibanez Torrent."

The releases during January of "Soul Mates, an Elinor Glyn story, directed by Jack Conway, and featuring Aileen Pringle, and Edmund Lowe, of "Dance Madness," a story by S. Jay Kaufman, directed by Robert Z. Leonard, featuring Conrad Nagel and Claire Windsor, and of Lon Chaney's "The Blackbird," a thrilling story of the London underworld written and directed by Tod Browning, as well as the following February releases, are an auspicious beginning for the new year.

The Hattons Adapt Beach's "The Auction Block"

"The Auction Block" will undoubtedly be a big success. This picture has been adapted from the famous Rex Beach novel of the same name, and the adaptation was done by Frederic and Fanny Hatton. This novel, a story of the regeneration of a wealthy young wastrel by a poor young woman, was published in 1914 and subsequently published in a popular edition and millions of people have read it. Charles Ray and Eleanor Boardman have the leading roles under the able direction of Hobart Henley. The cast is brilliant with such popular players as Ernest Gillen, James Corrigan, Sally O'Neil, David Torrence, Forest Seabury, Ned Sparkes and Charles Clary. Mr. Henley is famous for the long list of money makers that he has produced in the past, and this record augurs well for the success of "The Auction Bock."

Christianson's First American Film, "The Devilkin"

Another widely read American author, Rupert Hughes, has contributed "Money Talks" to further the great triumph of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions. "Money Talks" is said to be one of the funniest comedies produced in many years, its humor is largely due to the subtle direction of Archie Mayo. Claire Windsor and Owen Moore have the leading roles in this comedy and are supported by an admirable cast. This story also has been adapted by that clever team, Frederic and Fanny Hatton.

Benjamin Christianson relies on his first American production, "The Devilkin," to bring him to the same high screen position in this country as he has won for himself in Europe. Norma Shearer is the star of this production, and unusual camera effects invented by Christianson make her beauty seem even more appealing in her splendid part as a poor circus performer. Ernest Gillen plays the juvenile lead with Miss Shearer, and Carmel Myers, the "Iras" of "Ben Hur," enacts the role of a jealous-mad siren of the circus. A host of fine actors, including Claire McDowell, Joyce Coad, and John Miljan, give life and reality to the simple, but exceedingly powerful story, which has been written by Mr. Christianson about circus life in Scandinavia. Buddy, the clever dog actor, has a part in this picture.

Blasco Ibanez's famous novel, "The Torrent," has been made by Monta Bell into an exceptionally fine screen drama, entitled "Ibanez Torrent." Gretta Garbo and Ricardo Cortez have the leads in this great Spanish story, and make roles that might have fallen into the merely romantic, into great and powerful characterizations. Other players of importance are: Gertrude Olmstead, Edward Connelly, Maurice Kains, Lucient Littlefield and Mario Carillo. The continuity is from the pen of Dorothy Farnum.

De Mille to Feature Jetta Goudal in Special Stories

THAT Jetta Goudal is in the ascendant is indicated by news from Cecil De Mille that plans for 1926 include the featuring of this exotic actress in several vehicles specially written to take advantage of her specific and original appeal.

"I have loaned Miss Goudal to Metropolitan pictures for the featured lead in 'Paris at Midnight,'" De Mille recently announced. "But immediately on completion of this vehicle she returns to the DeMille studio to commence the preparation of the parts we have outlined for her advancement during 1926.

While the specific stories in which Miss Goudal will be given enlarged opportunities during 1926, are not announced, it is said that Mrs. E. K. Adams, literary adviser to Mr. De Mille, has secured several vehicles calculated to take due commercial advantage of this player, whose greatest single asset is an outstanding element of the "unusual."

In "Paris at Midnight," Miss Goudal, a native Frenchwoman, has been given a role entirely fitted to her personality and background. Frances Marion's presentation of the captivating Balzac story from which the tale is adapted should prove to be still another milestone along the advance of Jetta Goudal.

Big Authors and Directors Represented In New List of Universal Productions

SEVENTEEN big Universal Jewel Productions are to be released by Carl Laemmle's organization during the current half year, it was announced at the Universal home office, 730 Fifth Avenue, New York City. The releases, beginning with "The Little Giant," released January 3d, and ending with "The Phantom Bullet," to be released July 11th, constitute the second half of the Second White List and conclude the Jewel releases for the 1925-1926 season.

This series of big pictures is said to be even better than the first half of the Second White List, which number such successes as "The Teaser," "California Straight Ahead," "Siege," "The Goose Woman," "The Calgary Stampede," "His People," and similar hits. The new release schedule includes four pictures for January, two for February, three for March, two for April, three for May, two for June and one for July.

Releases Represent Pick of Literary Field

Inspired by the success of the early season pictures aforementioned, the Universal heads went to extra efforts to get Grade-A material for the second half-year's pictures. These new releases represent the pick of the American literary field. Included in the list of authors are such writers as William J. Locke, Hugh McNair Kahler, Aaron Hoffman, William McLeod Raine, B. M. Bowers, Nina Wilcox Putnam, Joseph Arthur and A. C. Wheeler, Albert Chevalier and Arthur Shirley, Henry Irving Dodge, George Broadhurst, Byron Morgan, and such popular screen authors as Ralph Spence, J. G. Hawks, Edward Montague, Charles A. Logue and Edward Sedgwick.

To put their stories into screen form, Universal marshalled a corps of the industry's leading directors. Among the list of well-known directorial figures who were responsible for the completed pictures in the new group of Universal Jewels are Charles Brabin, Svend Gade, Harry Pollard, Herbert Blache, Lynn Reynolds, Laurence Trimble, William Seiter, Edward Sloman, Edward Laemmle, Edward Sedgwick, Clifford Smith.

Reginald Denny Starred In Three Jewels

The releases include three Jewels starring Reginald Denny, regarded by many as the 1925 phenomenon of the screen, one each for Laura LaPlante, Mary Philbin, House Peters, four starring Hoot Gibson, two for Norman Kerry, one co-starring Virginia Valli and Pat O'Malley, one with Glenn Hunter, and three all star productions, one of which has May McAvoy and Pat O'Malley in the leading roles.

The first Universal release of the New Year is "The Little Giant," a screen adaptation of Hugh McNair Kahler's Saturday Evening Post" story, starring Glenn Hunter and directed by Will Nigh. This picture was made in the East and is the only picture Universal has made in the East since before the war. Edna Murphy is featured with Hunter in this picture, which is regarded as having excellent box-office qualities and with strong human interest appeal.

Schedule Calls for 17 Pictures Before Next August

The release date of this Jewel is January 3d.

"The Arizona Sweepstakes," a Hoot Gibson Jewel, adapted from an original story by Charles A. Logue, follows "The Little Giant" on the Universal release schedule, marked for distribution January 10. Clifford Smith directed this picture, which is a fast-action western drama featuring a great horse race. The supporting cast includes Helen Lynch, Emmett King, George Ovey, Philo McCullough, Kate Price, and Kingsley Benedict. Cliff Smith formerly directed William S. Hart in many of that star's biggest hits. He is putting into the new Hoot Gibson pictures all the western zip and dash at his command.

Mary Philbin Starred in "Stella Maris"

"Stella Maris," a superb screen adaptation of William J. Locke's famous novel, with Mary Philbin in the starring role, is the third Universal release for 1926. It is marked for release January 17th, and under the direction of Charles Brabin, maker of such successes as "Driven," "So Big," "While New York Sleeps," and "Six Days," gives Miss Philbin a sensational screen vehicle. The supporting cast includes Jason Robards, Elliott Dexter, Gladys Brockwell and other favorites.

"What Happened to Jones," the first Reginald Denny picture for 1926 follows, being released January 31st. This is a hilarious screen adaptation of the famous George Broadhurst stage farce, and was directed by William Seiter with a finish that stamps that director as a first-rater among high-comedy makers. Mel Brown adapted the play for Universal, and pretty Marian Nixon has the principal supporting role. This picture has received great praise on the part of trade and newspaper reviewers who have previewed it. Reports from the West Coast, where it has been prereleased, indicate that it is a decided hit as an audience picture.

"The Beautiful Cheat" Is Laura LaPlante's First

"Under Western Skies," the February 7th Jewel release, is a super-western starring Norman Kerry. It was writen and directed by Edward Sedgwick, with Ann Cornwall in the chief supporting role. This picture is photographically of superior quality as well as being filled with dashing horsemanship and engaging romance.

Laura LaPlante's first 1926 Jewel is "The Beautiful Cheat," adapted by A. P. Younger from the popular "Saturday Evening Post" story by Nina Wilcox Putnam. It was directed by Edward Sloman, with Harry Meyers in the chief supporting role. Included in the cast are Alexander Carr, Robert Alexander, Tom S. Guise, Kate Price and others of equal popularity on the screen.

On March 1st, in ample time for exploitation as a St. Patrick's Day offering, will come "The Cohens and Kellys," a humorous comedy drama made by Harry Pollard from Aaron Hoffman's stage play, "Two Blocks Away." This production features George Sidney and Charles Murray. Vera Gordon has an important role.

Victor Clark Becomes Head of Studio Operations at M-G-M

ANNOUNCEMENT was made by Louis B. Mayer, vice-president in charge of production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, that Victor Clark, for a number of years general manager of the Lasky Studios, has resigned to become associated with M-G-M, to take effect in the near future.

He is to occupy the newly created position at the M-G-M plant of Manager of Studio Operations. This is in accordance with the program of increased production activities for the coming season now being prepared by Mr. Mayer in association with Irving G. Thalberg.

"Nineteen twenty-six will witness the greatest program of producing in history of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer," said Mr. Mayer, "and our enlarged activities demand an increased personnel, and the new position of Manager of Studio Operations will be occupied by Mr. Clark, whom we believe to be one of the leading executives in the film production world."

"The Man in the Saddle," a Hoot Gibson production, adapted from William McLeod Raine's story "A Daughter of the Don's," is the next Universal release for March, which will reach the screen March 14th. Herbert Blache directed it from an adaptation by Raymond Schrock. Virginia Brown Faire, Cesare Gravina, George Grandee and others are in the cast. It is a colorful, hard-riding story and is reputed to be one of the best pictures Hoot ever made.

Virginia Valli and O'Malley In "Watch Your Wife"

"Combat," the next release, is a House Peters picture, made from an original screen story by J. G. Hawks and Edward Montagne. Lynn Reynolds directed it with a supporting cast including Wanda Hawley, Walter McGrail, C. E. Anderson, Charles Hill Mailes, Howard Truesdall and Steve Clemento. It is a melodramatic love story of the rugged lumber camps. It is rated as an exceptionally good House Peters picture.

Then comes "Watch Your Wife," a Jewel co-starring Virginia Valli and Pat O'Malley. It was directed by Svend Gade from a story by Goesta Legerwrantz, a Swedish author. Charles Whittaker adapted the story, which has been made into a smart comedy drama filled with humorous situations, drama and sophistication. Gade is the man who directed "Siege," and his current picture has the same box-office qualities and more. The supporting cast includes Aggie Herring, Nora Hayden, Nat Carr, Albert Conti and Helen Lee Worthing, the former Follies beauty. The picture will reach the screen April 4th.

"The Still Alarm" Listed as A May Release

"Skinner's Dress Suit," the great Reginald Denny comedy based on Henry Irving Dodge's famous story, is next on the Universal schedule. Laura LaPlante is co-starred with Denny in this picture. This team, which created a sensation in the screen world with their first co-starring vehicle a number of months ago, "Sporting Youth," again combine to make a dashing, entertaining drama. This picture has been highly praised by reviewers and by the public wherever it has been shown. William A. Seiter directed it, and thereby established himself as one of the leading feature comedy directors in the business. "Skinner's Dress Suit" will be released April 18th.

On May 2nd, Universal will release "The Still Alarm," the latest thriller produced by that company. It was made from the famous old stage melodrama written by Joseph Arthur and A. C. Wheeler. Edward Laemmle directed it from an adaptation by Charles Kenyon. William Russell and Helen Chadwick play the principal roles, with Edna Marian and Edward Hearn in the chief supporting parts. Richard C. Travers, Erin La Bissoniere, John T. Murray and Dot Farley also are in the cast. This picture is reputed to contain one of the greatest thrills ever made for pictures. Reviewers have characterized it as breath-taking. The spectacular scenes of the galloping fire horses, the rescues, the leaps into life-nets and other fire activities make it of continued interest and suspense.

Following "The Still Alarm," Universal will release another Hoot Gibson picture, "Chip of the Flying U," directed by Herbert Blache and adapted from the novel by B. M. Bowers. Virginia Browne Faire has the principal supporting role. Lyn Reynolds directed the film, which is a fast-action western drama. Its release date is May 9th.

Moss' Colony Books "The Skyrocket"

"The Skyrocket," Associated Exhibitors big special starring Peggy Hopkins Joyce, has been booked into B. S. Moss' Colony Theatre, Broadway, New York, for an indefinite run beginning Sunday, January 24. This production, first shown to the trade in the Grand Ball Room on the S.S. Leviathan on January 7, brings to the screen an internationally famed personality and will give moviegoers their first glimpse of one of the most renowned beauties of the age.

The picture boasts an extraordinary cast which includes, in addition to Miss Joyce, Owen Moore, Earle Williams, Gladys Hulette, Gladys Brockwell, Lillian Tashman, Bull Montana, Bernard Randall, and many others. It was the first independent production of Marshall Neilan and is said to be worthy of a place at the forefront of the many successful productions of this prominent director.

"My Old Dutch" Adapted From Stage Play

On May 23rd, "My Old Dutch" will be released. This is an all-star picture adapted from the famous old song and stage play by Albert Chevallier and Arthur Shirley. May McAvoy, Pat O'Malley and Jean Hersholt are featured in this production, which was directed by Larry Trimble. It is a moving human interest drama with a strong heart appeal and striking qualtites of suspense.

The first June release, to reach the screen June 13th, will be "The Love Thief," a Norman Kerry picture. The second June release, set for June 27th, will be another Reginald Denny picture, "Rolling Home."

"Rolling Home" is from a story by John Hicks Booth, and is being directed by William Seiter. Booth's original, which was a stage play and later a musical comedy, was adapted for the screen by Rex Taylor, the same man who adapted "Skinner's Dress Suit." "Rolling Home" promises to be another rollicking farce-comedy of the type which has made Denny one of the best box-office bets in the industry during the last few months.

The final 1925-1926 picture on the Universal Jewel schedule will be "The Phantom Bullet," a Hoot Gibson Production adapted from "Click of Triangle T," a novel by Oscar J. Friend. The Hoot Gibson production unit is putting every effort behind this picture and promises to make it an outstanding western-drama. It will be the best picture Hoot ever turned out for the Universal Jewel release schedule.

"Little Annie Rooney" Making World Conquest

Mary Pickford's "Little Annie Rooney" is conquering the world, according to reports from the Pickford-Fairbanks' studio, Hollywood. In far-off countries where the old song, which served as an inspiration for the photoplay, has never been heard of, the latest Mary Pickford screen success is registering the same decided hit as an audience and box-office production that it did in New York and other chief cities in the United States.

First London, then Paris, voted the picture of the tenements of New York City one of the big successes of the year. Now Germany has joined in the chorus and registered an emphatic approval. Not a single community yet has turned in an adverse report on the showing of this film.

"Little Annie Rooney" is popular in both large cities and small, and in Los Angeles, the home of the movies, it has run five weeks at the big Million Dollar Theatre, and the engagement still is underway.

New Branch Managers

N. C. Rice, one of the veteran exhibitors of the State of Iowa, and president of the Iowa State Exhibitors' League, has been appointed manager of the F. B. O. Des Moines exchange, to replace Mr. F. W. Young, who recently resigned.

C. L. Peavey, connected with F. B. O. for several years in a sales capacity, has been placed in charge of the Atlanta branch, to succeed Mr. F. L. Davie.

Added to "Red Dice" Cast

Cecil B. De Mille has added Alan Brooks, eminent stage and vaudeville star to the cast of "Red Dice" in which Rod La Rocque is starred.

Others players featured in "Red Dice," as adapted by Jeanie Macpherson and Douglas Doty from "The Iron Chalice," are Marguerite De La Motte, Gustave von Seyffertitz, Ray Hallor, Clarence Burton, Walter Long and George Cooper. William K. Howard is directing.

"Far Cry" Nears Finish Line

Balboni, the young Italian, who was given a directorship recently by First National Pictures, has nearly completed "The Far Cry," his first production, which promises to be an outstanding success.

Blanche Sweet has in "The Far Cry," one of her best roles. She is given capable assistance by Jack Mulhall. The cast includes John Sainpolis, Myrtle Stedman, Leo White, Hobart Bosworth, Dorothy Revier, Mathilde Comont and others. June Mathis has editorial supervision of the production, which is scheduled for release January 31st.

Metropolitan Pictures Signs Marie Prevost

METROPOLITAN scored a winning move for their line-up of productions for the 1926-27 season, this week, in signing Marie Prevost, one of the screen's brightest personalities and a reigninging box office magnet, under a long term contract.

The announcement of the signing of Miss Prevost was made January 5th, in Los Angeles by William Sistrom, general manager of Metropolitan Pictures, and in New York by John C. Flinn, president of the company.

Under the provisions of the contract Miss Prevost will be starred in a series of Metropolitan Productions to be released in next season's group of pictures and plans are being perfectly for a Marie Prevost production unit to film a number of popular books and plays which the company has had under consideration. A search for additional material especially suited for Miss Prevost will be started immediately.

John C. Flinn, president of Metropolitan Pictures, and vice-president of Producers Distributing Corporation through which the new Prevost pictures will be released, says that his company congratulates itself upon securing the services of Miss Prevost in the face of the keenest competition with a number of the most important film producing organizations.

"We regard Marie Prevost as one of the brightest personalities among all the reigning stars on the screen," said Mr. Flinn. "Her rise to popularity has been pronounced and decisive following her work in such pictures as "Tarnish" and the two Lubitsch pictures, "The Marriage Circle" and "Kiss Me Again," which were hailed by the critics as among the finest productions of the past year. And in every criticism the work of Miss Prevost has been commented on in terms of highest praise.

"Monte Carlo" to Go Into Work Soon; Cody Featured

"Monte Carlo," a brilliant satire on American tourists in Europe, will go into production during the next week at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, according to an announcemant by Hunt Stromberg, with Christy Cabanne, director of "The Midshipman," and Mae Murray's latest success, "The Masked Bride," as the director. Lew Cody will play the featured role.

The story was adapted and scenarized by Alice D. G. Miller, and will be given a lavish production, with brilliant European scenes, gorgeous costumes, and elaborate settings. It is a clever satirical comedy-drama, in which the deportment of visiting Americans at the world's gambling capital, and their trials and tribulations, form the central theme of a laughable plot.

Chadwick Starts Work On "Test of Donald Norton"

Production has been started on "The Test of Donald Norton," George Walsh's fifth production of the current season, at the West Coast studios of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation, by Reeves Eason, who directed the production under the personal supervision of Jesse J. Goldberg. "The Test of Donald Norton," a story of the Canadian Northwest, is an adaptation of the novel of the same name by Robert E. Pinkerton.

The exteriors will be made at Truckee, California, at which place Chadwick has erected an exact replica of the Hudson's Bay post at Fort Bruce, Canada. It is expected that the production will be completed in about eleven weeks.

Select "The Black Bird" As Title of Chaney Film

"The Black Bird" has been selected as the final release title of Lon Chaney's latest starring picture, which was directed by Tod Browning for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

The story is an original by Browning. Owen Moore, Renee Adoree and Doris Lloyd of "The Big Parade" fame, head the supporting cast.

Tacoma Commerce Board Aids In Exploiting "Hearts and Fists"

Every Public Body Helping in Putting Over Picture
100,000 Postcards Advertise Associated Exhibitors Release
Big Crowd at Premiere Held Early in January

ASSOCIATED EXHIBITORS, INC., are having the active co-operation of the Tacoma Chamber of Commerce in their exploitation of "Hearts and Fists," one of the Triumphant Thirty, which was a January release. This picture is the initial production of the recently erected H. C. Weaver Productions studio at Tacoma, Wash., and every public organization in the State is getting behind the production with all the resources at their command.

The world premiere of "Hearts and Fists" was held at the Rialto Theatre in Tacoma, on January 2nd, and was attended by leading State and civic officials. A capacity crowd was in attendance and thoroughly enjoyed the virile picture laid in the big-timber lands of the West and in which Marguerite de la Motte, John Bowers, Allan Hale and Dan Mason play the leading roles. Numerous scenes in the production were familiar to the audience and convinced many that the natural beauty of the mountainous Northwestern State and its almost perfect climate would result in Washington becoming production centre for the outdoors type of picture.

An instance of the manner in which Tacoma is backing up "Hearts and Fists" is seen in its Board of Commerce having purchased 100,000 postcards printed with a facsimile of the title of "Hearts and Fists" for free distribution by Tacoma citizens.

These postcards show a view of the famed Mount Tacoma, which appears in the production, and also gives the names of leading members of the cast. On the reverse side a script paragraph states the card contains an important message from Tacoma, Washington, and requests the readers to ask their favorite motion picture theatre to book "Hearts and Fists" if they wish to see Tacoma and the wonders of the Northwest. An added sentence gives credit to Associated Exhibitors, Inc., and states the photoplay to be a product of Tacoma, Washington.

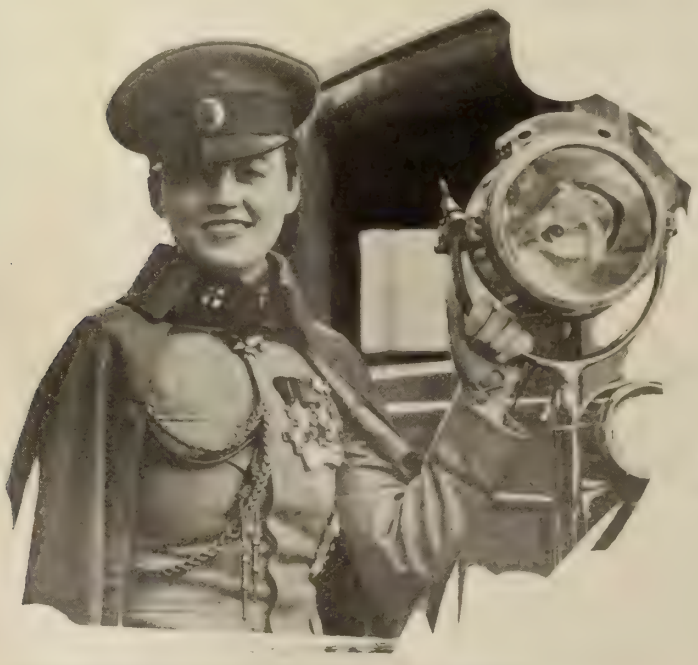
Suspense and Comedy In Warners' "Man Upstairs"

Suspense, comedy and romance are mingled in the Warner Bros. feature, "The Man Upstairs," the first print of which was received in New York and viewed by officials and executives of the organization this week. Monte Blue and Dorothy Devore are starred in this adaptation of the Earl Derr Biggers story, "The Agony Column," and, from all accounts, make a hit.

A fine cast supports the stars, and the Warners predict that the picture will prove one of the most popular attractions of the year. In the support are Helen Dunbar, "Heinie" Conklin, Eve Southern, Otto Hoffman, John Roche, Stanley Taylor, Carl Stockdale and Arthur Thalaso. Roy Del Ruth directed from the scenario by E. T. Lowe, Jr.

"Eve's Leaves"

Paul Sloane, who directed Leatrice Joy in her last De Mille picture, "Made for Love," has just returned to the De Mille Studio from a vacationing jaunt to New York. He will start the first week in January on "Eve's Leaves," Leatrice's next.



MASQUERADING — but it's Marion Davies in Cosmopolitan's M.-G.-M. feature, "Beverly of Graustark."

Max Reinhardt Praises "Little Annie Rooney"

Mary Pickford has received many fine compliments on the success of her latest picture "Little Annie Rooney," but a recent cablegram from Max Reinhardt, eminent European producer, contained praise which was especially significant when one considers the high artistic genius from which it emanated.

Reinhardt saw "Little Annie Rooney" at its Berlin premiere. Impulsively he cabled "The World's Sweetheart" as follows:

"Have seen your wonderful picture 'Little Annie Rooney.' Through your marvelous work and lovely characterization you will also be Germany's sweetheart very soon."

Reports from Germany to indicate that "Little Annie Rooney" has met with phenomenal success in that country, which would indicate that the celebrated stage director's opinion of this United Artists Corporation release is shared by the public there.

Edward Sloman To Direct "Old Soak" With Hersholt

Edward Sloman will direct a screen version of Don Marquis' big stage success, "The Old Soak," as his next Universal production.

The featured character roles will be played by Jean Hersholt, as his first picture under his new starring arrangement with Universal. The combination of Sloman, whose latest picture, "His People," has become so popular because of its humanness and feeling, and Hersholt, who has been acclaimed by many critics as the screen's foremost character actor, is expected to be productive of splendid results.

Books Gold Bond Pictures

"Born to Battle" will be Tom Tyler's next change at Cleveland, has sold "The Midnight Flyer," "Flaming Waters," "The King of the Turf," "The Isle of Retribution" and the next Johnson special, tentatively titled "Happiness" to W. H. Raynor for Reade's Hippodrome Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio. These five F. B. O. Gold Bond specials will play this first run house at an early date.

"Born To Battle"

"Born to Battle" will be Tom Tyler's next western starring vehicle for F. B. O. The story was written by William E. Wing, noted author of Western fiction and is said to be unusual in its novel treatment of a Western dramatic theme. Tom Tyler will again be supported by his rollicking band of helpmates including Frankie Darro, as the kid; "Sitting Bull," the dog, and the pony.

Start on "Dancer of Paris"

Work was started this week at the Cosmopolitan Studios in New York on "The Dancer of Paris," a Robert T. Kane Production for First National release. The two leading players that have been cast are Lowell Sherman and Conway Tearle. The balance of the cast will be chosen next week.

Al Santell is directing "The Dancer of Paris," with Art Jacobson as assistant director.

Big Cast Is Signed for Universal Feature Film

One of the biggest casts of the season is promised for "The Mystery Club," which Herbert Blache will direct as a Universal special for the 1926 release. Blache is now casting the supporting roles, and expects to start work within a week.

Matt Moore has been signed in the featured leading role, and Edith Roberts has been chosen to play opposite him.

Warner Oland, well-known screen "heavy" has been chosen for a prominent role, and Mildred Harris will return to the screen for the first time since her recent marriage in an equally prominent part.

Charles Puffy, Universal comedy star, will play a comedy role before he starts in on his new short-reel series. Nat Carr, and Charles Crane also have been signed for the picture.

"The Mystery Club" was adapted by Blache and Helen Broderick from a mystery novel by Arthur Somers Roche.

Bell to Direct "Charm"

Monta Bell's next directorial effort at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios will be the noted New York stage play, "Charm," by John Alexander Kirkpatrick, according to an announcement from the offices of Hunt Stromberg, associate executive at the big studio.

The play was purchased by the M-G-M organization some months ago, and was adapted to the screen by Alice D. G. Miller. It is a brilliant comedy drama of modern society and its problems.

Details as to cast have not yet been decided. Bell will commence preparations for the new production on completion of the Cosmopolitan production of "Ibanez Torrent," which he is now directing with Ricardo Cortez, Greta Garbo, Tully Marshall, Arthur Edmund Carew and a notable cast.

Will Start "Money Talks"

Archie Mayo will start direction immediately after Christmas, of "Money Talks," a new Rupert Hughes' story in which Claire Windsor, and a notable cast will appear, according to an announcement by Hunt Stromberg, associate executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios.

The new play is a clever comedy of modern life, laid about the pitfalls and advantages of extravagances, and with a novel twist that upsets all sterling maxims.

Details of the cast will be announced in a few days.

Mayo is one of the newest additions to the directorial organization of the M-G-M studios.

"The Silvery Art"

"The Silvery Art," one-reel Red Seal skiing special, is one of the most sought for featurettes because of its timely quality and interest as the present booking demand for it attests. Fabian's circuit, Loew's chain and a number of other big strings are playing it now. Also, the New York Rivoli and other big first run houses have played it all over the country.

Olive Borden Steps Into Big Roles in Wm. Fox Productions

Wampas Star Makes Rapid Strides in Screen Work
Her First Important Featured Role Is in the Tom Mix Production, "The Yankee Senor"

IN the year just closed there is probably no young screen player who has so definitely stepped forward to popularity's goal as Olive Borden, who approaches the new season as a featured player in Fox Films. By securing this recent contract Miss Borden justifies the opinion of the experts who last winter voted her one of the Wampas stars. Her success now ceases to be a prophecy; it has become an established fact.

Her exceptional beauty, as well as a proved ability to play a wide range of roles, has successfully guided Miss Borden up from an extra player, through the school of two-reel comedies into her present place as a member of the Fox stock company. Her new affiliation renders her eligible for many important opportunities in the forthcoming program of big stories and plays planned by the Fox organization.

Miss Borden's first appearance in a featured part of importance is in the Tom Mix starring vehicle, "The Yankee Senor," released for January 10. Here as leading lady to the popular Mr. Mix, this young actress has been sensationally successful in capturing critical approval.

Realizing the quality of her work in this first picture, the company next cast her in the feminine lead of "The World of Promise" an epic drama of the west, which, according to officials, will surpass even "The Iron Horse" in magnitude. This production is now nearing completion and will, it is said, firmly entrench this new player among the outstanding artists on the screen.

The entire film career of Miss Borden extends only two years back. She went to Hollywood in the fall of 1923, securing her first work in the Screen Writers' Revue. Later she played small bits here and there as an extra until Hal Roach finally selected her as a member of his comedy staff, where she was first featured in "vamp" roles. In this work she began to attract considerable attention and before long was receiving parts of increasing importance.

Then came the offer of the role in "The Yankee Senor." Before the picture was finished, the producing chiefs at the Fox Studios agreed that here was an exceptional screen find, and to substantiate this belief a long term contract was handed to Miss Borden for her signature.

With her first picture now released and the second nearly completed, the promising young actress has been chosen for the feminine lead in "Yellow Fingers," a story of the South Seas which will soon go into production at the Fox Coast Studios under the direction of Emmett Flynn.

DENNY—"CALIFORNIA STRAIGHT AHEAD"—Universal—that's a three-bagger that's a home run.

First National Month

Korach Puts the New Broadway, Cleveland, In First National Exploitation Contest

MILTON W. KORACH, manager of the New Broadway Theatre, Cleveland, Ohio, may or may not win one of the prizes in First National Pictures' January Month Exploitation Contest, but at all events he deserved honorable mention for being the first to submit his entry.

The New Broadway is a theatre seating over 1,400 people and is noted for the high calibre of shows it presents.

"We Moderns" starring Colleen Moore was the picture selected by Mr. Korach for the first week in January.

As previously stated, this contest, which runs throughout the month of January, is open to all types of houses from the smallest to the largest and covers all classes of exploitation, advertising and publicity.

Following are the rules governing the contest:

Theatres will be divided into three classifications:

1. Theatres of over 1,500 seating capacity.
2. Theatres of from 1,000 to 1,499 seating capacity.
3. Theatres of less than 1,000 seating capacity.

The following cash awards will be made:

For the best complete campaign in each classification	$250
For the second best campaign in each classification	150
For the third best campaign in each classification	100
For the best newspaper advertisement	50
For the best lobby display	50
For the most original stunt	50
In addition, one prize of $50 will be awarded for the most effective newspaper stunt used by any theatre in any classification	50
TOTAL OF PRIZES	$2,000

Exhibitors participating in this contest will have a fine array of pictures to "play up."

The first of the Richard Barthelmess productions of the new season is "Just Suppose," adapted from the play by A. E. Thomas, produced by Inspiration Pictures and directed by Kenneth Webb. Supporting Mr. Barthelmess are Lois Moran, Geoffrey Kerr and Bijou Fernandez, together with other celebrated players.

"We Moderns" is Miss Moore's current release, and has a niche of its own in Colleen's gallery of character studies.

"Too Much Money" is an Earl Hudson production featuring Lewis Stone and Anna Q. Nilsson.

"Joanna" has been released, and Dorothy Mackaill has a charming role in this offering, which lends itself to exploitation.

"The Reckless Lady" is a Robert Kane production.

One of the most interesting January releases is the Louis B. Mayer-John M. Stahl contribution to First National's program, "Memory Lane," an original story by Mr. Stahl and Benjamin Glazer, with Eleanor Boardman and Conrad Nagel featured, supported by William Haines, John Steppling, Eugenia Ford and Frankie Darrow.

"Bluebeard's Seven Wives" is a current release, abounding in humor and fast action.

"Clothes Make the Pirate" presents Leon Errol and Dorothy Gish, and a fine cast in a splendid picture.

"The Girl From Montmartre" is a Sawyer-Lubin production, giving ample opportunity for showmanship to demonstrate itself in any house.

"The Splendid Road" has Lionel Barrymore, Anna Q. Nilsson, Robert Frazer, George Bancroft and a number of fine players in the cast.

Select Madge Bellamy To Play Title Role In "Sandy"

A DEFINITE decision regarding the actress to play the title role in Elenore Meherin's serial story, "Sandy," has been arrived at by the officials of Fox Films. It is announced that Madge Bellamy has been selected from a dozen or more players who have been under consideration for the part in this picturization of the latest and most popular fiction work by the author of "Chickie" and other well known stories.

"Sandy" is now being read by millions in more than a hundred big city newspapers throughout the country, and since the announcement that Fox Films would bring it to the screen, considerable rivalry has been manifested among Hollywood players for the characterization of 1926 flapper bride who refused to abide by her marriage vows.

Appearing in support of Madge Bellamy will be Leslie Fenton as Douglas Keith, the boy Sandy really loves. The role of Ben Murillo, her husband, will be filled by Bardson Bard, whose recent screen work has earned him the epithet of "Hollywood's handsomest lover." Other players of popularity are now being chosen and further cast announcements will be made shortly.

Harrison Ford will portray Ramon Worth, whose place in Sandy's affections ranks second only to that of Douglas Keith. Her parents will be enacted by David Torrence and Edythe Chapman.

Speed Up Production at F. N. Studios

WITH the advent of the new year production activities at First National's Eastern studios in New York are speeding up and the outlook is for a busy program for the remainder of the Winter and Spring.

The "Men of Steel" unit has returned from Binrmingham, Alabama, where seven weeks were spent on location shooting steel mill and iron mine scenes. Interiors are now being filmed at the New York studios.

Some time between January 7th and 11th "The Savage," an original story for the screen by Ernest Pascal, will be started under the supervision of Earl Hudson. Ben Lyon will have the featured male role. The other members of the cast will be announced later. Fred Newmeyer, Harold Lloyd director loaned to First National, will direct. George Folsey will be cameraman and Nick Barrows will be the "gagman." Interiors will be started first at the New York studios and then it is planned to go to Florida for exteriors.

A. L. Rockett has selected "Puppets," the stage play by Frances Lightner, as his first production under the First National banner at this company's Eastern studios. No announcement has been made as to starting date, but as Milton Sills will be starred, production will probably not start until "Men of Steel" is completed, in which Sills is now playing the starring role.

Among other scripts ready for production are "Mismates," and "The Boss of Little Arcady." Scenarists are working on "The Crystal Cup," "Puppets" and another not announced.

"Laugh Month" Material

Cross-Country Radio Boosts "Laugh Month"; Screens and Press Continue Fine Support

THE screen, radio and press combined last week to give the "Laugh Month" celebration a flying start.

The radio programs were broadcast both from the East and West Coasts, thus assuring a nation-wide air service for the "Laugh Month" message.

The West Coast broadcasting was done from Station KNX, known as "The Voice of Hollywood." On Saturday, December 26th, a "Laugh Month" program was broadcast, including short addresses on the subject by Larry Semon, Dorothy Dwan and Walter Wessling of Pathe's Los Angeles office. A special three-hour "Laugh Month" program was scheduled for Saturday, January 2nd, with such well-known screen personalities as Harry Langdon, Charley Chase, and the famous "Our Gang" troupe on the program.

In the East the message of "Laugh Month" was broadcast on Wednesday, January 6th, from Station WJZ, New York City, by "Pete" Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

A series of radio talks on Short Features that are particularly timely because of the Laugh Month Campaign now at its height which is attracting special attention to Short Features, are being broadcast by represenatives of Educational Pictures from Station WBZ, in Boston, the powerful Westinghouse Station located at the Hotel Brunswick in that city.

"How a News Reel Is Made"

The first of these talks was given on Wednesday, January 6, by Mr. G. S. Moffat, local Kinograms representatives. The subject was, "How a News Reel Is Made." Mr. Moffat focused attention on the Educational news reels for a fifteen-minute period, and in the course of his discussion he covered most interestingly the different phases of news-reel production methods—how the regular and free lance camera man get subjects, their perils, their undergo—speed that is necessary—editorial policies—the important part, the laboratory plans and methods of turning out the reel and news-reel distribution here and in foreign fields.

Taking the Shenandoah disaster as an example, Mr. Moffat gave a most thrilling outline of the experiences of the Kinograms cameramen in covering this assignment from the time they first were advised of the disaster until by almost super-human efforts the finished reels were run off on the screens of picture houses in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Buffalo, Albany, Syracuse and Rochester, a little more than twenty-four hours after the crash. The rest of the country was served at proportionate speed, Mr. Moffat explained.

News Reel Shown In the Studio

Immediately after this talk there followed a screening right in the studio of the current issue of Kinograms, and as the scenes were being shown Mr. Moffat talked interestingly about them, so interestingly, in fact, that the next day the Boston Educational Exchange was kept busy answering telephone inquiries from radio fans who sought information as to local theatres where the news-reel talked about could be seen.

The response from the radio fans who communicated direct with the radio broadcasting station was so great that Mr. Moffat was asked to give another talk on the news reel in the near future.

The second talk of the series was broadcasted the evening of January 13, the subject being "How a Two-Reel Comedy Is Made." This story was handled so as to enlighten movie fans on the extreme care devoted to the making of Short Features at the studios—the difficulties that must be overcome to get laughts across—the selection of comedy types and qualifications required —how titles and gags are written, and the importance of the comedy in all well balanced programs.

It is expected that similar talks will be continued throughout January on additional Short Features and Laugh Month topics, through the Boston station.

Laugh Month Exploitation Contest Going Good

Every exhibitor has an opportunity for performing real service to his fellow exhibitors as well as a chance to win one of the cash prizes in entering the Laugh Month exploitation contest in which the Laugh Month Committee is offering $850.00 in prizes for the best local campaigns tying up with the national drive.

One of the principal advantages of the Laugh Month campaign from the exhibitor standpoint is the examples it will furnish of one hundred per cent advertising campaigns providing extra profits from the short features as well as the longer features. If you are conducting a local Laugh Month campaign—and if you aren't you ought to be—every other exhibitor in the country is vitally interested in what you did and what the results were at the box-office.

The Laugh Month Committee invites every exhibitor conducting any local campaign to enter the contest with proofs and photographs illustrating his campaign. If you tie up with the National Laugh Month campaign with local advertising and publicity each week in January, you can enter the contest with each week's campaign. In this way, you have four opportunities to win one of the cash prizes which run from $100.00 to $5.00 for each of the four weeks of the month. Get your report into the Laugh Month Committee headquarters at 218 West 42nd Street, New York City, within two weeks after the close of each week's campaign.

Laugh Month Idea Sweeps The Country

Laugh Month has swept the country by storm with its publicity campaign reaching newspapers from Coast to Coast and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes. The clippings reaching the secretary at headquarters, which started as a trickle in December, have become a veritable flood. In addition to the almost daily mention in the New York City papers have been editorials, cartoons, front pags screamer heads and column mentions from all parts of the country.

In Texas where "Ma" Ferguson issued a proclamation naming January as "Laugh Month," the newspapers throughout the State carried both editorial and news comment on the event. The Associated Press and the United Press services carried this news all over the world.

Texas theatres had the proclamation painted on one and three sheet cards and used them for lobby displays.

R. F. ("Pete") Woodhull, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, used the banner as a lobby display and decorated his marquee with the pennants. He arranged his bookings so that the features were not too heavy, and included a comedy on every bill during the month. Then he advertised that a comedy would be part of every show and gave it good space in his newspaper copy. In talking the matter over with his patrons, most of whom he knows personally, he asked comments. They all agreed that the comedy every day was a splendid idea.

Lustig Tries "Charleston" Contest

A Laugh Month Charleston Dance Contest on January 14th, play-date of the Educational-Cameo "Hot Feet," was the method by which David J. Lustig, manager of the Regun Theatre, 116th Street at Lenox Avenue, New York City, exploited this one-reel picture as a real box-office attraction and tied up with the Laugh Month campaign.

Lustig was impressed by the excellent exploitation possibilities that this Short Feature presented on account of its being a comedy based on the present-day Charleston craze, around which a dance contest could most appropriately be staged.

When Regun Theatre patrons were first notified that entrants were desired for the big dance event, they responded immediately and a flood of requests from those who desired to be considered as contestants, far in advance of the house management's expectations, were received. To help put the contest across Educational's New York Exchange supplied a number of special stills for lobby display, showing Virginia Vance doing the Charleston. These stills were also reproduced in the Regun Theatre's house organ, "The Newsette," together with accompanying lessons on "How to do the Charleston" by Miss Vance.

GLENN TRYON will lure long laughs in "Long Pants," which Hal Roach has ready for Pathe and Laugh Month.

Haring-Blumenthal Exploit Laugh Month

In Jersey City and Union City, New Jersey, David Schaefer director of publicity and advertising for the Haring and Blumenthal Theatre Circuit is concentrating his efforts on the third week and expects to put on a smashing campaign for the Central and Lincoln Theatres which are two of the main houses of that district.

He is decorating the lobbies of both theatres with clown figures and papier mache heads and cutouts. The ushers and doormen will all be dressed in harlequin suits and the newspaper copy will be in keeping with the spirit of the occasion.

Schaefer is also going to put out a float advertising the comedy feature of the program at both theatres and this will have half dozen clown figures in addition to advertising the features and comedies to be shown during their laugh festival.

NO TOMBSTONE BOOSTER, though he's Ralph Graves. He contributed his Laugh-Month bit with Mack Sennett's two-reeler, "Wide Open Faces," for Pathe.

How Tillson Put It Over In Kalamazoo

Roy Tillson staged one of the greatest Short Feature newspaper advertising, publicity and exploitation campaigns that was ever accorded a two-reeler in the State of Michigan, when the Educational-Lupino Lane Comedy "The Fighting Dude" played the Fuller Theatre which he manages at Kalamazoo, Michigan, January 3rd to 6th.

The Lupino Lane Comedy, which incidentally was pronounced by February "Screenlan and recently in the columns of the New York Telegraph as one of the best of all Laugh Month releases, was booked by Mr. Tillson to serve as the principal feature in a great Laugh Month Exploitation campaign.

That he succeeded admirably may best be ascertained by a summary of what was used to exploit the comedy and what the campaign accomplished.

Short Feature and Laugh Month "ad" space dominated the three column by seventeen inch newspaper layout used in the Kalamazoo Gazette as an opening announcement, and likewise the smaller "ads" that succeeded it.

Laugh Month secured a succession of humorous refeerences from the pen of "Penn E. Wise," one of the foremost columnists in the Middle West. One of the articles in the Kalamazoo Gazette stated: "In order to enter into the spirit of National Laugh Month, which is now under way, Le Roy Tillson, manager of the Fuller, has booked 'The Fighting Dude' for a showing at the theatre starting Sunday. The Fuller boss in order to carry out the desired effect has instructed Slim Doreman, on the gate, to use a dude make-up during the time this comedy is being shown. Slim was around this mornin' trying to borrow some balloon bottom pants, some polka-dot spats and a little black derby to get the desired effect."

LAUGH OFF "The Gosh Darned Mortgage" if you can—it's Mack Sennett's laughster for Pathe release during Laugh Month.

Tillson Used Trailer on "The Fighting Dude"

Besides the special Laugh Month accessories including a banner, posters and pennants, Mr. Tillson used a trailer on "The Fighting Dude," a slide, 11x14 lobby cards, 50 one-sheets and two three-sheets on this comedy.

Several window displays were arranged for and a shadow-box was used in the lobby in which a cut-out of Lane was placed.

Type-set one-sheets displayed on front of all street-cars passing the theatre, featured the Short Feature and Laugh Month program. Special Laugh Month date strips were used as well, with the Educational-Lupino Lane one-sheets.

For a street bally a rough looking man togged out as a prize fight trainer carried a banner reading, "I am the trainer of THE FIGHTING DUDE—See me at The Fuller."

Three-sheet lobby display boards, lobby and marquee hangers, electric signs and display frames all carried the Laugh Month message in a featured and forceful manner.

Mr. Tillson's Laugh Month campaign aroused the greatest enthusiasm in and around Kalamazoo, and he reported most gratifying results at the box-office.

In a wire to Educational's home offices in New York City, Tillson said:

Kalamazoo, Mich., Jan. 12, 1926.

EDUCATIONAL FILM EXCHANGES, INC., 370 7TH AVE., NEW YORK, N. Y.

BOX OFFICE PEPPED UP AT LEAST TWENTY-FIVE PER CENT. DURING LAFF MONTH. PATRONS SEEM TO HAVE CAUGHT THE SPIRIT. THEY LAUGH COMING IN AND GOING OUT. CONGRATULATIONS ON SOME WONDERFUL EDUCATIONAL LAFF MONTH SPECIALS. EVERYONE A KNOCKOUT. NOW PLAYING CHEAP SKATES. BOY HOW THEY ROAR.

ROY TILLSON.

SIBILANT ALFALFA is the same as "Whispering Whiskers," but the latter is Mack Sennett's two-reeler; so Pathe will pile up laughs with it in the Merriment Month.

The Moving Picture World

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Stand by for SHORT FEATURE MONTH!

THE "infant" industry has an orphan on its own doorstep. The orphan, particularly of late, has been brought in from the cold, clothed and given a square meal, but sooner or later it has been kicked back into the cold. The stepchild has hit the doormat so often that the "Welcome" looks like "Parking Room Only."

The orphan is the Short Feature. Today it gets a reception fit for the Prodigal Son. Tomorrow it is out in the snowbank.

Moving Picture World is launching SHORT FEATURE MONTH, not with the idea of making a beggar a king for a day, but with the idea of bringing a stepchild in from the doorstep, feeding it, nourishing it and giving it the PERMANENT place in the affections of showman and public which it deserves.

SHORT FEATURE MONTH is the working title of the plan. Details of the Moving Picture World meeting which initiated the move will be found on another page of this issue. And more to come. This is to ask you to stand by for SHORT FEATURE MONTH, January, 1926.

The men who specialize in producing, distributing and exploiting the Short Feature will see to it, Mr. Showman, that you will not have to whisper to your patrons next January that you are "trying something new"—a program made up largely or in its entirety of little features. No apologies will be necessary. You'll be giving three cheers. And the men, women AND children will be three-cheering you at the box-office.

"Fillers" had to be apologized for in the old days, perhaps. That curse has left its mark more on the exhibiting than on the producing field. The great majority of SHORT FEATURES today need no apology whatsoever. They are built to entertain. They DO entertain.

The exhibitor who thinks of "fillers" today as he did six or seven years ago, and whose advertising whispers in agate type about his "shorts," gets just that out of them at the box-office—a whisper. The showman who shouts about his Little Features, specifying names, brands, personalities, gets that out of them at the box-office—a shout.

Bob Fitzsimmons never scaled above the middleweight limit in his entire ring career. David wasn't much for size, but he slammed Goliath for a home run. Size does not make the man. Size does not make the picture.

We ask you to stand by for SHORT FEATURE MONTH, not because it is a "Month," and not because it is our idea. We invite every publisher in the business to contribute.

We ask, not a sentimental interest in an orphan, but sound and solid co-operation in a movement for better business. The orphan is going to be a breadwinner.

Stand by!

William J. Reilly

WE are reproducing the above editorial from the October 17 issue of Moving Picture World for several reasons. In it we asked you to "Stand by for SHORT FEATURE MONTH!"

"Short Feature Month," as you see, was a Moving Picture World idea. The name was a WORKING TITLE, changed later by the Short Features Advertising Association to the more GRAPHIC and attractive name, "Laugh Month."

"Laugh Month" has been given an acceptance by the press NEVER before accorded to a "Month" or a "Week." Because it has been handled in a workmanlike and UNSELFISH manner by the Short Features Advertising Association. And because its basic appeal is a basic HUMAN appeal—the desire to laugh and be happy. A campaign to capitalize on—SURELY.

We ask the exhibitor friends of Moving Picture World to get aboard "Laugh Month," not because the idea of a Short Feature Month came from this paper, but because the idea in ITSELF is bone, blood, and sinew, the aim of every exhibitor—to "send 'em away happy."

"SEND 'EM AWAY HAPPY." When you have done that you have fulfilled the highest aim of the EXHIBITOR and the finest purpose of the THEATRE.

We asked all our exhibitor friends to stand by. Now we ask them to tune in.

Get the munitions—not of war—but of LAUGHTER from your nearest short feature exchange, participating in "Laugh Month," or from the Short Features Advertising Association, 218 West 42nd Street, New York City.

Tune in on "Laugh Month" for BETTER—HAPPIER—BUSINESS.

WILLIAM J. REILLY.

At Half Way Post, Success Of "Laugh Month" Is Assured

THE success of National Laugh Month, even before the halfway mark was reached, has been great enough to warrant making it an annual event, according to reports received by Fox Films from various branches throughout the United States.

While it is true that many exhibitors did not take full advanage of the wide publicity campaign, there were enough who did to prove the practicability of the plan. Some who were a bit timid in the beginning fell into line after their competitors had proved the box-office value of an all-comedy program and it seems likely that many more of the doubters will do likewise before the end of the month.

In Kalamazoo, Mich., an exhibitor made such a big play on a two-reel comedy that it completely overshadowed his feature attraction and the result was one of the biggest weeks ever recorded in his box-office. In his report to the Laugh Month Committee, this exhibitor confessed that he undertook the experiment with considerable misgiving, but nevertheless he undertook it. "Now I'm mighty glad I did," he declared in his letter, "and I'm going to do it again—every once in a while."

Down in Texas, "Ma" Ferguson, the first woman governor, issued a special proclamation designating January as Laugh Month and the newspapers helped the thing along with a tremendous volume of front-page publicity. Live exhibitors were not slow to hook on and take advantage of the opportunity, many of them having the proclamation framed for lobby display purposes.

"We feel sure," said a member of the committee, "that with proper cooperation on the part of exhibitors, we can make National Laugh Month a big thing. It has been suggested that we make it an annual affair and we are already considering plans for our 1927 campaign. It is, of course, too early to expect comprehensive reports from over the country, but such as we have received indicate that Laugh Month will go over big. However, all we can do is to launch the idea and handle the publicity. It is up to the individual exhibitor as to how much he benefits from it. We are very grateful to the newspapers, film trade papers, cartoonists and, in fact, to everybody who has helped to put the idea across. All we had hoped to do this year was to plant the seed and in that, at least, Laugh Month has already proved a success.

Out at the Fox West Coast Studio, George E. Marshall, general supervisor of comedy production, is preparing to wind up the year's schedule. The latest of the Van Bibber series, "The Reporter" was completed a few days ago, leaving only two yet to be made. Four remain on the Imperial incompleted list and two of the Helen and Warren married life series.

Canadian Books Two Comedies

The usual practice in some centres is to run double-feature programes, but an exhibitor who has a different idea is Donat Paquin, proprietor of the Laurier Theatre, Hull, Quebec.

Mr. Paquin thinks so well of the drawing power of good short subjects that he books two comedies for every bill. The people like them, he finds, so he gives them two.

The regular program also includes an International News, as well as the feature and musical specialties.

Four Comedy Subjects Listed On Pathe Program for January 24

Hal Roach Contributes "Charley, My Boy" A New Mack Sennett, "Whispering Whiskers" Patheserial "Green Archer," Chapter No. 8

FOUR comedy subjects that will enliven any "Laugh Month" program are listed on the Pathe short-feature schedule for the week of January 24th—the fourth week of fun festivities. Both Mack Sennett and Hal Roach are represented by two-reel comedies, and "Topics of the Day" and "Aesop's Film Fables" offer a full quota of laughs. Also on the week's schedule are included a thrilling chapter of the Patheserial "The Green Archer," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight," a Pathe Review and two topical issues of Pathe News.

Hal Roach produced the hilarious fun-film "Charley, My Boy," a two-reeler starring Charley Chase. Katherine Grant appears opposite Chase, and Walter James, William Courtright, Fred Kelsey and Sidney D'Albrook complete the cast. Leo McCarey directed.

Mack Sennett made "Whispering Whiskers" a laugh-riot enacted by an all-star cast of Sennett funsters. Billy Bevan, Andy Clyde, Madeline Hurlock and Kewpie Morgan are in the cast. Del Lord directed.

"The Little Brown Jug" is sure to please all audiences, as the Paul Terry animated cartoon creations are at their funniest in this subject of the "Aesop's Film Fables." Each issue of "Topics of the Day" during "Laugh Month" carries a special title telling about the designation of January as a month of laughter on the screen.

"The Uprising Generation" is a very timely release of the Grantland Rice series of "Sportlights." This subject entertainingly demonstrates the fact that the uprising generation is an active, vigorous lot of youngsters because all seek some form of athletics to reach the goal of good health. J. L. Hawkinson is the producer.

"The Cottage in the Woods" is the title of the eighth chapter of the Patheserial, "The Green Archer," adapted by Frank Leon Smith from Edgar Wallace's novel of the same name. In this chapter, Abel Bellamy promises to reveal the whole story of the mysterious green archer to Spike Holland, the reporter, the next day. But Bellamy continues to develop his villainous plots, Allene Ray and Walter Miller are featured in a cast which includes Frank Lackteen, Burr McIntosh, Dorothy King and Walter P. Lewis. Spencer Bennet directed.

Pathe Review No. 4 features a trio of entertaining subjects: "Workers Under the Earth," another microscopic study of "The Magic Eye" series produced by L. H. Tolhurst; "The Harvest Fleet," showing scenes of reaping time in great western wheat fields; and interesting scenes at Rutgers College in Pathecolor.

Two issues of Pathe News complete the Pathe short-feature schedule for the week of January 24th.

"Speed Limit" for January

Although not at present producing or distributing short subjects, Lumas Film Corporation will release for January "Laugh Month" a special comedy feature in the "Speed Limit." This Gotham production was originally scheduled for February release, but on account of its hilarious qualities the release has been brought forward to help celebrate Laugh Month.

Raymond McKee is the principal funmaker in this story of an ambitious young garage worker who has a new idea to save wear on tires. He is ably supported by Ethel Shannon and Rona Lee.

ADVENTURES OF MAZIE. (F. B. O.—Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn. On number three and holding up good. Some say not as good as her former series. Sunday, yes. Good appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

CONSTANT SIMP. (F. B. O.—Series). Star, Alberta Vaughn "Adventures of Mazie," series two. A very good short subject for any house as mose of the comedies are very tame. These fill the bill much better. Tone, none. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, sixty percent. All classes town of 2,900. Admission 10-25, specials, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (486 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

FAIR WARNING. (Educational—Comedy). Star, Al St. John. Two reels of laughs. New print. Book it while it's new. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LOCKED OUT. (Universal—Comedy). I have run quite a few of them and find them quite good; the acting is natural and most of the comedy situations well worked out. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Small town class and farmers' town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

SAY IT WITH FLOUR. (Fox—Comedy). A two -reel comedy that has not much to it, you can get lots better. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphia Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

TEMPEST CODY'S MAN HUNT (Universal—Western). A two-reel western that was very good; will take anywhere. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphia Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

MOVIES. (Educational-Comedy). Star Lloyd Hamilton. Hamilton seems to be slipping. Not the laughs you expect from him. This is pretty good, but by no means a long howl. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WILD BEASTS OF BORNEO. (Educational). A wonderful educational subject of wild animals, very interesting. New print. Sunday, yes. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WILD WEST. (Pathe-Serial). Star, Jack Mulhall. This is a good western serial and has lots of comedy. Business is getting better every week. All classes, town of 806. Admission 10-20. W. O. Herndon, Liberty

PICKING PEACHES. (Pathe-Comedy) Star, Harry Langdon. Very funny, action jerky, due to parts cut out, but gets lots of laughs just the same. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

PINHEAD. (Fox) Star, Clyde Cook. A laugh a line. Almost any audience is ready-made for a comedy like this. They'll have to like the limper-legged Cook every time. All classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

RIDERS OF THE KITCHEN RANGE. (Pathe-Comedy). A fair slapstick comedy. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SEEING THINGS. (Pathe-Comedy). "Our Gang." Very funny. "Our Gang" comedies, the best on the market of juvenile character. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK SLEUTHS. (Pathe-Comedy). Good two-reel comedy that received lots of hearty laughs. Good appeal. Neighborhood class town of 4,200. Admission 10-20. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre, Aberdeen, Mississippi.

SPANISH ROMEO. (Fox-Comedy). Star, Earl Foxe. One of the best of the Van Bibber Series. A good comedy for a weak sister. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TOO MANY BUCKS. (Universal-Western) Star, Ben Corbett. Here is a two-reel Western full of entertainment. It has comedy and stunts as well as a Western setting. The audience will surely enjoy this one. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre, (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

MARY QUEEN OF TOTS. "Our Gang." Be sure and boost this one and advertise it big. Some new stunts in this one that will have the kids guessing how they do it. A good laugh all through. Tone and appeal, good. Working class city of 200,000. Admission 10-15-20. W. C. Budge, Comedy Theatre (275 seats), Jamaica, New York.

"National Laugh Month" Can Be Used as Good Business Lever

By AMEDEE J. VAN BUREN

President of Timely Films, Inc., Producers of "Topics of the Day."

"NATIONAL LAUGH MONTH" can be made a great leverage for big business and if exhibitors will tie-up the front of their theatres with the "National Laugh Month" campaign of the Short Subject producers, they'll find their January receipts the greatest ever.

There is absolutely no question about the possibilities of short subjects. They are one of the greatest box office bets in the motion picture industry. Give the "shorts" a chance in the "lights" and the newspaper displays and they'll bring in the millions who are thought to be staying at home with their radios. No exhibitor wants to stand still. He must progress. But he can't do it unless he lets people know what's at his theatre. That's the way to build business. Buy the best, and then advertise that you've got it. You've got to go after the business and the "National Laugh Month" campaign is the very best medium I know of to do it, because it offers so many angles for the business go-getter.

We insist that each weekly issue of TOPICS OF THE DAY and AESOP'S FABLES must contain its full quota of laughs. But during "National Laugh Month" the TOPICS and FABLES delivered exhibitors will be far and away the biggest laugh producers we've ever put out, or I don't know laughs when I hear and see them

Here's a chance to build business, and permanently add new faces to your audience. They'll come in first out of curiosity and with good short subjects you'll keep 'em coming each week.

The "National Laugh Month" drive will be bigger than any similar drive ever launched in this or any other industry. The producers are ready with products. They want to make "National Laugh Month," January, 1926, the biggest month in exhibitor box office history.

In Her First Fox Comedy

Fox comedy fans will see a new face on the screen in "A Bunkrupt Honeymoon" now being screened under the direction of Lou Sciler. The little lady is Shirley Palmer, who plays the feminine lead opposite Harold Goodwin. It is her first appearance in a Fox comedy.

Big "U" Accessories on "Shorts" For "Laugh Month" at Exchanges

THAT Universal does not intend to spare any effort in assisting its Exhibitors in getting the utmost benefit of National Laugh Month is evidenced by the fact that advertising accessories had been sent to all Universal Exchanges nearly seven weeks in advance of prints released during that month.

This information was learned from Dave Bader, manager of Advertising Accessories for Universal Pictures Corporation, with whom Sydney Singerman, Program Manager, has been working steadily to improve Universal's service in forty-two accessory departments throughout the United States and Canada.

Besides the regular Jewels released in January, and the serials and westerns, many extra one and two-reel comedies were especially added to the release schedule due to the importance of Laugh Month. Notwithstanding the fact that it necessitated an extra staff of artists to put through he additional work, paper on ten comedies went through weeks in advance of release dates. This included one of the famous Buster Brown Century Comedies, "Buster's Bust-Up" and three other Centuries, as well as Bluebird one-reel comedies and two clever Andy Gump comedies.

The added effort, officials of Universal explain, is part of the many units of service this company is noted for, and is nothing more than a desire to be of continuous assistance to the exhibitor who books product and is entitled to every penny he can obtain by showing it. Accessories, therefore, are receiving a tremendous amount of consideration, for it is this part of the Exhibitor's problem that is proving economically effective and indispensable in "putting over" the picture, whether during or after National Laugh Month.

"Famous Melody Series"

New Pathe Series Based on Songs of Different Countries Offers Unusually Fine Entertainment

AS ITS newest offering in the short subject field, Pathe is releasing at the rate of one every four weeks "The Famous Melody Series," consisting of thirteen single reel subjects presenting musical picturizations of the songs of as many lands and, judging by the first three which have been shown for review, this will be an unusually interesting and entertaining series that should please the vast majority of patrons.

Each of these reels takes up some of the best-known and most melodious songs of a certain country which are used as musical accompaniment for the film. The series was produced by James Fitzpatrick who made "The Music Master Series" dealing with the lives of famous composers. Each one was filmed in the country represented and against actual backgrounds there is unfolded clever little stories that bring in the characters and themes of the songs. As a result, these little gems offer a combination of familiar and melodious songs, beautiful and picturesque backgrounds and charming little stories, three excellent angles of audience appeal, in addition to the fact that the idea of the series also has the advantage of being something entirely new and distinctly novel. Peggy Shaw is featured in the series and does excellent work.

The first is "Songs of Ireland." Opening with "Killarney," there are beautiful views of the lakes and old castles. "Peppy and Her Low Backed Car" are introduced and with "Rory I'Moore" they visit Peggy's mother, "Widow Machree." Quizzed as to whether he will love her always, Rory sings "Believe Me If All Those Endearing Young Charms" and they plight their troth by "Killarney."

Next comes "Songs of England." A girl of a past era is shown on a hillside with her shepherd lover singing "Love's Old Sweet Song." A coach approaches to the tune of an old hunting song. A gallant swain alights and sings to the girl, Alice, "Drink to Me Only With Thine Eyes." Just then, over the hills, comes the notes of "Alice, Where Art Thou" and Alice returns to her shepherd lover.

The third offering in the series is "Song of Scotland," which begins with "Annie Laurie" as she is shown walking through the meadow with Robin Adair, who is about to bid her good-bye. An elderly friend tells him his story, the song of "Loch Lomond" and Robin Adair returns to his sweetheart, Annie Laurie, who in the meantime is disconsolate and sings "Robin Adair." They are married and at the wedding feast the bagpipes play and the lassies dance "The Highland Fling." The elderly friend proposes to Annie Laurie's mother, the girl he left on "Loch Lomond" singing "Auld Lang Syne." She accepts him and there is general jubilation. "Coming Through the Rye" is also introduced and the interesting fact brought out that this does not refer to a field of grain but to the crossing of a small river in Scoland where it was the custom for a lad to kiss a lassie if he met her in midstream.

This is an unusually pleasing and interesting series and should prove above the average as entertainment in the majority of theatres.—C. S. Sewell.

Here They Are!

Buster's Bust-Up—Universal.
Charley, My Boy—Pathe.
Famous Melody Series—Pathe.
Felix the Cat Kept on Walking—Educational.
Ko-Ko Steps Out—Red Seal.
Old Virginia—Fox.
My Stars—Educational.

"Old Virginia"

(Fox—Variety—One Reel)

ANSWERING the query as to why the native sons of the Old Dominion state who have wandered elsewhere join with such fervor in the old song "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny," Fox, in this Variety, takes the spectator on a comprehensive trip through the state, showing historical places like Cape Henry, where English first landed; Jamestown, the first settlement with its statues of Captain John Smith and Pocohontas; the farm of George Washington at Fredericksburg and his estate at Mount Vernon. There are also shots of the varied sports, duck shooting, fishing, fox-hunting, scenes of the industries including tobacco growing in the Piedmont section and the world-famous Smithfield hams. In contrast to the thoroughly up-to-date methods in one section are the old hand-ferries, toll-gates and water-wheels of the more secluded places. Altogether a thoroughly interesting and instructive reel.—C. S. Sewell.

"My Stars"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

THE players are Johnny Arthur, Florence Lee, Virginia Vance, George Davis and Glen Cavender, and William Goodrich directed. Johnny has the mentality of one of his mother's dressmakers' dummies. Virginia, his sweetheart, is in love with movie stars and adores their photos, which arrive with each mail. Johnny makes up as Valentino to please her, but by that time she is enamoured of Doug Fairbanks. He makes up as Fairbanks only to discover that another mail has brought Harold Lloyd's photo. Finally, in desperation, he kidnaps Virginia and thus, like the caveman of old, wins his bride. A butler supplies a good bit of comedy by trying to do a Buster Keaton handspring. It is a Tuxedo Comedy and it should please all audiences.—Sumner Smith.

"Charley, My Boy"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

CHARLES CHASE has been developing splendidly as a comedian and in this latest Hal Roach release he shows possibly more promise of attaining the heights than in any previous picture. Everything was in his favor. He was given a corking story and most effective gags, and the direction and the supporting cast are all that could be desired. Charley is a fresh guy looking for a job. He mistakes his potential boss for another applicant and insults him. Then follows a mix-up of Charleys, the other being an aged gent who is a rival suitor for the boss' daughter. The film ends in a riot of merriment with the police searching the boss' house for liquor and Charley foiling them at every turn. You'd better book this comedy. Chase is excellent and this film has a freshness and originality that will commend it to audiences. Keep your eye on Chase. If he is given more vehicles as excellently constructed as this one, he will be an outstanding hit in no time.—Sumner Smith.

"Buster's Bust-Up"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

UNIVERSAL'S Buster Brown Comedies are uniformly delightful mirrors of child-life and gems of humor, and this latest to feature Aurthur Trimble is no exception to the general rule. Buster and Tige race along the sidewalks in the toy fire truck, upsetting pedestrians with the utmost of composure. Mary Jane is met, but Tige misbehaves by tearing her dress and she says that she is through with Buster. Buter gets spots of paint on his face and is put to bed on suspicion of having smallpox. Tige and he escape and get a ride on a steel girder. Tige saves Buster's life when they are left on the framework of a new building. Buster offers Mary Jane a bouquet but she spurns it and Buster moralizes that "all women are alike except some of them."—Sumner Smith.

"Ko-Ko Steps Out"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

OF course the Charleston craze finally hit Maf Fleischer's little "Out of the Inkwell" clow Ko-Ko and in this number he and his little pup are shown trying to learn this dance. A clever bit of work shows a small drawing of a beautiful girl which "grows" into the regular life-sized article and then it suddenly develops that "she" is really Ko-Ko in disguise. This is an ingenious bit. The subject is amusing and up to Fleischer's standard. It also has added interest for it shows in detail some of the "Charleston" steps.—C. S. Sewell.

"Felix The Cat Kept on Walking"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

IN this Pat Sullivan cartoon Felix believes that beyond the horizon lies riches for him. So he starts walking to reach the horizon and is astonished to find that the more progress he makes, the farther away it seems. Eventually he has traversed the earth.—Sumner Smith.

Isn't It Awful—Money Just Pouring In!

"Laugh Month" Encourages Optimism, Says Pathe Sales Manager, After Tour of U. S.

AN INTERESTING TRADE SURVEY of existent conditions in the field was disclosed this week in a statement from Harry Scott, general sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., who has just returned from an extensive tour of the South and Middle West. Mr. Scott's comprehensive account takes on added importance in view of its forward-looking trend and release just at the dawn of the new year.

Mr. Scott's trip was in the nature of a record smasher, fifteen exchange centers being visited within a period of twenty days. In each key city visited Mr. Scott conducted a sales meeting and met local first-run exhibitors for first-hand information on the theatre situations. In the three weeks' trip the Pathe general sales manager conducted business in the following centers: Detroit, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Chicago and the "Double I" offices, Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Oklahoma City, St. Louis, Cleveland, and Buffalo.

Field Exploitation Men Do Good Work

The Pathe policy of exhibitor service provides as one of its keystones a sympathetic understanding of the difficulties confronting its exhibitor customers in their own particular localities, and this in turn demands a first-hand knowledge not only on the part of the local sales force but of the Home-Office executives as well of actual conditions in the field. Mr. Scott's trip is but one of several that is planned for in the near future by the several sales managers of the Pathe organization who are in charge of the distribution of the company's various brands of screen product.

While Mr. Scott's description of existent conditions goes beyond company boundaries and interests and is, accordingly, of genuine interest to the trade as a whole, Pathe product came in for a share of comment. In part, Mr. Scott reports as follows:

"In my trip to the Middle West and South during the past three weeks I found the Pathe District and Branch Managers and salesmen very optimistic and enthusiastic over our new season's product. The newly appointed field men of Pathe's Exploitation Department are accomplishing most satisfactory results in demonstrating to exhibitors the value of advertising their short subjects, serials, and two-reel comedies. I had the opportunity of interviewing a number of prominent exhibitors who reported that their business during 1925 had greatly exceeded expectations. Most of these exhibitors expressed the conviction that their business in 1926, judging by the present outlook, would exceed that of the past year. Many new theatres are under construction, which indicates that capital shares the same optimistic viewpoint with the theatre interests.

"In the industrial sections I found a temporary lull due in part to the holiday season and to the fact that it was inventory time. Many big factories at this season of the year pursue a practice of laying off some of their force until their inventories have been completed. This, of course, has a tendency to slow up theatre business a bit. Then, too, the widely exploited slogan 'Do Your Christmas Shopping Early' had the effect of interfering slightly with theatre attendance.

Finds Farmers Are Stepping Out

"In the mining districts conditions seem to be only slightly affected by the anthracite strike. Farming sections are evidencing prosperity to a notable extent, and the theatres in these agricultural districts are reflecting the healthy trade conditions in most instances by substantial box-office receipts. The farmer is out-stripping the city dweller in the acquisition of up-to-date facilities and even luxuries. We find the farmer investing in radios, newer and better cars, modern home equipment, and the like. Is a few of the towns where business is not so good the situation may be attributed to the fact that the local exhibitors are not furnishing their patrons with shows of sufficient merit to entice them away from their radios, bridge clubs, etc.

"In all the cities visited favorable comments were heard concerning the Pathe News Anniversay Celebration. Exhibitors and film men of other companies frequently express the opinion to me that the attendance of such notables as marked our Pathe News reception at the Hotel Plaza on November 14th had done much to establish a closer relationship between the film industry as a whole and the leaders of thought and action in the political, professional, and industrial life of our country. Enthusiasm was also displayed in quite a number of instances over the special local theatre service that Pathe News had furnished during the Anniversary month.

"Laugh Month" Scores Big Hit Everywhere

"Everywhere I encountered unusual enthusiasm over the idea of 'Laugh Month' and its box-office possibilities. The idea itself seems to have a universal appeal and this is enhanced by the staging of the celebration during the opening month of the new year. The designation of January as 'Laugh Month' has fitted in perfectly with the feeling of optimism prevailing throughout the country at the present time.

"In all cities where it has been shown or is now playing I found 'The Freshman' making theatre history with unprecedented box-office returns. In several key cities I found newspapers had secured publication rights to the serialization of 'The Green Archer' and were planning to run it in conjunction with local first run showing of this Patheserial. Exhibitors and film men with whom I discussed this production unanimously voted 'The Green Archer' to be the best serial ever released by Pathe. Considerable interest is also shown regarding the forthcoming Larry Semon release, 'Stop, Look and Listen,' and the new Harry Carey Western, 'Driftin' Thru.'

Heavy Business On Chaplin Shorts

"The booking on Charlie Chaplin's 'A Dog's Life' have been very satisfactory up to date, and my trip into the field acquainted me with many instances where this Charlie Chaplin revival under Pathe's auspices has played again to excellent box-office business.

Cleveland Houses Play Comedy Bills

Pathe short feature comedy product was on the bills of eight theatres on Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, during a recent week. Each of the theatres featured a Pathe two-reel comedy.

The theatres and the comedies played were as follows:

Keith's Palace, "His Wooden Wedding," a Charley Chase Comedy made by Hal. Roach.

Keith's 105th Street also played "His Wooden Wedding."

Allen, "From Rags to Britches," a Mack Sennett brand comedy.

Park, "Good Morning, Madam," a Ralph Graves comedy produced by Mack Sennett.

Cameo also played "Good Morning, Madam."

Reade's Hippodrome, "Starvation Blues," a Clyde Cook comedy made by Hal Roach.

Alhambra, "Horace Greeley, Jr." a Harry Langdon comedy produced by Principal Pictures.

Circle, a Ralph Graves comedy made by Mack Sennett.

The Allen and the Park gave the comedies special space in their newspaper advertising and the other theatres also displayed notices of the fun portion of their bills.

William Fox Again Plays 'Em Safe! With a Striking List of "Fox Shorts" Now Booking, He Shoots Out a Trio of Feature Comedies—Just to Make "Laugh Month" Safe for the Showmen!

GREAT PLAYERS IN RIPPING COMEDIES!
Margaret Livingston, Matt Moore, Harry Carey, Kathryn Perry, Frank Currier and J. Farrell MacDonald Are Famous Along Individual Lines. Miss Livingston (at top) in John Golden's Stage Play, "The First Year." The Same Star (a Brunette Now) in Hoyt's "A Trip to Chinatown" (center), and Harry Carey (in the light suit) in "The Cowboy and the Countess" (in lower picture.)

WITH a view to providing a particularly hilarious climax to National Laugh Month, Fox Films has revised its release schedule and will offer for January showing three rollicking feature comedies.

These are "The First Year," one of the John Golden stage successes; "The Cowboy and the Countess," starring Buck Jones, and "A Trip to Chinatown," based on one of Charles Hoyt's most successful farce comedies which has literally made millions laugh.

Matt Moore and Kathryn Perry have the principal roles in "The First Year," which amusingly depicts the experiences and difficulties of a newlywed pair in adjusting themselves to the matrimonial yoke. J. Farrell MacDonald and Margaret Livingston also have important parts in the production and Director Frank Borzage has incorporated many delightfully human touches in the screen version.

Margaret Livingston also has the featured role in "A Trip to Chinatown," with a cast which includes J. Farrell MacDonald, Earle Foxe, Anna May Wong, Marie Astaire, Gladys McConnell and others. The humor is all of the broadest type. Robert P. Kerr directed the picture under the supervision of George E. Marshall.

"The Cowboy and the Countess," with Buck Jones, is a western of a distinctly novel sort. Harvey Clark almost steals the picture as the superoptimistic showman and Helena D'Algy makes a very charming countess. There is plenty of riding, roping and fighting to satisfy those who love the western stuff, but the greatest appeal of the film lies in its rich humor.

Here's a bright new personality on the comedy horizon!

THE SPICE OF A GOOD PROGRAM

He Believes What He Says

R. F. WOODHULL, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and proprietor and manager of The Baker Theatre, Dover, N. J., after delivering a score of addresses in "Laugh Month," told the story to 12,000,000 listeners, through ten radio broadcasting stations, and in divers ways recounted his arguments for "January—National Laugh Month," is now actually practicing the precepts he laid down for his fellow exhibitors. He believes every word he uttered.

He has turned The Baker over, for the month, to bills that feature comedies, and is giving short comedies a "better break" than he ever felt they would stand in his community.

From the time one sights The Baker, a block away, one is impressed by the hilarity of its announcements.

The marquise, the box office, the foyer, even the aisles are bannered and ballyhooed with banners presaging wholesome fun on the screen.

President Woodhull has not only given extra time to the comedy short subject, but he has taken particular pains to insure that every one of his January bookings has a real laugh. January for President Woodhull has meant the shelving of all "sob sister" programs.

Final Statement in Official Bulletin

Mr. Woodhull's final declaration on "Laugh Month" was made in the January 1st issue of the Official Bulletin of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. At that time he wrote, in his column, entitled the "President's Pulpit":

"Inasmuch as I learned at a very early age the value of laughter, it is a most easy task for me to enter into the 'January Laugh Month' with enthusiasm.

"Leaders in organization work and physicians have at least one thing in common. They spend at least ninety per cent. of their time listening to the troubles of other folks. It requires all kinds of will power to maintain a sense of humor, without which I do not believe any human being, whether rich or poor, can exist.

"At the time of writing this article the coal miners and coal operators are deadlocked in a strike that is spreading misery and death throughout the poor folks of our country, and there does not seem to be a power in the United States strong enough to force their leaders to sit down at a table and make an effort to relieve this terrible condition.

"We, on the contrary, are lending our best endeavors to a movement that will spread laughter—that great free commodity that will tend to inject sunshine into dark places.

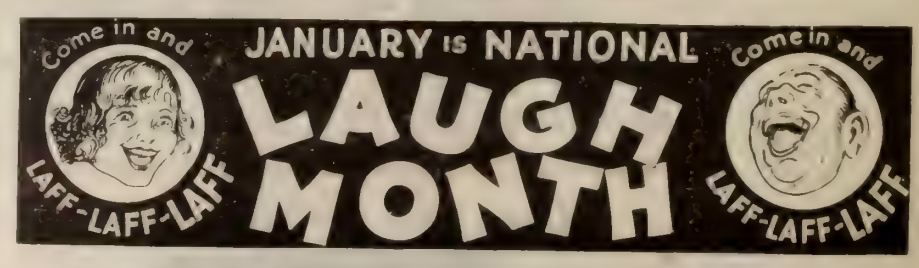
"This movement emanated from the Short Subject Features Association, and I really and truly hope that in arranging your programs for this month you will not attempt to balance your presenaions by booking so many drab, long subjecs that you might offset the good healthful laughter generated by your comedies.

"Select the best comedies available. But, by all means let's have a month when the folks can come into our theatres and laugh from the time they purchase their tickets until the exit march. They are bound to carry some of this good nature home with them and we will have contributed to the general happiness of the individual families in the community."

Canadian Houses Demand Shorts

TALK of the much-discussed film quota plan in the British Isles, which has been heard throughout Canada and reported at length in Canadian newspapers, has had the interesting effect in the Dominion in causing a boom for the single and two reel releases of the Canadian Government Motion Picture Studio, Ottawa, Ontario. According to Ray Peck, director of that Government branch, his organization has never been so busy before in the six or seven years that he has been in charge of Government film production. The laboratory staff has been considered under-strength of late, so great is the work in hand.

Director Peck held a consultation recently with Clair Hague, general manager of Canadian Universal at Toronto, relative to Canadian distribution of the Canadian Government releases, which the Universal controls insofar as theatrical distribution is concerned. The quota talk has raised interest in the Canadian official films, which are marketed as the "Seeing Canada Series" with resultant increase in the demand for the releases. More than that, the quota proposals have encouraged a goodly number of Canadian exhibitors to stage "All Canadian Week" programs, using features dealing with Canadian stories along with Canadian short subjects, Canadian music and Canadian news weeklies.



HERALD PREPARED FOR LAUGH MONTH

Showmanship

By JOHN C. BROWNELL

East Coast Scenario Editor of F. B. O.

EVERY showman asks himself every day: "What do the people want?" The answer is, of course, that they want to be amused, entertained. But just how to amuse and entertain the public in a different way, keeps the showman on his toes all the time. He experiments and fails. What he is absolutely convinced is good entertainment which will be warmly welcomed by the public, fails to catch and hold favor.

Then, after such an experience, he cries: "What in hell is it the public wants?" He tries again. This time he hasn't a great deal of faith in his offering. He just knows it is going to be a flop. It doesn't flop, the public welcomes it and the showman comes, in time, to fool himself into believing he has discovered the great secret. And so it goes on and on.

Sometimes it becomes necessary to find an answer to the question: "What will please boys and girls and at the same time interest and entertain grownups?" That's a hard one, but F. B. O. has really found the answer to it in the two-reel subjects they have been producing: "Fighting Blood," "The Go-Getters," "The Pacemakers," "The Adventures of Mazie," and now, "Fighting Hearts," the new series written by Sam Hellman, now in production.

It is absolutely safe to say that the "Fighting Hearts" series will be just as successful as those preceding them. Why? Because they contain the same ingredients, the same appeal to youth and maturity that the others had. They present struggling courageous youth overcoming such obstacles as you encounter in every day life, and there is always a goal—something worthwhile to strive for and win. Every wholesome boy or girl is bound to visualize himself or herself as the hero or the heroine, and every grownup is given an opportunity to live again the years that they love to remember—the golden years of youth filled with adventure and the eager, breath-taking desire to do or die.

The laughs along the way to victory are a natural and necessary part of the successful formula that F. B. O. has discovered. The ingredients are youth, laughter, a few tears, courage, daring, wholesome ambition, a goal to reach. With writers like H. C. Witwer and Sam Hellman to mix these ingredients up, and players like Alberta Vaughn, Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Albert Cooke to give them life, they cannot fail to find favor with boys and girls or—boys and girls grown up.

International Closes Big Deal

ONE of the largest newsreel contracts ever concluded has just been arranged between the International Newsreel Corporation and the West Coast Theatres, Inc., by which the International Newsreel will be shown exclusively first-run in the 168 California houses of the West Coast chain. The California theatre organization has long been a user of the International Newsreel, but the contract just signed is by far the most important ever entered into by the respective corporations.

The report of the signing of this contract reached Edgar B. Hatrick, general manager and vice-president of the International organization on the eve of his departure for Los Angeles, where he is to remain until January 12th. He characterized the new deal with the West Coast company as a great feather in the cap of International and a just tribute to the service his newsreel has endeavored to give to the theatres on the Pacific coast.

The contract was signed by Sol Lesser and J. H. Goldberg of the West Coast chain, and by Don Mitchell, Universal manager in Los Angeles, and Joseph Hubbell, Pacific coast representative of the International Newsreel. Still and moving pictures were taken of the signing and the Hearst newspapers from Coast to Coast have carried pictures showing the important event in newsreel history, thus adding considerably to the prestige of the International Newsreel and of the West Coast Theatre Chain.

The contract calls for exclusive first runs in Los Angeles. The principal theatres involved are Loew's State, the Criterion, the Alhambra, the Up-Town, the Mesa Drive, the Belmont, the Boulevard, the Manchester, all in Los Angeles, and the Hollywood in Hollywood. There are a number of other subsequent runs in this vicinity to be arranged on schedule. International has had to increase its print supply in the Los Angeles territory considerably in order to take care of the additional business under the changed conditions.

One of the novel features of the contract concerns the speedy service to the West Coast theatres of hot news events from the East and elsewhere. The agreement stipulates that news topics, regardless of where the scenes are shot, must be rushed to Los Angeles by aeroplane or other fast conveyor at the earliest possible moment and made available immediately for exhibition in West Coast theatres.

Thus, the International Newsreel will be placed before West Coast theatre audiences in much the same manner as a metropolitan newspaper is rushed to street corners for sale with "hot" news. This is a further extension of the well established policy of the International Newsreel corporation, of speeding pre-release news subjects to all parts of the country as soon as they can be rushed from the laboratory, thus serving first-run accounts as quickly as possible, without additional cost to the exhibitor.

Fox "Shorts" Booked Over Loew's New York Circuit

ANOTHER large circuit of theatres, Loew's New York chain, representing one hundred days, have booked a group of Fox Film short subjects which includes four two-reel comedies and two one-reel Varieties.

The subjects of this enviable booking are: "The Peacemakers" and "His Own Lawyer," two of the Helen and Warren Married Life series from the popular newspaper stories by Mabel Herbert Urner; "The Wrestler," an Earle Foxe starring vehicle based on one of the celebrated Richard Harding Davis Van Bibber stories; "Strong for Love," one of the old reliable Imperial brand laugh getters, and "The River Nile" and "The Whirlpool of Europe," one-reel Varieties.

There is a real tribute to Fox short subjects in this booking, due to the fact that very few pictures which are not of feature length reach the screens of the Loew theatres in New York, group bookings of one and two-reelers by the circuit's management are rare occurrences.

It happened this way—Dave Loew, who books films for this chain, in search of a few "fillers," dropped into Fox Films New York exchange and asked to see some short subjects. Dave Gross, assistant to Exchange Manager Harry Buxbaum, was assigned the job of showing the Fox wares. He selected the six aforementioned pictures hoping that Mr. Loew would be liberal in making his selection. He was not prepared, however, for what Mr. Loew said after the screening.

"Gross," said the theatre man, "these pictures are great! I will book the whole lot for our New York Circuit for one hundred days each."

Mr. Loew further stated that for story, direction, cast, sets, detail and amusement value the Fox comedies compared favorably with the best features.

Stern Bros. Announce New Comedy Policy; "Century" Dropped From 1926-27 Product

AN extensive reorganization of picture policy and production activities is announced by the Stern Brothers, makers of two-reel comedies for Universal release. Building on the extraordinary success of the Buster Brown productions, the first excursion of the Stern Brothers into high class comedy series pictures, the comedy producers have outlined a program for next season consisting wholly of super-comedy series.

There will be at least five series of first-class comedies on the 1926-27 release schedule of the Stern Brothers Comedies. An extension of the present Buster Brown Productions will form the nucleus of the new schedule. The current Buster Brown Productions are the talk of the industry by reason of their unexpected drawing power. They are getting representation in big first run houses all over the country, including the Capitol, the Rialto, the Warner's in New York City, the new Metropolitan in Boston and similar houses elsewhere.

Stern Brothers Comedies

Hereafter, the comedies made by the Stern Brothers, Julius and Abe, for Universal release, will be known as Stern Brothers' Comedies. Their former output—Century Comedies—is being discontinued. This change of production policy is a great forward step on the part of the two Sterns and marks their complete advent into the top ranks of comedy producers.

Another series of two-reelers, already in the making for next season's release by the Stern Brothers, is "The Adventures of Jane," a high-class situation comedy series starring Wanda Wiley. Miss Wiley, who was "discovered" by the Stern Brothers and who has been developed into one of the screen's most popular comediennes during the past eighteen months, has received a first-rate vehicle in "The Adventures of Jane."

Splendid Stories Chosen For Stern Bros. Stars

The stories are being written by Roy Evans, and they abound in humorous situations and in clever comedy. The stories stand on their own feet. They give Miss Wiley ample opportunity for displaying her acter actress, and others of equal prominence. Ford will be remembered as a former popular figure on the musical comedy stage, appearing in such successes as "Helen of Troy," "Sinbad," "Big Boy," and the various Passing Shows.

"The Adventures of Jane" Scheduled for Use by Wanda Wiley

ries is being directed by Jess Robbins, who has made a name for himself in the comedy production field.

Al Ford has been engaged to appear opposite Miss Wiley in this new series. The remainder of the support cast is of unusual strength, including Hilliard Karr, the fat comedian; Eleanor Leslie, well known char-

WANDA WILEY

This charming comedienne has scored repeatedly in her various roles as the featured feminine player in Universal-Century Comedies.

Splendid Stories In Preparation

The Stern Brothers are now considering several story series of national importance as vehicles for their stars. It is expected that an announcement on this subject will be made in the near future. Another series also is under consideration, details of which will be made public next week.

"Our unprecedented success with the Buster Brown Comedies convinced us that the market is ripe for more high-class comedies," say the Sterns, discussing their change in production policy. "First run houses are giving more thought to their comedy program and are willing to go the limit to get top-grade fun-films.

Series Pictures Are In Demand

"A close analysis of the comedy market has also proven to us that series pictures are more in demand than week in and week out releases, however good those releases may be. A series of two-reelers built around a central theme or around the same characters, seems to have a strong drawing power on the public. They come back time and time again to follow the further adventures of their comedy favorites.

"The foregoing two phases of the comedy situation were the determining factors in our decision to confine our production activities, from now on, to series comedies. We already have two of the series under way, the Buster Brown productions and "The Adventures of Jane." A third will be under way within a week or so, and shortly thereafter we will be ready to go ahead with two additional series of exceptional merit.

"We have reorganized our production facilities, and increased our studio personnel, as well as adding a number of higher grade technicians and writers to our staff. We are now in a position to turn out comedies without equal in the industry. That is our goal. Watch us do it."

Serials for "Laugh Month"

LAUGHS IN SERIALS? Sure, there are! Lots of them. Of course, the basic idea of every good serial must be melodramatic action and thrills, whether it be a motion picture serial or a magazine serial story, but every good craftsman knows that "comedy relief" is an excellent antidote to melodramatic action.

Hence our producers do not hesitate to introduce logical comedy sequences in almost every weekly chapter. Just a touch, here and there, of the whimsical element—occasionally a streak of comedy or burlesque—helps wonderfully to relieve the tension of the audience.

Hence it certainly is not out of place to

BY E. OSWALD BROOKS,
Serial Sales Manager, Pathe Exchange, Inc.

suggest that a good Patheserial like "Play Ball!" or "Into The Net" or "The Green Archer" would be welcomed on the screens of the country during the month dedicated to Laughter.

Even the dramatic and serious element in serials has a real place on the comedy bill, where it acts in the inverse ratio to "comedy relief"—it gives "dramatic relief" to an otherwise all-comedy program. Classic examples of "dramatic relief" are to be found in all of the Harold Lloyd and Charlie Chaplin feature comedies.

Without exception these skilled kings of comedy will introduce pathos and real drama into their productions, for they know full well that unless some "dramatic relief" be furnished, then the audience will suffer from a surfeit of comedy—what our French friends call un embarras de richesse.

Peggy Hopkins Joyce's First Starring Vehicle Should Prove Good Picture for the Box Office

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

MARKING her initial appearance on the screen, Associated Exhibitors is offering the celebrated stage beauty Peggy Hopkins Joyce in "The Skyrocket" adapted from a Cosmopolitan magazine story by Adele Rogers St. John and directed by Marshall Neilan, which should prove a splendid box office attraction.

The significance of the title lies in the rapid rise to fame and fortune of a poor "extra" girl of the movies and carrying out the simile still further, in the eclipse of her meteoric career which brings her "back to earth" where she finds happiness as the wife of her boyhood friend. Ability to wear beautiful clothes results in an extra girl being given a chance by a great director. Her rise is rapid thereafter and she surrounds herself with a retinue of servants, buys a costly home, and many jewels and then finds she has not enough money to keep up appearances. She seeks aid from the director who tells her he will gratify her every wish, but, seeing through his offer she quits and goes back to her childhood sweetheart with the realization that she has been a thoughtless and extravagant peacock.

Miss Joyce is naturally the center of interest and she reveals not only beauty and charm but a pleasing personality and ability to make her characterization of the steller role a convincing one. She has been given excellent support. Owen Moore as her sweetheart scores with splendid acting, while Earle Williams gives a fine performance as the director. Gladys Brockwell, Lilyan Tashman, Bull Montana and Sammy Cohen also share in the honors. In addition to the story proper, there is a prologue in which Muriel McCormac and Junior Coghlan portray Miss Joyce and Mr. Moore's roles as kiddies and gain audience sympathy by their fine performance as two little waifs struggling to earn a few pennies.

Marshall Neilan has finely directed this picture and the original story has been followed closely. He has not only brought out the dramatic values, but interwoven several effective comedy touches. There are a number of beautiful and spectacular sets and excellent scenes of a studio interior showing the making of scenes for a motion picture.

Due to the power of Miss Joyce's name and the desire of the public to see her, "The Skyrocket" should exert a strong pull at the box-office and the picture itself should provide pleasing entertainment for the majority of patrons.

WITH the release of the feature production "Stop, Look and Listen," which is an adaptation of the musical comedy success of the same title, Larry Semon makes his debut as a star with the Pathe organization, in a picture combining comedy and melodrama in a way that provides pleasing and amusing entertainment.

Larry appears as Luther Meek, the model youth of a small town. His sweetheart, Dorothy, longs for a stage career and persuades Luther to back a traveling show in which she will have the starring role. During the opening performance the manager of the show and Luther's rascally step-brother rob the bank and make a getaway, blaming Luther who is chased by the crowd. He suceeds in escaping, trailing the robbers and capturing them and winning Dorothy, who has had enough of the stage.

INAUGURATING a series of productions which he is making for Paramount, D. W. Griffith's latest picture "That Royle Girl" is a gripping underworld melodrama with fine characterization and human appeal, exceptionally tense drama and suspense, which works up to a tremendously thrilling action and emotional climax in a remarkable reproduction of a cyclone.

"That Royle Girl" is Daisy Royle, a product of the slums, daughter of a lazy drunken morally weak confidence man and a sickly mother who eases her suffering with drugs. A frail, delicate type but forced to look out for herself she grows up into a mixture of hoydenish tomboyishness and wistfulness, innocent of the world's evils and finding inspiration and solace in confiding her sorrows to the statue of her ideal, Lincoln. After many hard knocks she becomes a mannequin and gets in with a fast jazzy set, falling in love with Ketler an orchestra leader who has separated from his wife. Mrs. Ketler is murdered, Ketler is convicted on circumstantial evidence and Daisy is involved. Clarke, the district attorney, who looks down on girls of Daisy's type is strangely attracted to her, and although she does not love Ketler she determines to save him as she knows he was with her at the time of the murder. Learning from a rival gangster that Baretta, a gang leader, is the murderer, with the aid of a newspaper friend she attracts Baretta and plays upon the jealousy of his sweetheart until in a quarrel the truth comes out. Daisy and her friend are captured by the gangsters and imprisoned in a cellar. A storm which develops into a cyclone wrecks the building and Clarke finds her. Convinced that he has misjudged her and unable longer to fight down his love, he takes her in his arms, while Ketler, who has proved a cad goes back to his old haunts.

Once the story gets well under way, the interest is held in a vice-like grip. At the beginning the story seems somewhat sketchy and the connection between some of the situation is at times vague, it develops, however, that these scenes are but backgrounds for the action that is to follow and that each has its niche in the story. The murder occurs early in the development and from this point on the dramatic interest and suspense continues to mount higher and higher. Through scene after scene from the time Daisy first goes to Baretta, the murderer, the dramatic tension increases and after she goes to the roadhouse the dramatic effect becomes so gripping that it keeps you right on the edge of your seat. In the handling of these scenes especially, Mr. Griffith again shows that he is a master director, for we have never seen a better example of securing the utmost of dramatic power out of a situation, not only in the way he keeps the tension continually mounting but especially in the way he holds it at an intense pitch through scene after scene without a touch of anti-climax or a moment's let-down. Even without the wonderful cyclone scene which blows houses about and buffets the heroine around, the picture would have a whale of a climax, so strong is the play upon the emotions.

In the title role, Carol Dempster has a part that is ideally suited to her and she gives a remarkable performance, holding your interest and sympathy every second she is on the screen, which is during almost the entire picture. The other characters are of relatively minor importance. W. C. Fields is excellent and contributes his unique type of humor, but has very limited opportunities. James Kirkwood gives a fine portrayal of the rather stiff role of the district attorney and Harrison Ford is able as Ketler. Especial praise is due Paul Everton and Florence Auer for their exceedingly convincing portrayals of the gang leader and his girl.

The gripping climax to "That Royle Girl" should go over big with any kind of audience and "That Royle Girl" looks like a splendid box-office attraction, sure to immensely please the majority, for despite its unusual length it holds the interest right up to the final flash.

Story by Marshall Neilan

Length, 6,755 feet.

A PLEASING, amusing and out-of-the-ordinary type of picture is offered by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in "Mike," a Marshall Neilan production of which he is both author and director, with Sally O'Neill who scored such a pleasing impression in "Sally, Irene and Mary," in the title role.

Mike, the joyous, fun-loving daughter of a railroad section boss makes her home with her two little brothers, her little sister and her father in a freight car which during working days is attached to the construction train and week-ends is sidetracked in a little garden becoming an attractive home. Harlan who has served a prison term as the "goat" because of an accident and cannot find a job saves the little girl from drowning and Mike persuades her father to give him a job. When thieves rob the mail car Mike sends in the alarm and the Marine Corps aeroplanes capture the thieves, but before so doing they start Mike's "house" with her and the kiddies inside, down an incline from which Harlan rescues them by swinging from a derrick on another train. Harlan, fired from the job by the superintendent, licks him and starts off to make good, Mike insists in going with him,

The outline of the plot, the romance between the girl and the hero who was fired and makes good for the road when opportunity arises, follows along familiar lines, but Mr. Neilan has subordinated this and played up the characterization of Mike and her little family, their quaint home and unique surroundings. The greater portion of the action is devoted to this angle and is filled with amusing Irish humor contributed by Charles Murray as the father, Ford Sterling as his friend, and by Mike herself and the kiddies. The sets are unique and Mike's "home" on wheels which becomes her town house is certainly a cleverly devised affair with many ingenious contrivances that add novel and decidedly pleasing touches fo the story.

For his climax, Mr. Neilan has provided effective and well-handled thrills. It is really a double-barreled affair for at the time that the hero is riding in another train after the runaway car, a flock of Marine Corps aeroplanes is after the robbers, and there is an up-to-date and decided punch in the scene where they drop bombs and wreck the car and then descending in parachutes surround the robbers. Then comes a good thrill in the scene where the hero gets in a dredging arrangement on one train and swinging out over the runaway car rescues Mike and the little ones.

Sally O'Neill is excellent in the title role and William Haines is satisfactory as the hero. With its abundance of sure-fire comedy touches and pleasing human interest and excellent thrill climax, "Mike" looks like satisfying entertainment for the masses.

villain, saving himself by grabbing overhanging wires, and a thrill when the train plunges through a broken bridge. This is immediately turned into comedy when the auto carrying Larry and his girl makes an utterly impossible leap over this gasp, runs off a cliff, lands in a tree which falls gently to the ground and finally is telescoped against a cliff, but is still able to keep running. This makes an exceedingly fast finish that is a peach and will leave the patrons in excellent humor.

HOW a regular he-man westerner finds himself joint heir to a ranch with a spirited Eastern girl whose ideas are entirely at variance with his and opposes him at every turn until he finally wins her over by rescuing her from the clutches of the villain, furnishes the basis for "A Six Shootin' Romance," a Universal Blue Streak Western starring Jack Hoxie.

Jack Hoxie has a congenial role and gives a performance that will please his fans but it is the role of the girl portrayed by Olive Hasbrouck that really dominates the action, and Miss Hasbrouck gives a spirited and thoroughly enjoyable performance that adds much to the rather familiar trend of the plot. The others in the cast are entirely satisfactory, with William A. Steele as the villain,

Carmen Phillips as his fiery-tempered wife whom he tries to pass off as his sister, Bob McKenzie in the character comedy role of the range boss, Virginia Bradford as an attractive friend, and Mattie Peters as a typical negro mammy.

Cliff Smith who handled the megaphone for the majority of this series also directed Hoxie in this one and has introduced the usual routine of sure-fire material that appeals to Western fans. There is a good touch in the opening scene where the boys stage a hold-up of the stage coach to scare the new owner and find out that "he" is a girl. The action is punctuated with good scraps and fast-riding, culminating in the climax in which the boys led by Hoxie attack the villain's ranch to rescue the girl.

Altogether, "A Six Shootin' Romance" offers entertainment that the Western fans will probably find to their liking.

finding she really loves Madons, and that he is to be put to death, Lola takes his place on a balcony and is shot in his stead. In a small town across the border, she recovers and finds happiness as Madon's wife.

Edmund Lowe is excellent in the role of Madons and makes him an exceedingly picturesque, daredevil romantic fellow who delights in making fools out of the prime minister and his police and soldiery. Betty Compson gives a pleasing performance in the fascinating role of Lola Montez, a character that intrigues you but gains little sympathy until the climax. As the prime minister, Henry Kolker gives a fine portrayal.

The story belongs to the dashing, romantic type and moves forward with good zest and speed, holding the interest at all times and should prove pleasing entertainment for the lovers of picturesque romance. It is well mounted and has been given excellent direction by Emmett Flynn, with good characterization and comedy touches.

Braveheart licks Ki-Yote in a fierce fight, secures the release of the prisoners and his innocence proved is made chief of the tribe. Telling Dorothy that their love would only bring unhappiness he sends her back to her people and returns to his tribe.

Due to Alan Hale's fine and exceedingly smooth direction of this story and Rod LaRocque's superb handling of the title role strong sympathy is developed for the Indian hero and the interest held taut throughout the story. There is unusual warmth and human appeal, and the theme is handled with exceptional sincerity and plausibility. Director Hale played along this angle rather than for melodramatic effects or thrills; there is, however, a good punch in the football game and a well-handled fight. The ending is nicely handled, getting away from the idea of a racial inter-marriage and still proving satisfying.

Lillian Rich's performance as the girl is entirely satisfactory and Arthur Housman is capable as her scapegrace brother. Robert Edeson who created the title role in the stage production gives a fine performance as the girl's father and the remainder of the cast acquit themselves well.

PHILLIPINIS VISIT HOLT

Manager Nat Holt of the California Theatre, San Francisco, recently had the pleasure of a visit from Don Phillipini, leader of a prominent theatre orchestra at New Orleans, and Mme. Phillipini, well known singer. The musical director was associated with Mr. Holt for several years when the latter was managing theatres at Los Angeles.

CONTRACTS AWARDED

West Coast Theatres, Inc., which recently took over the partly completed McNamara-Winkelman Theatre at Martinez, Cal., has awarded contracts for the completion of this and plan to occupy the house in May.

Kansas City Theatre Changes Policy

ANOTHER Kansas City suburban house, the Isis, has changed its policy of presentation. Beginning on January 2, Jack Roth, manager, added Jack Riley and his orchestra, well known radio entertainers in the Kansas City territory, as a permanent fixture to the theatre. Also Harry Weber and a bevy of girls in "Collegiate Capers" were an added feature. New lighting effects, by way of border lights, footlights and dimmers, were added to the theatre. Thus far a steady increase in patronage has prevailed.

ON GOOD WILL

"Show me the small town exhibitor who has the good-will of the children of his community and I'll show you a theatre owner who is making money," said T. P. Davis of the Best Theatre, Parsons, Kas. "It costs very little to give away a small amount of candy, toy balloons or other trinkets once in a while and it makes you the 'best fellow in town' with the kiddies. Winning the good-will of adults is more or less difficult, but if you get the children on your side you also have the parents."

VISITORS

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market this week were: G. L. Hooper, Orpheum, Topeka, Kas.; L. Brenninger, Cozy, Crystal and Best Theatres, Topeka, Kas.; M. G. Weary, Farris, Richmond, Mo.; W. P. Cuff, Strand, Chillicothe, Mo.; Roy Spurlock, Star, St. Joseph, Mo.; Edward Peskay, Penn Theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.; M. W. New Oklahoma Houses

W. H. Hughes will erect a new theatre at Elk City, Okla., in the near future. The Orpheum Theatre at Weleetka, Okla., is being remodeled. Charles Rook is the new owner of the Liberty Theatre at Sayre, Okla. The Princess Theatre, seating 500, has opened at Bristow, Okla.

Arkansas Theatre Opens

Cecil Gupp has opened his now "Co-Ed" Theatre at Arkadelphia, Ark. The Gem Theatre at Blytheville, Ark., has opened with James Boyd as manager. The new Strand Theatre at Jonesboro, Ark., will open in the near future.

Two Northern New York Openings

HAMBURG, N. Y., was the scene of a theatre premiere on the evening of Thursday, January 14, when George Biehler opened his new Palace to the public. This house, which seats 1,200, is one of the most attractive of its size in Western New York. It replaces the old Palace which Mr. Biehler operated in Hamburg for many years. The house was a mass of flowers on the opening night. Albert Robbins of Syracuse has opened the Conservatory of Music in Ithaca as the Robbins' Little Theatre. While the house seats only 500 it has been brilliantly redecorated, and with Patrick Conway, the noted bandmaster, as conductor, is now presenting pictures in a de luxe setting. "The Iron Horse" was the opening feature.

KENMORE OPENING SOON

Mitchel Fitzer is making elaborate preparations for the opening of the new Kenmore Theatre in Kenmore, N. Y., for which he now is lining up a great opening program expected to be put on in a few weeks.

FILE MORTGAGE PAPERS

Papers for a $200,000 mortgage on the Majestic Theatre property in Buffalo have been filed in the county clerk's office by A. Victor and company, who recently purchased the property. The valuation set was $395,000. The Majestic will be torn down to make way for a new business building.

NOW PLAYING STOCK

The Stone Theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., has changed its policy to stock, according to announcement by Manager H. M. Addison. The first show will be staged about February 1.

START NEW HOUSE

The Erie Amusement Company of Buffalo, of which George Rosing is the directing head, has started work on a new community picture house at Broadway and Detroit street, which will seat 2,500 and will represent an outlay of $500,000. Two other community theatres will be built by the same company in the next few years, according to Max Rosing, manager of the Fillmore Theatre, also operated by the Erie Amusement Company.

WILLIAMS TRANSFERRED

George E. Williams, who has been exploiteer for Paramount in the Buffalo territory, has been transferred to the Howard Theatre in Atlanta, Ga., where he will become director of publicity. George is one of Buffalo's veteran exhibitors, he having managed many houses in this city during the last decade or so.

TO CONTEST WILL

The will of the late Charles A. Bird, well known Hornell, N. Y., theatre man, is to be contested by George Guthrie of Toronto, a cousin, who now is in Hornell investigating the circumstances surrounding the death. Mr. Guthrie declares he expects to prove Mr. Bird was of unsound mind when he made his will.

HAYMAN TO SAIL

Charley Hayman, president of the Strand Amusement Company, operating the Strand and Cataract Theatres in Niagara Falls, N. Y., will sail from New York on January 18 for a tour through South America.

Ontario House Reverts to Pictures

THE Capitol Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, one of the big downtown houses, reverted to the status of a picture theatre on January 9 when the theatre re-opened with "The Freshman." For some months past it had been the home of dramatic stock presentations but it is now being operated under the direct auspices of Famous Players Canadian Corp., with Ray Tubman, formerly of Ottawa, Ontario, as manager. A large orchestra has been organized under the direction of I. W. Lomas.

St. Louis Criterion Tries Experiment

LOCAL exhibitors are watching with interest the results of an experiment by the Criterion Theatre, St. Louis. Under a schedule effective January 16, this house will be open nineteen hours daily, closing only from 11 p. m. to 12 p. m. and from 5 a. m. to 9 a. m. for cleaning. This theatre specializes on westerns and comedies, and is in the financial district.

HOSTS TO WORKERS

Skouras Brothers were guests to 600 workers at the seventh annual banquet for Skouras Brothers Enterprises held at Hotel Coronado. The speakers included Spyros P. Skouras, Charles P. Skouras and Harry Koplar.

NEW OWNERS

The Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill., has been taken over by Noah Bloomer of Belleville, Ill. The theatres in Nettleton, Ark., and Lake City, Ark., are now under the management of O. R. Kern of Senath, Mo.

GIVE THEATRE PARTY

Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Rodgers of Cairo, Ill., and Poplar Bluff, Mo., were hosts on New Year's Day to forty-five college friends of their son, Carson Rodgers, a student at Vanderbilt University.

VISITORS

Out-of-town exhibitors here during the week included Curley Lawson, Mount Olive, Ill.; S. E. Pertle, Jerseyville, Ill.; Ray Barnes, Carmi, Ill.; Jim Reilly, Aton, Ill.; Oscar Wesley, Gillespie, Ill.; Elvin Weeks, Staunton, Ill.; Charley Goodnight, De Soto, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Clayton, West Frankfort, Ill.; Mr. and Mrs. I. W. Rodgers, Cairo, Ill.; and John Rees, Wellsville, Mo.

"ROMOLA" RELEASED

"Romola," held up by the Quebec Board of Moving Pictures Censors, it is alleged, because the picture depicted infidelity in marriage, was seen at the Capitol Theatre during the week of January 3, under the direction of Manager Harry Dahn. Some revision of the picture has been made.

A THIRD VERDUN HOUSE?

United Amusements, Ltd., Montreal, is negotiating for the erection of a theatre in Verdun, Quebec, to cost $200,000, the application for a permit for construction having come up before the Verdun City Council. There are already two other picture houses in Verdun, these being the the Palace. The Park is operated by the Standard Amusement Company and is valued at $125,000. Mr. Dunning is manager, United Amusements operate some eight handsome theatres in the City of Montreal.

RIALTO REOPENS

The Rialto Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, is once more on the map, having been reopened as a first run picture house with "Hell's High Road" as the first attraction. It has been under the direction of H. Jernberg. A specialty is being made of arias from grand operas by visiting artists, in addition to the picture programs.

WILTON NEW MANAGER

H. E. Wilton, manager of the Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, has become manager of the Strand Theatre, Hamilton, following the closing of the Savoy on January 4. His policy at the Strand is to change picture programs three times weekly.

KENNEDY A VISITOR

J. C. Kennedy of Toronto, former manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, was a recent visitor in Ottawa when he renewed old friendships. Last summer Mr. Kennedy married the young lady who had been the cashier of the Regent for some years and Mrs. Kennedy was also given a spontaneous welcome home.

ONE GOOD REASON

January has been "First National Month" with Don Stapleton, manager of the Centre Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, all the way through. First National attractions have been booked solid for the month. One very good reason is that Ben Stapleton, father of the manager, is owner of the Centre and also one of the charter directors and original franchise-holders of First National.

Iowa Showman Better After Accident

E. M. TRACY, proprietor of the New Princess at Storm Lake, Ia., is practically well again after an accident which put him in the hospital for a time.

EXTENSIVE REMODELING

J. E. Trovas, who recently acquired the Plaza at Ackley, Ia., is planning extensive remodeling and changes to improve the house. He immediately installed two new projectors.

HOUSES CHANGE HANDS

Frank Meyer sold the Lucas at Lucas, S. D., to C. S. Yages. William Huntsman sold the Gem at Emerson, Ia., to J. C. Wilkins. J. L. Mieras sold the Star at Maurice, Ia., to J. E. Mieras. J. W. Arbogast has sold the Tivoli at Bartley, Neb., to W. R. Daniel. Ed Rohwedder has sold the Opera house at New Brunswick, Neb., to Mr. Stevens.

Portland, Ore., Lease Sold to Arthur

HARRY C. ARTHUR of the North American Theatres Corporation has purchased Ackerman & Harris' lease of the new Broadway Theatre building in Portland now under construction. Mr. Arthur states that this deal is an amalgamation of interests by which Ackerman & Harris, who now conduct the Portland Hippodrome, will take care of the vaudeville activities of the new theatre, and his corporation the picture end.

TACOMA THEATRE SOLD

The Tacoma Theatre, an historic landmark, sold last week for $450,000. This sum involves of course, the purchase of the entire building at 9th and Broadway, Tacoma. S. R. Balkwill, the purchaser, states he is acting for persons whose names he cannot reveal. Speculation is rife as to the future of the house, which was built in 1888 from plans by Stanford White.

BREAKS RECORDS

Manager George C. Greenlund of the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, shattered every house record when he presented to Tacoma audiences the world's premiere of "Hearts and Fists," filmed at the Weaver studios in Tacoma and very much of a home product.

New Theatre for Glens Falls, N. Y.

FRED W. MAUSERT, who runs a 10 and 15-cent picture theatre in Glens Falls, N. Y., making money hand over fist, now plans to erect a three-story office building to house forty offices and six stores with an arcade leading through the building to the theatre which will be in the rear. When Mr. Mausert quit the Park and Rialto Theatres in Glens Falls a year or so ago he spent some little time looking around for another theatre, finally buying an old church near the business center of the city. This he remodeled. The church building is a considerable distance back from the street, and on the intervening space Mr. Mausert will now erect the office building. Mr. Mausert's theatre has about 1,000 seats and he uses a three-piece orchestra. He has already booked up his attractions for nearly eighteen months in advance, so the film boys will find little business in sight when they call. Mr. Mausert has one policy and that is to give his patrons the best pictures obtainable.

WHY SHOULD HARRY WORRY?

"Why kick or worry? It gets you nothing." These are the words of Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, who frankly admits that business is good and then leads his interviewer to the back of the house and points out that practically every seat is filled. Mr. Hellman is now running double features each night with the exception of Saturdays and Mondays.

STACEY SMILES, TOO

Ollie Stacey, who used to run the Rialto in Glens Falls along with the Majestic in Albany and got little more than a furrowed brow for his pains, is devoting his entire time these days to the Albany house and smiles when anyone suggests his taking over another theatre.

A PERFECT RECORD

William Orcutt, manager of the Columbia in Rensselaer, has the distinction of having never lost a single day or even asked for a night off since he came with the house last April. In other words, Mr. Orcutt is giving the theatre his personal attention 100 per cent.

NO LONGER A CINCH

James Rose, who has a string of picture theatres in Troy, Rensselaer and Kinderhook, and who is making them a success, declared the other day that the time is past when small houses could be allowed to run any old way and that the small house, if successful, must be given the same care and attention as the larger ones. "Those who think they can run the small house as in the past are making the mistake of their lives," said Mr. Rose.

NOT NEW TO GAME

L. Cappa, new owner of Dreamland in Albany, ran a picture theatre in Italy before coming to this country. He has placed his admission prices at 15 cents, with 10 cents for children, provided they are accompanied by their parents.

HE TELLS THE WORLD

John Garry of the Empire in Glens Falls isn't a bit bashful for he advertises that his house is the home of the film classics. But Mr. Garry endeavors to book only the very best in pictures and is building up a very nice business. His organist, Leland Benger, is a big drawing card also. The Empire does not admit children under the age of 5 years.

A SERIES OF REUNIONS

If Walter Roberts of the Troy Theatre could take the sort of a vacation he would like, he would step over to the railroad station and buy a couple of tickets for himself and wife, and then visit the places where he formerly lived. That would mean Buffalo, Cleveland, Louisville, New Orleans and some of the other cities of the South.

ROSE NOW IN TROY

Gardner Hall in Troy has a new manager in the person of W. H. Rose, who hails from Gloversville and is a brother of the owner of the house.

FINDS HUNTING "ALL WET"

James R. Conklin, manager of the Rialto and Park Theatres in Glens Falls, is a New York City boy, coming to Glens Falls, however, from Trenton, N. J., where he was connected with theatres. Last fall, Mr. Conklin received an invitation to accompany a party on a deer hunting expedition. It rained the entire time that Mr. Conklin was in the woods, and what he thinks of deer hunting trips would not appear well in print. Since the Rialto has been taken over by William Benton of Saratoga Springs some little changes have been made, admission prices having been reduced, with 20 and 30 cents prevailing for the first half of the week when pictures alone are shown, and 30, 40 and 50 cents being the order during the last half of the week when vaudeville and pictures are given.

GRIFFIN IMPROVING

Elmer Griffin, well known in exhibitor circles in this part of the state for many years, was recently operated on for appendicitis at the Troy City Hospital. His many friends will be glad to learn that he is on the way to recovery.

"IN THE SPRING . . ."

The Bijou in Troy is all dolled out these days in some brand new stage settings, and according to all reports the manager, Harry Rose, is also dolling up a bit and plans to be married in the none too distant future.

ONE IN A MILLION

Fred Shafer, managing director of the Lafayette in Buffalo, will be pleased to know that Ted O'Shea, manager of the Metro-Goldwyn exchange in Albany, is wearing the tie which Mrs. Shafer presented him with at Christmas time.

ANOTHER FOR MORAN

Matthew Moran of Coxsackie has added to his holdings and taken over the theatre in New Baltimore which has been run by Donald Baine.

HAROLD FILKINS ILL

Exhibitors in Northern and Central New York who have had occasion to deal with Harold Filkins, salesman for the local F. B. O. exchange, will be sorry to learn that he suffered a nervous breakdown last week, and that his condition became so serious that it was necessary to send for his father, H. I. Filkins of Syracuse, who came on to Albany.

DODGING WINTRY BLASTS

Louis Buettner will sail for the West Indies on January 28, accompanied by Mrs. Buettner, and likewise with Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Shearer, also of Cohoes, Mr. Shearer being associated with Mr. Buettner in the Cohoes Amusement Company. The trip will consume twenty-nine days and will take the party to Cuba, Panama and many other places.

McNAMARA INJURED

Marty McNamara of the King Theatre in Troy, managed by John Doocey, a live wire, sustained a bad fall the other day when the ladder on which he was working slipped, precipitating him to the floor of the theatre.

WALTER HAYS IN ALBANY

Walter Hays dropped off in Albany one day last week while on his way from Buffalo to New York. He was met by Uly S. Hill, managing director of the Strand houses in Albany and Troy, and spent the major part of his time while here looking over the theatre which the Strand people are erecting in Albany.

EXCHANGES MOVING

Exhibitors visiting Albany after May 1 will find at least six of the exchanges on the Troy road occupying the new Film Building. The six that have so far signed leases are Fox, Educational, Universal, Warner Bros., Metro-Goldwyn and First National.

NOW BOOKING FILMS

John Augello was in town last week booking pictures for his new theatre in Utica, which will be known as the Family. William Smalley of Cooperstown was also in town doing a lot of booking for the weeks to come. Mr. Smalley has a dozen or more houses and naturally he is a much sought after individual whenever he hits Albany.

KALLET HAS A COLD

Mike Kallet, who runs the Madison Theatre in Oneida, has been confined to his home for several days with a hard cold. Joe Kallet, his brother, who has the Strand in Rome, is building himself a new home which will be ready for occupancy in April.

IN THE BIG TOWN

Rae Candee of Utica is back from a trip to New York, while his associate, Nate Robbins, is in New York this week. Bob Pierce, from the neighboring village of Ilion, is also in New York this week.

SOON TO REOPEN

The work of repairing the damage done by fire to the Academy of Music in Newburgh is progressing rapidly and it looks as though the house would reopen within a few weeks. The theatre is one of several acquired by the Famous Players, which also has the Bardavon and the Stratford in Poughkeepsie, as well as the second-run Liberty. There is a stiff fight on in Poughkeepsie for patronage between the Famous Players group and another group of three houses run by George Cohen.

A CLASH IMPENDS

Efforts are being made to bring about a bowling contest between teams from the picture theatres of Troy and Schenectady. Claude Fish of the American in Schenectady is looking after one end, while Walter Roberts will select the Troy team.

ROSENTHAL AMBITIOUS

Jake Rosenthal, owner of the Rose Theatre in Troy is branching out a bit these days and was elected vice-president of a furniture firm last week. It would not be surprising if Mr. Rosenthal became the owner of another theatre in the near future.

MRS. SULLIVAN ILL

The wife of Maurice Sullivan, owner of the San Souci Theatre in Watervliet for twelve years, is very ill at her home with pneumonia, and oxygen has been resorted to for several days. Mr. Sullivan's sister, Bridget, does all the booking for the theatre, starting in some little time ago when her brother was confined to the house for a long period with rheumatism. Mr. Sullivan plays no matinees and on Monday night has but one show.

HEAR YE, HEAR YE!

L. N. Sanschagrin, who is about to open a picture theatre in Saranac Lake, is planning to have a game dinner for the film boys who will attend the opening. Mr. Sanschagrin is said to be a sure shot and has already promised all the rabbit that one can eat.

KURAS SOLE OWNER

Thomas E. Sheehan of Massena has disposed of his one-half interest in the Rialto Theatre to his partner, Frank Kuras, who has assumed all contracts for pictures booked. Mr. Sheehan is a lawyer by profession.

NEW SEAMAN THEATRE

Walter Seaman, with houses in Highland, Marlboro and Milton, has acquired the Opera House in New Paltz, which is now closed for alterations.

SCHINE TO MOVE

Papers filed with the Secretary of State's office in Albany last week announced that the Schine Theatrical Company would move its headquarters from Gloversville to Syracuse.

BUSINESS SPEEDS UP

Business has picked up very fast at the picture theatres in Albany during the last week. Alex Sayles of the Leland announced the crowds so good that on some nights it was close to 10 o'clock before the last person could be seated.

ILL BUT FAITHFUL

Although Jake Golden of the Griswold Theatre in Troy was sick in bed at a hospital near Boston, he did not forget his employees on Christmas morning and sent a telegram of greeting. When Mr. Golden returns to the theatre he will find that he has not been forgotten either, for a handsome present awaits him in his office.

Two New Chicago Amusement Companies

THE Manor Amusement Company has been organized by V. T. Lynch and his associates, Carl Fricke, William Siewert, John J. Lynch and Maurice Savage to operate the new Manor Theatre at 4059 West North avenue. The new company has a capital of $100,000. Another company has been organized by the same parties, to be known as the Manor Theatre Company, with a nominal capital, to look after the other real estate and business holdings of the company. The Maywood Amusement Company has been organized by Vincent Lynch, Elmer D. Miller, Simon Simansky and William J. Mueller to operate theatres in that town. The principals are all well known theatre managers of Chicago and the new company has a capital of $100,000.

THE SCHAEFERS ORGANIZE

Fred W. Schaefner, Frank G. Schaefer and Peter J. Schaefer have organized the Crystal Theatre Company to operate the Crystal Theatre at 2701 West North avenue, one of the best known movie houses in that part of the city.

COLUMBUS THEATRE SOLD

The Ascher circuit has sold the Columbus Theatre at 6238 South Ashland avenue to parties who will rebuild the house into an amusement and recreation building. The price is reported in excess of $250,000. The patrons of the Ascher circuit in that district will be taken care of by the West Englewood Theatre, which is located at 1619 West 63rd street.

A HAPPY BEGINNING

Joseph Speaker has opened his new Majestic Theatre at DePere and is playing to capacity business.

WRIGHT IN CHARGE

The Calumet Theatre in South Chicago is now under the management of Andy Wright.

Arrest Ohio Showman Over Sunday Law

POLICE arrested James Shipler, manager of the Majestic Theatre, Sidney, Ohio, for operating his house on Sunday in violation of Section 13049 of the Ohio code. Shipler had his house open three Sundays and three separate charges were placed against him. Shipler pleaded not guilty in the mayor's court, waived examination, and was bound over to the higher court.

THEATRE REFURNISHED

The Homestead Theatre, Cleveland, under management of Julius Schwartz, has been completely refurnishd and two new projection machines installed.

WOMAN SUES PALACE

The Palace Theatre, Cincinnati, of which I. Libson is the executive head, has been sued for $15,243 alleged damages, suffered by a patron who claims her leg was severely fractured when she fell as she attempted to change her seat in the dark theatre.

KESSLER RECOVERED

Friends of John Kessler, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Canton, Ohio, who was taken suddenly ill at the Columbus convention, are rejoicing over his complete recovery and return to business.

HETTESHEIMER PLAYS HOST

Manager Andrew Hettesheimer of the Orpheum Theatre was host to members of the Cincinnati Better Motion Pictures Council, who attended the theatre in a body to view "The Last Laugh."

CINCINNATI SITE CLEARED

The site for the new 3,500-seat house to be built in Cincinnati has at last been cleared and actual work is expected to start soon.

"Sit Down!"

(Special Dispatch to Moving Picture World)
Chicago, January 13.

This is the story of the seats of the mighty.

The other day a movie fan clad in grimy overalls, with an essential patch missing from the seat, presented his dime at the box office of one of the smaller Chicago Loop theatres, received his ticket and tried to enter.

The house manager, a man with an eye for beauty, obstructed his progress and said, "No!" Verbal combat became fistic. It was a corking fight until the cops came, with "Overalls" denuding his opponents of the seat of his trousers by way of reprisal.

In court, from his seat on high, the judge said, "Sit down." Then he lectured on the virtue of keeping one's temper and trousers intact. But each unrepentant combatant, while later seeking repairs, rumbled that it was worth the dollar fine.

DROBAS MANAGING

James Drobas has taken over the management of the Plaza Theatre at Ackley from the C. S. Gross circuit.

STAR CHANGES

The Star Theatre at Prairie City is now under the management of the Schwartz and Galloway circuit.

MOSS LEAVES L. & T.

J. Reich Moss, purchasing agent for Lubliner & Trinz, has gone to Wheeling, W. Va., to engage in other work.

SOME HIGH KICKERS

Andrew Karzas' Trianon is conducting a National Charleston contest and has just completed arrangements for the Circle Theatre at Indianapolis to put over a local contest in that city and send the winner to Chicago for the finals at the Trianon. Karzas successfully put over the bathing beauty contest last summer for the Atlantic City pageant. The Trianon is under the management of the Woodlawn Theatre Company.

NEW THEATRE SITE

The National Theatres Corporation has bought the southeast corner of Crawford and Park avenues for theatre purposes. In their application for an injunction against the enforcement of the old fire ordinance, their petition stated the circuit was losing about $5,000 daily because of restriction of lobby crowds.

INCORPORATION

Word has been received in Chicago of the incorporation at Wilmington, Del., of the Ascher Theatrical Enterprises with a capital of $3,000,000 to build and operate all kinds of theatres.

RYAN RESIGNS

The many friends of Charley Ryan, for several years managing director of the Milford Theatre of the Lynch circuit, will be surprised to hear he has resigned from that position and will announce his new connection at an early date. Ryan is one of the best known managers in the northwest section of the city.

NEW CHATEAU STAFF

The new staff of the Chateau Theatre, under the Ascher management, is composed of Harry Beaumont, manager; Harry Swan, house manager; John Laurie, treasurer; Lynn Hazzard, musical director, and H. McDonald, head of the advertising department. Ralph T. Kettering is in executive charge of the theatre and its staff.

FIGHT SPECULATORS

The Loop theatre owners have a new plan drawn up by their attorneys for submission to the council committee to curb the ticket speculators and to prevent overcharges of the theatre patrons for the shows in the Loop district. There is a great deal of opposition to the efforts of the managers to solve the scalper problem that confronts them.

MIDWEST LEASES TWO

The Princess and Kennery Theatres at Kirkesville have been leased to the Midwest Film circuit. J. P. Moore will have charge of the houses. The Princess will show pictures exclusively and the Kennedy will show road shows with pictures and vaudeville.

New Denver Theatre

Another new D. & R. theatre opened its doors on January 8 in Denver. This theatre is the Egyptian, a suburban house, located at 32nd and Clay streets in the heart of one of the rapidly growing districts of Denver. The opening performance was strictly an invitation affair and those who attended were unanimous in their opinion that this new D. & R. amusement house is one of the most beautiful and unique among the suburban theatres in the West. It is of Egyptian architecture and style throughout; seats over 700; has a specially built stage for presentation acts and the newest and best equipment.

Pittsburgh House in Perpetual Lease

SENATOR JOHN P. HARRIS, president of the Harris Amusement Company, announces that his company has leased in perpetuity the East Liberty property situated in Penn avenue and bounded by Centre avenue and Sheridan Square, Pitsburgh. Several storerooms are located on the property as well as the Sheridan Square Theatre, popular combination house, just celebrating its thirteenth anniversary. General Manager D. A. Harris plans reconstruction of the theatre with the addition of 1,000 seats. Provisions will permit the installation of another 800 seats at a later date. Since the theatre recenly began the presentation of feature pictures in conjunction with the vaudeville, it has been found impossible to take care of the large crowds desiring admittance at all performances.

TO INSTALL ORCHESTRAS

Arrangements are being made by the Rowland & Clark theatres to install orchestras in both the Liberty and Regent Theatres in East Liberty.

PULLING FOR BUD

Bud Silverman, general manager for the Gould Amusements, is putting on a great Laugh Month campaign and the boys here are all pulling for him to win one of the top prizes in the exploitation contest.

THE ANNUAL CALENDARS

Jake Silverman of the Strand Theatre, Altoona, was a recent visitor and brought along a supply of calendars for his Film Row friends. Every year the Silverman Brothers, Jake and Ike, present their patrons with calendars. The 1926 offering is especially handsome, containing the picture of a beautiful girl painted by the famous artist, Haskell Coffin.

GARFINKLE IS MANAGER

Mr. Garfinkle, former Paramount salesman, is now managing Ike Berney's Pastime Theatre at Lewistown.

RECENT VISITORS

Recent out-of-town visitors included: C. E. Gable, Sharpsville; Nick Anas, Wellsburg; H. W. Lundgren, Chester; Mr. Scrano, Madera, and Mr. Caplan, Mahoningtown.

Along Exchange Row

With the Men Who Sell the Pictures

Albany

William Cameron, a student salesman at the Metro-Goldwyn exchange here, left last week for Minneapolis, where he will be employed. He is the fourth student-salesman to come to the local exchange in the last month.

WEISSMAN BACK

Alex Weismann, salesman for Metro-Goldwyn out of here, back from a vacation spent in Pittsburgh, brought with him the best regards to all the Albany film boys from Bert Moran of the Pathe exchange there, who was formerly in Albany.

MacINTYRE IN N. Y.

J. H. McIntyre, manager for Paramount here, was in New York during the week.

FRED FEEDS 'EM

Herman Stern and Vincent Fisher were in Glens Falls last Monday and were guests of Fred Mausert at dinner.

PRIZE COLLIE ILL

C. R. Halligan of the Universal exchange was a much worried man during the past week when his prize collie became so sick that it was necessary for him to send for a veterinarian.

DRIVE OVER

The Pro-Dis-Co drive ended Saturday. The office force worked far into the night as well as all day Sunday. At the end Bob Mochrie, local manager, paid the checks for a bang-up good dinner which he tendered the force at the Hotel Ten Eyck.

LOVING CARE!

H. C. Bissell, local manager for Universal, has discarded the time-honored derby for a soft hat. In order that they might be sure that there would not be another derby, four of the office force accompanied Mr. Bissell to the haberdashery and then proceeded to put their fists through the derby that has long marked Mr. Bissell as an outstanding figure on Film Row.

HEAVY SNOWFALL

Alec Herman, who looks after First National's product out of here, was in Utica and Oneida during the past week and reported a good deal of snow upstate.

San Francisco

An interesting sales meeting was held at the San Francisco branch of Universal recently when Lou Metzger, sales director of the western division, paid the office a visit. The entire staff of this branch was in attendance, together with L. J. Schlaifer, Pacific Coast manager. William Lendon, traveling auditor for the firm, also paid the office a visit during the holidays.

TOUR NEVADA

Charles Muehlman, manager of the San Francisco branch of First National, and Newton Levi, of the sales staff, toured the Nevada territory immediately following the holidays. While cold weather was experienced, little snow was found anywhere in the mountain territory.

THE LURE OF THE FILMS

Ben Simpson, who retired recently as manager of the San Francisco branch of Associated branch of Associated Exhibitors, has been enjoying a respite from business cares but is arranging to get back in the business at an early date. He is planning to move to Los Angeles.

LUSTIG A VISITOR

Harry Lustig, for many years with Metro, but now Pacific Coast manager for Warner Bros., paid the San Francisco branch a visit the last of the year.

LOWERY AT HOME

Very little has been seen of late of Maurice F. Lowery, traveling representative for United Artists, but he came in from his southern territory to spend the holidays with his family at San Francisco.

Buffalo

Bill Bork, genial Paramount booker, is keeping his eyes peeled on the skies these days. Bill is expecting a visit of the stork to his home soon.

SOCIAL CLUB PLANNED

Charley Goodwin of Universal is planning to form a club of all the employees of the office with the idea of holding social events from time to time.

NEW TYPE TICKLER

Gwendolyn Maust has been engaged by Manager John M. Sitterly as a stenographer at the Associated Exhibitors office. Al Teschmacher, booker, is anxious for the auto show to open so he can pick out a new gas chariot.

CASUALTIES

Elmer Lux and H. E. Hughes of the F. B. O. office has a great time at the Film Board ball. Elmer had his dress suit on for two days afterwards and H. E. had to get a new pair of spectacles.

THE CROWNING GLORY

Carl Fahrenholtz, booker at Fox, is giving an imitation of Ben Welch these days. He does it with a new derby. J. E. Dickman, Fox salesman, refused to be seen on the streets with his deputy unless the latter got a new hat. Now he refuses to be seen anywhere with him.

Milwaukee

Bob Wennig, formerly a salesman with the Universal exchange at Milwaukee, now is employed with the Educational Film exchange of this city.

STAHL ON TRIP

Max Stahl, manager of the Educational Film exchange, is on a business trip visiting the various cities throughout Wisconsin.

ELECTION SOON

The annual election of the Film Board of Trade of Milwaukee will take place on Monday, according to announcement of Ben Koenig, secretary of the organization. Sam Sherman is present head of the organization.

CARROL NATHAN, Universal's San Francisco manager, greets Pauline Frederick on her return after touring Australia. Her last picture work was in the Universal Jewel, "Smouldering Fires."

Kansas City

There was no "after-holiday" slackening of business along Kansas City's movie row this week. Bob Withers, branch manager for Enterprise, reported a marked increase in the business of that exchange for 1925, while Jack Langan of the Standard Film Company exchange made a similar assertion concerning his company. C. E. Reynolds, Universal representative, is displaying with pride a new Elgin watch which is a gift from his company in recognition of the 200 contracts he obtained on the coming group of Century two-reelers.

SCHULTZ AT DESK AGAIN

C. A. Schultz, P. D. C. branch manager, is back at his desk again after a visit with his parents at Lester Prairie, Minn. Louis Reichert, Warner Bros.' branch manager, returned from an eastern Christmas trip, rolled up his sleeves and "dug in." It is with high anticipation that Russell Borg, Educational booker, is looking forward to the last week of this month, which will be Bookers' Week, in conjunction with a national drive on the part of his company. In all movie row stores this week there was much evidence of $10 gold pieces. Did not two dozen Pathe employees in Kansas City receive one 'gold man' each from their company? K. L. Eagon, who formerly was a Paramount representative in the Kansas City territory, has been added to the Kansas City Pathe force, according to J. A. Epperson, branch manager.

RUBBING IT IN

Just to "rub it in," Eddie Green, Metro-Goldwyn representative, who is spending the holidays on the West Coast, sent back some of those "The Water's Fine" cards to shivering Kansas City friends. R. S. Ballantyne, district Pathe chief, has returned from a trip to Oklahoma City and Kansas key towns.

Pittsburgh

A. Weissman, M-G-M salesman in the Albany territory, is vacationing in Pittsburgh. Mr. Weissman has many acquaintances here, having four years ago managed the Wid Gunning exchange in the city.

CONDOLENCES

David Kimmelman, city salesman for Federated, has the sympathy of his many friends in the loss of his father, whose death occurred recently.

THOMPSON SEES WITHERS

Lew Thompson, Associated Exhibitors' division manager, was a recent visitor to the local branch. He conferred with Manager Jack Withers.

WEDDING BELLS

"Ted" Tolley, for thirteen years with the Standard exchange, is now booker for the S. & S. Film & Supply Company, succeeding Miss Minnie Rosenberg, who after several years' service is resigning to wed Mannie Steinberg, one of the owners of the S. & S.

LEBBY ESCAPES DEATH

Edward Lebby, Educational salesman, had a narrow escape from death or serious injury recently when the automobile in which he was riding was demolished by a freight train at a crossing in McKeesport. Ed was only slightly injured.

Detroit

Harry Ross, former manager of the Paramount local exchange and now division manager for the same company with headquarters in Chicago, announces the appointment of Jack Ryder to the berth of sales manager in the Chicago territory. Ryder held the same post here for several years, going to Chicago only two months ago.

FRIEDMAN GONE

Joseph Friedman left Sunday with his family for New York to take up his new duties in Universal's home office. Ray Moon, former city salesman, has been installed in the manager's office to succeed Friedman here.

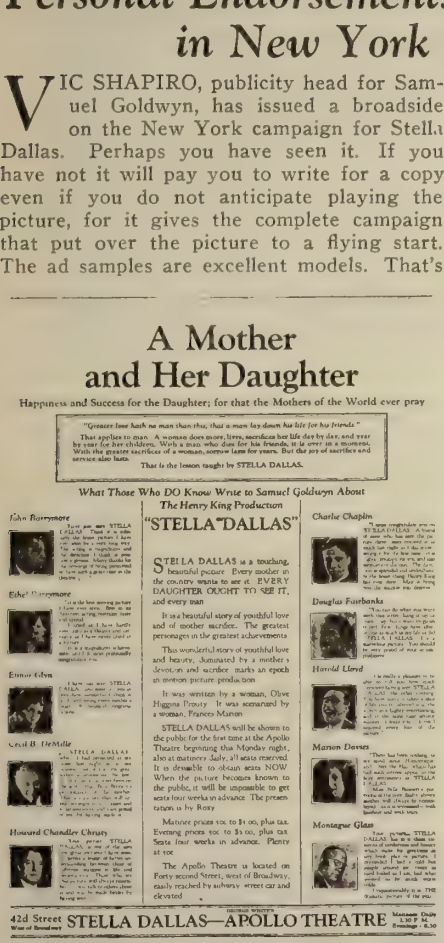
Personal Endorsements Best Appeal in New York Stella Dallas Campaign

VIC SHAPIRO, publicity head for Samuel Goldwyn, has issued a broadside on the New York campaign for Stella Dallas. Perhaps you have seen it. If you have not it will pay you to write for a copy even if you do not anticipate playing the picture, for it gives the complete campaign that put over the picture to a flying start. The ad samples are excellent models. That's



A Mother and Her Daughter
Happiness and Success for the Daughter; for that the Mothers of the World ever pray
"Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."
That applies to man. A woman does more, lives, sacrifices her life day by day, and year by year for her children. With a man who does for his friends, it is over in a moment. With the greater sacrifices of a woman, sorrow lasts for years. But the joy of sacrifice and service also lasts.
That is the lesson taught by STELLA DALLAS.
What Those Who DO Know Write to Samuel Goldwyn About
The Henry King Production
"STELLA DALLAS"
STELLA DALLAS is a touching, beautiful picture. Every mother in the country wants to see it. EVERY DAUGHTER OUGHT TO SEE IT, and every man
It is a beautiful story of youthful love and of mother sacrifice. The greatest personages in the greatest achievements
This wonderful story of youthful love and beauty, dominated by a mother's devotion and sacrifice marks an epoch in motion picture production
It was written by a woman, Olive Higgins Prouty. It was scenarized by a woman, Frances Marion
STELLA DALLAS will be shown to the public for the first time at the Apollo Theatre beginning this Monday night, also at matinees daily. All seats reserved. It is desirable to obtain seats NOW. ONLY A TWO BY TWO

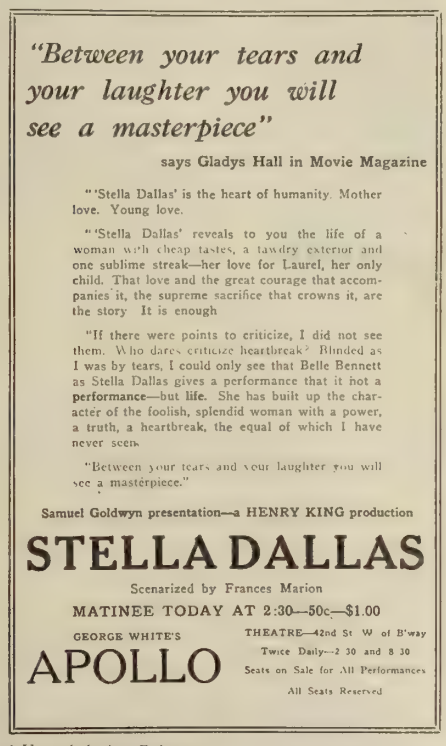
Charles E. Moyer, of United Artists, advises us that these cuts will be available in mat form prior to the general release of the picture. Ask that these be supplied you ten days or two weeks ahead of the other material, that they may be out of the way the why of this story. We want to urge upon those who do book the picture the importance of thoroughly selling the picture in advance of the opening. That's the way to get the most money out of the engagement. From a flat start Stella will work up to crowded houses toward the close of the engagement, but the empty seats for the first and second days will represent an actual loss. You can't sell yesterday's vacant seats to today's turnaway.



"Between your tears and your laughter you will see a masterpiece"
says Gladys Hall in Movie Magazine
"'Stella Dallas' is the heart of humanity. Mother love. Young love.
"'Stella Dallas' reveals to you the life of a woman with cheap tastes, a tawdry exterior and one sublime streak—her love for Laurel, her only child. That love and the great courage that accompanies it, the supreme sacrifice that crowns it, are the story It is enough
"If there were points to criticize, I did not see them. Who dares criticize heartbreak? Blinded as I was by tears, I could only see that Belle Bennett as Stella Dallas gives a performance that it not a performance—but life. She has built up the character of the foolish, splendid woman with a power, a truth, a heartbreak, the equal of which I have never seen.

A halftone reproduction of the cuts in the press book will give you a wave line. A line cut will give you a halftone since the screen already has been created.

THE OPENING DAY AND FOLLOW UP IN NEW YORK CITY

Copy can be changed to suit local conditions, but the idea can be used in any town. The originals are a two column for the opening and a single for the follow. They should be made larger where space rates permit, but need not be much larger to get over.

cuts will materially help the sales, but we also reproduce a few examples of the use of all type, mostly two column spaces. These pulled in the New York papers, where the scatter idea would have been too costly.

All of these are good, though after the first day you can get local opinions that should carry greater weight in your own town. The examples are reproduced for style suggestion rather than as copy. See to it that a dozen of the best people see the picture the opening day and you'll get as many selling opinions as you have issued tickets.

PLAYING UP THE NAME

We also reproduce the opening night ad and the display for the morning following. Work these up, changing copy to suit your local conditions, but stick to the opinion idea in all your displays. You cannot write any better copy than your guests will write for you.

Stella Dallas is going to be a financial as well as artistic success, but it must be sold in advance if you are going to have a full house the opening day. Start in with professional opinion and switch to local endorsements after the opening, if you cannot arrange from a preview to get these opinion in advance.

The better you sell, the more you will make. Start in early and keep plugging. It's a story that interests even the case hardened men in the trade—witness this story.

Realism

There is a panel twelve feet wide between the two entrances to the Washington Theatre, Bay City, Mich., and this space was utilized to put over The Iron Horse with a special painting showing the locomotive, Indians, game and mountains.

Real smoke issued from the stack of the engine, a smoke pot being employed, and at showing time a motor rang a concealed engine bell. Sound, sight and smell all combined to help ticket sales.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

In striking contrast to the orchestra of the previous week, a feminine harp ensemble was used as the outstanding musical incident on the program which had "Bluebeard's Seven Wives" as the feature picture. Harp work being necessarily "slow," the other incidents of the show were of the livelier type to lend the desired balance. A Charleston Trio of male dancers "pepped" things up considerably, besides which there were two other presentations. The entire running time of the show was 1 hour and 57 minutes. The Topical Review ran 8 minutes, leaving 29 minutes for the musical presentations.

Each deluxe performance was opened by the Strand Orchestra in the overture "Mignon" by Thomas. The lights for this included an amber Mestrum floor on the musicians from the dome, steel blue Mestrum flood on the purple draw-curtains which were closed over the small production stage. Foots and borders of large stage ni blue and 4 steel blue arch spots from the sides hitting the pleats of the draw curtains. The overture required 8 minutes.

The famous Charleston Trio in dinner suits did the dance for a 3 minute turn. The exceptional popularity of the Charleston in Brooklyn right at this time was responsible for using the trio. They appeared on the apron of the small production stage and were flooded by an amber Mestru mflood from the dome. The lights on the musicans changed to a deep blue.

Following the Topical Review, Eugenio Cibelli, billed as "the crooning troubadour," appeared on the apron of the large stage in a trio of selections. Taking up 6 minutes, Cibelli sang "Mari Mari," "La Espagnole" and "Cielito Lindo," playing his own accompaniment on the guitar. The lights: light amber spots on Cibelli from the dome; musicians flooded by orange Mestrums from the projection room; foots and borders of large stage in blue, metalline draw curtains closed over the small production stage and flooded in blue.

The Tamara Utgoff Harp Ensemble of 6 girls was made the center of an artistic incident which included a bass-baritone, a soprano and 6 of the ballet corps. The scene consisted of 6 circular steps going up to a terrace, among which were seated the harpists. Especially draped gold curtains masked in the neutral blue back-drop, in front of which ran a green hedge row. The girls were costumed in 1860 period. The Repertoire included "Rustle of Spring" by the harps; Toselli's "Serenade," sung by soprano with harp accompaniment; "Polka Pizzicatto" by the ballet; "Music Box" novelty by the harps with pantomime dance; "Barcarolle" sung by baritone and soprano. This presentation took up 12 minutes.

NOT MUCH IN THE PICTURE, BUT THE HEADLIGHTS WERE FLASHES

Ten-foot cutouts facing both ways on the marquise of the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, were strong enough to catch the eye a couple of blocks away and draw proper attention to the showing of "The Iron Horse." It's a fine stunt for a business district.

Speed Contests for Lightnin' Sell Many Tickets

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

CHANEY FACES HELPED THE EFFECT OF THIS BILLED CAR

Cutouts from the one-sheets were pasted on the windows to back up the banners and cutout on "The Unholy Three" at the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg. J. H. Stelling used the cutouts for his lobby display later on, saving the cost of material.

First Poster Car For Unholy Three

The bannered street car is in the discard in most towns, but it never was worked in Spartanburg, S. C., until J. H. Stelling put out a car for The Unholy Three at the Rex Theatre. It was necessary to obtain permision from the City Council before the car could be run, but this permission was promptly granted.

Cutouts of the giant and the dwarf and large cutouts of Chaney's head were used on the outside of the car, this material later being transferred to the house front. There was also a cutout face from the one sheet in most of the car windows, though one or two showed Harold Lloyd, who was underlined.

Mr. Stelling kept the car out for two days, the second day being that of the opening, and backed up the idea with a dog story in the Herald to the effect that an old lady had hailed the car and had demanded transportation downtown on tender of the usual fare.

Speed Contests Are Good for Lightnin'

Speed contests have been staged by the Underwood agencies in connection with the local showing of Lightin' and the stunt has been reported all the way from Boston to Los Angeles, but Boston walks away with the cream of the idea.

There a throwaway was used which featured a 240 word story of Lightin', including the essential selling facts. Any typist who could copy the story in five minutes with less than three errors was given a pair of tickets for the showing at the Tremont Temple. The copying had to be done in the offices of the company, and it was neccessary to add 12 machines to the five originally supplied, and even at that there was need for a policeman to keep the girls in line. The contest was held from nine to one on Saturday, twelve to two on other week days and five to eight on Friday night. A girl failing on her first chance could return another day for a second chance, but if she failed a third time she was disbarred.

The business section was flooded with these circulars and reams of paper were used in practice work. Everyone in every office where there was a typist knew about the stunt, and the girls in front of the Underwood office were a daily bally for the picture, since the window over their heads was plastered with signs.

Chased the Jays

In Youngstown, Ohio, Havoc was partly put over by stressing the havoc caused by jaywalking. The city council passed resolutions, the Mayor issued a proclamation and the police did the billposting.

It worked well on Havoc, but Fox renters would do better to hold the stunt for The Fool.

M-G Window Models Form a Trade Mark

Since the first Goldwyn publicity man for the idea of having a girl demonstrate cosmetics in a drug store window the Goldwyn and now the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer publicity men are strong for window models.

The cosmetic demonstration has been revived on a dozen pictures, and of course it had to work for the Merry Widow, the latest instance being reported from Dayton, where it helped the Victory theatre.

Shoes were models for the same picture and on the same engagement another girl was engaged to play the Merry Widow waltz in the window of a music store.

It is getting to be a trade mark, but there is nothing better than a girl in a window for a store display, and unless you have tried the idea yourself you cannot realize its full value.

HOW THE PRISMUS PALLAST, BERLIN, PUT OVER THE "PHANTOM OF THE OPERA"

Fifteen bicycle sandwich men, each with a balloon also lettered for "Das Phantom der Oper," paraded the streets in single file, getting the best effect from the number of riders. The other section of the cut shows the lobby, dressed to suggest backstage at the opera house. Where a long run was contemplated, such a heavy investment was comparatively cheap when spread over the weeks.

Two Million Teasers for Iron Horse in Paris

Two Million Teasers For The Iron Horse

Before Paris was officially told about The Iron Horse, two million fake railway tickets were distributed bearing for text: "Railway of the Grand Boulevard. The Iron Horse." There was not a line about the house or even a suggestion that this was a picture. They were distributed at railroad and subway stations by men dressed as porters.

By the time everyone was asking what it was all about came the news that it was a great American motion picture to be seen at the Cameo Theatre, presently.

Meantime the lobby was rigged up to give a railroad suggestion with a "booking office." You don't buy railroad tickets in Europe. You "book" your passage, which means buying a ticket just the same.

The elaborate banner showed the Jupiter in profile with soldiers shooting at the Indians. It was not a painting, but a tableau in cutout.

At the rear of the lobby Indians from the lithographs made a frieze for the title, which was in both English and French.

And thirty-five legitimate theatres used the trailers during the entr'actes, which is an achievement that will need a lot to beat.

Hotel signs, window cards and form letters to American and English residents helped the Cameo to break every record made since the house opened in 1907.

George J. Schade put over Her Sister From Paris with hat boxes. He made half a dozen out of packing cases covered with fancy wall paper of striking design and piled them in the lobby labeled for the Constance Talmadge story. The suggetion of Paris finery was a powerful puller with the women.

DETAILS OF THE CAMPAIGN ON THE "IRON HORSE" F ROM THE CAMEO THEATRE, PARIS

The top line shows a special painted board, the street barri cade signs and the ticket office. In the centre are a frieze of Indians in the lobby and the lobby itself. It made a wonderful advance.

Illustrated Teasers Help to Sell Iron Horse

A Universal Release

TWO CARS CARRIED THE BANNER FOR CALIFORNIA

The Liberty Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, found it just as easy to borrow two cars as one, so the first arrow said to "See Reginald Denny in 'California Straight Ahead'" on the second pointer.

Illustrated Teasers Help The Iron Horse

Using a teaser idea invented for a Broadway drama attraction and later used for Beggar on Horseback, the Oliver Theatre, South Bend, Ind., built up on the idea by adding cuts.

The original merely introduced the characters in a series of advertisements. The Oliver added character cuts of the various players in the Iron Horse, but used blanks for the title.

A sample advertisement shows a picture of George O'Brien in his buckskins and the copy reads: "Here is Dave Brandon—our hero. He is not a sheik, not a caveman, not a lounge lizard. He's just the type of rugged young American manhood in The ————. He will be a sensation after November 29. To be continued."

One by one the other characters were introduced until it was time for the regular display advertising to break out, by which time the town was pretty well interested, though it could form a shrewd guess. If you have the time, and space is not too costly, this is a capital idea.

Used a Panorama

D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., knows the value of motion, and for The Pony Express he put up a fine display.

He used a compo board mail bag with a glass window. A few inches back of the glass he placed the cutout figure of a rider, with sand and pebble "rocks" between him and the glass. Back of the rider a western background, painted on a wheel, was revolved to give the effect of a rider speeding across a landscape. It was not quite as effective a a belt panorama would have been, but was much easier to build and operate, and it got the idea over.

Good Kids Free

Putting over the educational angle of the Adventure Serial, Ace of Spades, dealing with the Oklahoma land rush, the Doan Theatre, Cleveland, gave a ticket each week to the child having the best standing for the week in each class in six grade schools within the theatre's territory. The rest of the children went just to show they didn't have to have tickets given them.

For street work men with ace of spades shaped sandwich boards paraded the streets and peddled bills. A five and ten cent store made a window of playing cards to hook in

Got Big Crowd in Face of Opposition

Nothing pulls business away from a theatre as strongly as does the opposition of some local event, and a church affair is about the worst form of local opposition.

Irving L. Liner of the Yorke theatre, in the Bronx, was up against a minstrel show and concert by a Catholic church in his neighborhood Armistice Day. He draws a large proportion of his patrons from the members of this church, and it looked as though his bookings on Havoc would give him a practical illustration of the meaning of the title.

He knew that to try and draw his Catholic patrons away from their own affair would be hurtful, even were he to succeed, so he decided to drive on the general public to get them to take the place of his regulars and perhaps become regulars themselves.

He tied the local post of Veterans of Foreign Wars to the observance of Armistic Day on his stage, and obtained the loan of a number of interesting relics for a lobby display. He used the "if this were a bomb" cards, which usually have been distributed from airplanes, throwing them from the elevated trains and rooftops, with about the same effect.

Gold Star Mothers and uniformed men were on the free list and yet the cash business was well above the Wednesday average.

And for a final clean-up he took his patriotic prologue over to the hall where the minstrel show was being held and staged it for the benefit of his opposition, which assuredly will not hurt future business.

He made only one mistake. He did not hold the picture for a second day.

A POOR CUT ON A SPLENDID FRONT FROM DENVER

How H. M. Addison Varies His Audience Appeal

Pies and Ponies a Help in Binghamton

H. M. Addison, of the Binghamton, (N. Y.) Theatres Co., has his eye out for novelties to help pack in and he picked up a good pair lately.

He had a troupe of trained ponies as one of his vaudeville acts and after the matinee the ponies held a reception on the stage when each kiddie was given a lollipop and a ride on a real horse actor. It was not easy to tell which was the more appreciated.

A bigger idea was a special night for the band of the local hotels. The organization had been out on tour and a special night not only gave Mr. Addison a one-night attraction, but it helped the hotel to give emphasis to the fact that its music was back.

They were the features of a special show lasting an hour and twenty minutes which included an afterpiece staged by the vaudeville bill and a number of acts by local talent, winding up with a pie-eating contest that was a knockout.

Putting on a special every couple of weeks gives the regular patrons a feeling that they must not miss any of the bills and holds the business up right along. And Mr. Addison is so full of ideas that he seldom has a repeat.

A PHOTOGRAPHIC LOAN EXHIBIT OF PONY EXPRESS DAYS

For the showing at the Liberty Theatre, Portland, Paul E. Noble borrowed photographs from the Oregon Historical Society and made a very interesting foyer display. The Governor was induced to sponsor an express ride from Salem to Portland.

Local Stuff

Rains caused a cave-in at Birmingham, Ala., and of course the hole was roped off to keep the curious crowds from danger. Rodney Bush, of the Galax Theatre, obtained police permission to post on the ropes banners reading: "Danger! The best People will stay behind these ropes. See the Sidney Olcott production at the Galax Theatre." He also generously carded the approaches to the scene of the disaster, knowing that the newspaper accounts would bring thousands of curious to the scene.

It was simple, but it pushed the receipts away up.

In Miniature

A miniature compoboard theatre exterior with a miniature display for Stage Struck was Frank J. Miller's way of batting over the Swanson comedy at the Modjeska theatre, Augusta, Ga.

It won the attention all miniatures command and backed up the standard campaign plus four window showings

We are still waiting to hear from the manager who put on an opportunity night for this title. It fits Stage Struck like a tailored suit.

Four Merry Widows

Using the Raffles idea as the backbone of an unusually heavy campaign on The Merry Widow, the State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., found a new angle on this ancient standby.

It ran the contest for four days, with a new "Widow" each day, and the Times, which sponsored the stunt, gave more than twenty columns of good reading to the adventures of the widows.

The paper was hooked in with a double truck for each of the four days in which the cooperating merchants advertised that the widow would be in their stores at specified hours. The house space on the double was given to the fact that New Yorkers were gladly paying $2.20 to see the same picture at the Embassy.

In Wilmington, N. C., there was but one widow, but her value was increased two dollars each day, and after the stunts had turned the town upside down the merchants kicked in with offers of $5 should the widow be captured in front of a store. As a result the picture did a turnaway business at the Royal. It would seem that the widow was held back until the last day to make the stunt last.

BARKING THEM IN TO SEE SALLY OF THE SAWDUST

Pat McGee, of the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, used a man dressed to suggest W. C. Fields. Provided with a sideshow stand the man "lectured" on the production two hours each afternoon and evening. The idea sold the story.

Practical Work

Helping put over the Christmas Seals of the Red Cross, the Grand Theatre, Akron, Ohio, offered to supply the attraction for the main selling station. Two spare machines were sent over and comedies, news reels and a dated trailer for the Iron Horse attracted the crowd to which the workers sold stamps. It not only made good will but created immediate business.

A Dancing Pair Is The Merry Widow's Trade Mark

Dancing Couple is Widow Trademark

Most theatres seem to use this cut for their work on The Merry Widow, possibly because the Merry Widow waltz is even better known than the operetta. It is sound practice, for nothing can carry over the idea better. and the pose itself is excellent. Loew's Columbia Theatre, Washington, D. C., handles this very well, both in the selection of the cut and in the copy, though too much is said about the present run at the Embassy here and not enough about the operetta itself, though the latter made theatrical history in that it set back upon the stage for a time this form of offering. It we were writing copy for this play we should stress the wonderfully fine production even over the New York run. You can't sell them Embassy seats, but you can sell your patrons the idea that here is a picture that is one of the outstanding hits of the season in the matter of gorgeous staging and striking story. What you can deliver is a better sales argument than what is happening in New York, though the latter is not to be overlooked. The really important fact is that you are offering one of the season's winners and in your own theatre.

Has Too Much Talk For Harold Lloyd

Starting in on a second week of The Freshman, the New Theatre, Baltimore, uses about nine times as much talk as should be required for the opening week and nineteen times too much for a hold over. The opening week carried about half as much copy, but for the hold-over, when "second week" is about all that should be necessary, it took whole bunches of words to tell about broken records and continuous turnaway. Probably that was all local history by the end of the first week, and all that is required is the announcement that will capitalize this talk with the hold over and the fact that the second is the final week. The lower bank is the "He was welcome" copy that was used the first week. Just the name and the title will sell a Lloyd picture. You don't have to tell all about the plot. But there is a good idea tacked down in the left hand corner where the nights are assigned to Freshman, Juniors, Sophomores, Co-Eds and Seniors, one night to each, which leaves Saturday free for the general appeal. It doesn't really mean anything, but it sounds interesting, and that is what helps. There is also a good line at the top in "They laughed going in! They laughed coming out! Then they went home and laughed all night!" It really isn't a bit necessary, but it's good copy if you feel you need some.

Regular Design For Daily Ads

Apparently the Pantheon Theatre, Toledo, is trying to standardize the week-day displays to give a trade-mark form. These two advertisements are very similar, and if the form is persisted in, this layout will suggest the Pantheon even before the eye begins to read. If this is carried over a long period the form becomes almost as valuable as the text. You think of the Pantheon when you see the style, and if you are looking for the Pantheon announcement, you can find it with the least effort. Much is to be said for a change of pace, and we believe that change is better for the big opening displays, but for the running announcement through the week we like better a standard form, and the smaller the space the more important does this standardization become.

Pittsburgh Uses a Don Q. Cartoon

This cartoon of Don Q. has been made the basis of a number of capital displays for Fairbanks. This particular one comes from Loew's Aldine theatre, Pittsburgh, and it is almost as good as the one Malaney used in Cleveland. It is a very useful design, and one of the best things from the United Artists press book, and those books generally include useful art material. Seven shows are ground on the day, with an atmospheric prologue and the news reel, and the public is urged to come to the early shows and avoid the rush. The cartoon dominates the space, but the title is a trifle crowded. It does not matter much, for it will get over, once the cartoon is seen.

Grey Cut is Not Holding Its Own

In this space from the Temple theatre, Toledo, we think the use of the half tone cut weakens the display. The clean cut comedy sketch below is so much stronger that the halftone merely serves to interfere with the title. The cameraman in the lower corner has nothing to do with Bobbed Hair. That is the announcement that the interior scenes for a local play will be made on the stage. The best selling is done with a strong cut, and strength will sell better than weak halftones, no matter who the stars may be. If halftones are used, the remainder of the space should be kept light to let them show up properly, particularly in towns where the average presswork gives a light impression. Toledo runs to light presswork and as a result the haltones are grey rather than black unless they mud up and get all black. In such a condition, it is that part of wisdom to drop the screen work and go in for line, which can be made to show up properly. It is not possible to give exact values in reproductions, for the better press work will pull the cut up, but in the original the cut is faint and rather messy looking and by no means a selling aid. The best display comes from that top line, and that does not mean much, since it has been used on other pictures.

Thank You Circles Help to Exhibitors

Sometimes it happens that a little cut works better than the larger ones, and about the most useful single piece of advertising that the Fox office has put out in some time is the circular cut for Thank You. It's a little too late to be talking about election stunts, but one of these cuts shows how A. S. Rittenberg got a whoop the day after election. There had been a warm contest in New Jersey, the prohibition issue largely replacing the old party lines. Mr. Rittenberg had this set up with a blank line to be filled in with the name of the winning candidate when the vote should come in, and no matter which won he was able to capitalize the interest in a more than usually exciting contest for the Fulton Theatre. In his effort to get the smaller lines out of the way to achieve the "Governor Elect A. Harry Moore Says Thank You. The management of the Fulton says 'You're welcome,'" the small lines are made a little too small. They could have run in eight point Roman without spoiling the effect. The second example shows a use that will be available at any season. This and similar copy can be worked for any house at any time.

The main point is to hold the circle prominent by not overplaying the other lines. Recently George E. Planck spoke of his circular signatures that would work anywhere in a space. This is the same idea. The electro can be dropped into the space anywhere and it will fit. It does not have to be squared with the side rules or centred or anything. It looks well anywhere inside the space. It will fit top, bottom, corners or in the middle, and it will look well and sell the title wherever it is used. Probably this one cut has made more money for exhibitors than all the rest of the cuts on this title put together. Mr. Rittenberg has made exceptionally good use of the material, and you cannot do better than to follow his line. It can be used to work in a general space, but it is better for trick stuff, such as this.

Uses Tom's Stetson for Big Attractor

This section of the advertisement of the Rowland and Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, uses Tom Mix's sombrero for the attractor, working in some small riding figures on the rim. The space is only a two fours and there is not much room for cut, so the artist has put over the idea of a Western very effectively. We do not like the excess of hand lettering, but the main idea is good. In many sections a sombrero has been used as the basis for a window display. Not many stores stock these wide brims, but if you can get one, you can repeat this cut with toy riders on the brim of a real hat and make the display doubly attractive. The small leaden Indians of the tin soldier tye are available and perhaps you can find cowboys at the toy store as well. Sprigs of fir can be stuck into the hat band to give a backing and you can make a display that will draw people up to the window. In many sections Mix needs no other advertisement than the mention of his name, but even here a little extra exploitation will not hurt your sales and may create a few new fans.

F. B. O.

ALL AROUND FRYING PAN. Star, Fred Thomson. This isn't a bad picture, but I have seen a lot better of him. F. B. O. doesn't seem to get this fellow into action anywhere. Horse good. Tone and appeal, good. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats). Piqua, Ohio.

AMERICAN MANNERS. (5,200 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. First picture from this star and seemed to please many. Part of show was supposed to be funny, and fell flat. Smuggling scenes were appreciated by some and strong arm stuff by others. Will do if you have nothing better. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. A story that could do a great deal of good to the people of America if it were taken seriously. Has to do with crime and reform through the medium of child rearing and the conditions of the home. Should go across well. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 15-20. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ISLE OF HOPE. (5,500 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Not nearly as good as some of Dick's earlier ones. Seems to have been made in a hurry. Photography was fine, though, and the actors did well in the parts assigned to them. While it was entertaining in its way, it can't be compared with Dick's others. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LAST EDITION. Star, Ralph Lewis. Another Emory Johnson success. A good story built around a large city newspaper. The fire scene is very spectacular. Drew good crowd. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Very good appeal. Steady class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

LET'S GO GALLAGHER. Star, Tom Tyler. Tom is a new one to me, but if he keeps up the pace set in this picture, he goes on my Western star list. The boy, his pony and the dog put the comedy kicks in it, and was enjoyed by all. Good appeal. Steady class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre, Port Orchard, Washington.

NO MAN'S LAW. Star, Bob Custer. An A-1 western picture. Bob without a doubt a coming western star. Great for kiddies. Footage is short. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Working class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

PARISIAN NIGHTS. (6,278 seats). Star, Elaine Hammerstein. A very good picture that seemed to please our patrons. We ran it two days, but don't think it would hold well for more. Sunday and special, no. Good appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

WYOMING WILDCAT. (5,150 feet). Star, Tom Tyler. A good western and will win more friends for this new star. He's a good bet and will please wherever good westerns are popular. Good appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admisison 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

HER SISTER FROM PARIS. (7,250 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. This is the best picture she has made. Very clever comedy. Constance is a good bet. Will go over fine where you depend on town trade. Tone, okay. Sunday, doubtful. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

First National

HIS SUPREME MOMENT. (6,565 feet). Star, Ronald Coleman. A wonderful love story well told. Blanche Sweet very good in this one. A good program picture but not a special. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-eight per cent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

HUNTRESS. (6,236 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Very good entertainment, although it is not a big picture by any means. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Small town class town of 350. Admission 10-35. Nelson & Ottem, Rex Theatre (140 seats), Osnabrock, North Dakota.

I WANT MY MAN. (6,174 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Ran this Thanksgiving. Made a very poor picture, which failed to please. Very draggy. Poorest picture with Sills I ever had. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admisison 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

KNOCKOUT. Star, Milton Sills. A knockout in every way. Sills very good in this one. Boost it to the top of the world and you'll never regret it. Tone, fine. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania

LIVE WIRE. (7,000 feet). Star, Johnny Hines. Very good and pleased them all, fine for your Saturday program. Small town patronage. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

LOST WORLD. (9,700 feet). Star cast. A truly big picture. Marvelous photography, interesting story. Has power at the box office. Tone, excellent. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Farmers and small town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

ONLY WOMAN. (6,700 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. A fine picture. For some unknown reason the patronage was disappointing on this one, but all who were present were loud in their praise, and some said it was better than "Smilin' Through." Fine direction, excellent acting, good photography and a stormy sea scene that made 'em grab their seats. Play it, fellows, it's all there with the entertainment stuff. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admisison 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SUNDOWN. (9 reels). Star, Bessie Love. This is another one of First National's big pictures and went over in fine shape. Everyone was well pleased and comments were good. Don't be afraid to buy this one as you can't go wrong if you get behind it and advertise. Box office receipts were very satisfactory. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. One hundred per cent. appeal. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre, (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

WE MODERNS. (6,609 ft.). Star, Colleen Moore. We used an orchestra on this and packed 'em in, everyone pleased with the picture, though it contained but one short thrill but the necessary punch was there to put it over. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Mixed class town of 1,400. Admission 10-30. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

WHAT FOOLS MEN. (7,140 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Mr. Stone well liked here. This picture pleased those that saw it. You can't go wrong on First National. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

Fox

AS NO MAN HAS LOVED. Star, Pauline Starke. A fine patriotic picture. Did not draw on account of bad weather. Those who saw it praised it. Ran it two days and lost money. Tone, excellent. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Rural class town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

Epler, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Hamburg, Pennsylvania.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star, Ralph Lewis. Print was somewhat mussy and some of the scenes and subtitles were short, but this picture pleased the few who came out. A good lesson is taught by this picture, and it holds the interest well. We advertised it well in advance by teaser slides announcing that we would give the town hell in a few days. A spectacular picture with little or no plot. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

HAVOC. (9,283 ft.). Star, George O'Brien. A big picture and it's good but possibly too much war for the average fan. Poor title for small towns. Business poor on this. Tone good. Sunday, maybe. Not hardly suitable for a special. Poor appeal. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

HAVOC. One of those long tiresome worn out war stories that has been played to death. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

IRON HORSE. My opinion the best picture this season. Can't go too strong with this one. Pleases 100 per cent. Jake Jones, Cozy Theatre, Shawnee, Oklahoma.

IRON HORSE. Star, George O'Brien. Why waste words? Any exhibitor that can book this picture and doesn't, is turning away sure money. Numerous people called it the best picture that played in the town since birth. Tone, O. K. Sunday and special, yes. 99 per cent. appeal. Draw working class, town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre, (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

KENTUCKY PRIDE. Star cast. An equine melodrama built on the pathetic career of a broken down race horse who tells her own story and who lives to see her colt win the Derby. A most unique plot, strong in sympathetic scenes, thrills galore and great racing shots. Henry B. Walthall as the Kentucky horseman and J. Farrell MacDonald as his trainer are perfect in their roles. Don't overlook this one. Draw from tourist town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A bang up western that you can go the limit on. Fine scenery. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

RIDERS OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 ft.). Star, Tom Mix. An extra good western that did better than usual business but people objected to the serial type ending. Would advise the use of the sequel, "The Rainbow Trail" pretty close to it to overcome this dissatisfaction as much as possible. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

THAT FRENCH LADY. (5,126). Star, Shirley Mason. Very clever picture. Good action and good story. Dandy good program picture. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

WAGES FOR WIVES. (6,600 feet). Star cast. A fine drama of home life that portrays our happy moments as well as our family conflicts. Their elements and their characters are so well handled that they reach out to your family and mine, likewise to your patrons and their trials and their happiness. Dan Maron plays the part of the good Samaritan and is instrumental in bringing the three families back to happiness. A production that should please in big or small town, as it has that element of home appeal which is bound to exist throughout mankind, as it contains all that is necessary to please a high percentage, for that is exactly what it did for me. Taken from Golden's stage play, "Chickenfeed." Print new. Tone, extra good. Special, no. Good appeal. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit, Union, Maine.

MACK SENNETT BATHING BEAUTIES who are added attractions in many of the comedies made by this famous producer for Pathe.

Metro-Goldwyn

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Alice Terry. A picture of the Orient with fine photographic effects. It's a sheik story and the plot hinges on the impending massacre of Christians by the Mohammedans. Of course, Ramon Novarro nips the tragedy in the bud and saves fair Alice Terry and her father, the missionary, from an awful fate. A Rex Ingram picture splendidly acted, enuf sed. Tourist town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

EAGLE'S FEATHER. (6.500 ft.). Star, cast. This had plenty of entertainment. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 80 per cent. Oil field class and farmers town of 700. Admission, 10-25. G. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (300 seats), Wyoming, Oklahoma.

GREAT DIVIDE. (7,811 feet). Star, Alice Terry. "The Great Divide" is great. This is a picture that will please any audience. We lost money account high rental, but we were pleased because it's the kind of picture that wins patrons and makes them come on your side of the street, and come in again. Tone, good. Probably suitable for Sunday. Special, yes. Big appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

GREED. (10,067). Lay off this one It's a sure lemon. In the first place it is in ten reels when five would have been plenty. Didn't have much of a crowd the night I ran it and I am thankful. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. 65 per cent appeal. Draw all classes, town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre, (225 seats) Onida, South Dakota.

MAN LIFE PASSED BY. (6,208 ft.). Star, Hobart Bosworth. Good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, 98 per cent. Oil field class and farmers town of 700. Admission 10-25. G. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (300 seats), Wyoming, Oklahoma.

MERRY WIDOW. Star, Murray-Gilbert. I cannot enthuse over this like some of our critics. Very fine production all right—but nothing extra special as I can see, and it did not register at the box office for me. It may clean up in the big spots, but I don't think it will in the smaller places. I lost some good dough on this one. The print I had—which was new—was very dark, and the duel scene at the close was just about the rottenest dim photography ever. It may be that this dimness was intended so to represent early dawn—if so they should subtitle this fact, as all my patrons blamed my operator, one case where real art and practicability does not congeal. Early sub-titles were also pruned to the limit, no doubt, caused by boiling it down to exhibition length. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

MERRY WIDOW. (10 reels). Star, Mae Murray. A fine picture. The best thing Mae Murray has done. John Gilbert is the Prince, and some Prince at that! We played this at a forty cents admission over our regular twenty-five cent standard, and didn't hear a complaint from anyone. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Big appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498). This is wonderful, boys. Don't fail to step on this one. It's great. G. A. Peterson, Cozy Theatre, (502 seats), Hollis, Oklahoma.

MIDSHIPMAN. (7,498). Four days to big business. A great show that will please everyone. Don't be afraid to boost it. Draw general class, town 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

MILE-A-MINUTE-MARY. Star, Eleanor Boardman. This is good entertainment, plenty of action; thrills, cave-man stuff and big avalanche. Pleased all who saw it. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, Peoples Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

MONSTER, THE. (6,435). Star, Lou Chaney. Another one of Chaney's mystery shows. The kind that is liable to cause you to have a nightmare. A good show. Tone, good. Sunday, optional. 85 per cent. appeal. Draw all classes, town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (seats 225), Onida, South Dakota.

MONSTER, THE. (6,435). Star, L. Chaney. If your patrons like melodrama and something "spooky," this is a good one. Lou Chaney is a wonder in a class by himself. Draw all classes, town of less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

MONSTER. (6,435 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Very poor story and the ladies could not stand it. A big mystery picture that fails to please. Chaney's characterization fine. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

RAG MAN. (5,908 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Jackie's at his best. Patrons well satisfied, as was box office. Joseph Schubert, Jr., Columbia Theatre, Buffalo, New York.

UNHOLY THREE. (7,000). Star, Chaney. Great picture. Pleased all. Sunday, no. Special, yes. 90 per cent. appeal. Draw factory and farmers, town of 5,000. Admission 10-20-30. G. J. Kamm, Grand Theatre, (800 seats) Ephrata, Pennsylvania.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,600). Good picture. Worth seeing. Tone, good. Sunday, yes.

Special, no. Fair appeal. Draw farmers and merchants, town about 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ZANDER THE GREAT. (6,844 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Fair picture, but had some walk out. Small town patronage. Wm. Wiske, Community Theatre, Ridgranite, Wisconsin.

Paramount

AIR MAIL. (6,976 ft.). Star cast. Very good. Plenty of action and audience complimented on it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fine appeal. Farmers town of 412. Admission 10-25. J. C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium, Benoit, Mississippi.

MAN MUST LIVE, A. (6,116). Star, Richard Dix. A picture of average quality, but entertaining, nevertheless; story full of pathos, well produced. Dix puts up quite an argument in this one for approbation of the audience, and gets it. C. S. Musser, Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,906 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A James Oliver Curwood that will get the business, especially when outdoor pictures are liked. A very fine picture with good scenery. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,506 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A James Oliver Curwood story made in a genuine small town picture. No jazz or hot stuff. A rousing outdoor picture with lots of action. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. Star, Jack Holt. Jack Holt always draws them in. Here's a mighty fine production, one that will stand up and you can face them when they come out. Fine for Saturdays in small towns. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

ANCIENT HIGHWAY. (7,506 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good story, pleased the patrons. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, yes. Farmers and merchants town of 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045). Star, A. Moreno. Action! Those wanting a strong Western will do well to book it. Tone, good. No for Sunday and as special. Appeal 70 per cent. Draw farmers and small town oil field, town about 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

MAN WHO FOUND HIMSELF. Star, Thomas Meighan. The poorest Meighan to date. Why don't they give him some real stories? He is slipping terribly here. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. No appeal. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

MISS BLUEBEARD. (6,453 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This picture sure was well received. Paramount certainly is putting out good pictures and the price is in reach of the small exhibitor. Boost this one. Sure to please. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farming class town of 1,000. Admission 20-35. R. P. Monahan, Grantsville Theatre (250 seats), Grantsville, West Virginia.

NEW BROOMS. (5,443 feet). Star cast. This is a very clever little program picture that will sure please everyone of the elderly men who have boys. It tickles their ribs. But I lost good money on this. Tone and appeal, good. Town and rural class is small town. Admission 10-25. E. F. Keith, Strand Theatre (300 seats), Granbury, Texas.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,721 feet). Star, Richard Dix. A very good picture and sure is interesting from start to finish. Good appeal. Mixed class town of 800. Admission 15-25. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (280 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

ALLENE RAY

Patheserial star, wearing a "Laugh Month" smile. Miss Ray is now in California on a vacation between pictures.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741). Star, Raymond Griffith. This one will make anyone laugh. A very clever comedy-thriller. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. 100 per cent. appeal. Draw all classes, town of less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

PATHS TO PARADISE. (6,741 ft.). Star, Raymond Griffith. This is very interesting. Griffith does some good acting in this. Pleased 90 per cent. A detective story with comedy incidents. It is good, clean entertainment, quite exciting at times and shows some good airplane stunts. Draw all classes, town of less than 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre, (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,929 feet). Star cast. This is a long way from being another "Covered Wagon." Why do they always compare every big picture with the "Wagon?" They will insist on doing it. However, a very good attraction if bought right. Tone and appeal, okay. Sunday and special, yes. General class town of 5,000. Admission 15-35. C. A. Anderson, Liberty Theatre, Kalispell, Montana.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,928 ft.). Star, Ricardo Cortez. A picture that is a knockout. Appealed to all classes of patronage and everybody liked it. Many spoke of the wonderful work done by Wallace Beery. Feel it's a better picture than "The Covered Wagon." Exploited unusually heavy, especially in the newspaper. Did a good business. Cosmopolitan class town of 3,000. L. V. Hepinger, Orpheum Theatre (500 seats), Clarion, Pennsylvania.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,925 ft.). All star cast. My audience went wild over this one. Did a good business for two nights' run. Boys, this certainly is a box office getter. You can't go wrong on this one. S. D. Herron, Savoy Theatre, Nicholasville, Kentucky.

PONY EXPRESS. Star cast. Not to be compared with "Covered Wagon," but a good show of its type, of which we here have now had enough. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, yes. Good appeal. Family and student class town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

PONY EXPRESS. (9,900 ft.). Star, Betty Compson. Not another "Covered Wagon" but one of the best westerns that has been offered for a year. Special, yes. A. Entwisle, Princess Theatre, Edmonton, Altoona.

RUGGED WATERS. (6,015 ft.). Star, Lois Wilson. This one disappointed me. It is too dead, very little action. Will pass as an average program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 25-35. T. L. Barnett, Finn's Theatre (600 seats), Jewett City, Connecticut

SALOME OF THE TENEMENTS. (7,017 feet). Star cast. Get it? You bet. It's a dramatic story of a child of the ghetto who works for the uplifting of her race. Jetta Goudal portrays a fine role, and the other characters are cast from real Yiddish players taken from Gotham's East Side, and are true to life. Not everyone will like this production, but it's far and away above the average play in entertainment and merit. Draw from tourist town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. (6,084 ft.). Star, Douglas McLean. An extra good comedy. Everybody liked it. It is easy to advertise. Didn't have a Yale lock in it and I did not advertise them. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SEVEN KEYS TO BALDPATE. Star, Douglas McLean. Pleased the patrons. Clever story and good acting. Tone, good. Yes for Sunday and special. Appeal, good. Draw farmers and merchants, town about 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 ft.). Star, Richard Dix. This is one of the best pictures I ever ran with this star. Dix is fast becoming a real box office bet. A very good show of clean entertainment. Tone, very good. Sunday, yes. Appeal, ninety percent. All classes town of 600. Admission 10-30. A. F. Schriever, Onida Theatre (225 seats), Onida, South Dakota.

SON OF HIS FATHER. (7 reels). Star cast. An extra good, refined western. People liked it fine. No knocks at all and lots of compliments. Business good on it. Paper good. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. Town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

STREET IF FORGOTTEN MEN. Star cast. Did not go over with my patrons. Underworld stories do not meet with favor. Acting good. Appeal, poor. Tone, fair. E. C. Silverthorn, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Harrisville, Michigan.

STRANGER. (6,660 feet). Star, Richard Dix. One of the very best program pictures we have run in a long time. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. Like all that has gone before it is a big wonderful thing, I am playing it for six days, four of which are gone, the present indication is that it will not overburden me with care as I have not reached near the expense line yet. Twenty-five and fifty cents is quite some obstacle to scale at present, as money is not as flush as at some times. If you can buy it right and run for twenty-five and thirty-five cents think it would bring larger houses. General class town of 1,200. E. N. Prescott, Prescott Circuit (250 seats), Union, Maine.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Here is a mighty good picture with the Buffalo scenes it gives a picture that is different and is very interesting. Tone and appeal, good. Special, yes. Rural class town of 700. Admission 10-25. W. C. Whiting, Opera House (250 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

TO THE LADIES. (6,268 feet). Star cast. Very good program picture. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre, La Belle, Missouri.

TROUBLE WITH WIVES. (6,489 ft.) Star, Tom Moore. This picture will surprise you as it is very clever. There is not a dull moment and the comedy situations are delightful. The cast is excellent. Patrons enjoy it. Cosmopolitan class town of 3,000. L. V. Hepinger, Orpheum Theatre (500 seats), Clarion, Pennsylvenia.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An excellent western good for any day in the week, but would have been better without the technicolor process. Tone, fine. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft.). Star, Jack Holt. Have noticed several adverse reports on this picture but my town thought it great. Had lots of compliments; no knocks. Business was better than average but did not increase enough to justify the additional rental I had to pay. All classes in small town. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

WILD HORSE MESA. (7,164 ft.). Star, Jack Holt. This pleased my people very much, and the word-of-mouth advertising brought us more business on the second than on the first day. Tone, good. Very good appeal. Farming and dairy class town of 1,750. Admission 10-30. E. W. Fischer, Rialto Theatre (500 seats), Oakdale, California.

Pathe

FRESHMAN. (7 reels).. Star, Harold Lloyd. Lloyd's latest picture and his best one. Buy this picture and get behind it with lots of advertising and you can make a little money. Had a capacity house first night, not quite so many second night. Went over with a "bang," and box office receipts were very satisfactory. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

BEAUTY AND THE BAD MAN. Star cast, Russell Simpson steals the picture. Will please the old-timers, but fall flat with younger people. Tone, okay. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Working class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

HELL'S HIGHROAD. My own fault I didn't clean up with this one. It's a showman's picture. Boost it and smile. Ken E. Finlay, Opera House, Goldsboro, North Carolina.

HER MARKET VALUE. (Star, Agnes Ayres). Just another picture and not a very good one at that. Not for the small towns. Very poorly directed. Special, no. Small appeal. Draw working class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

MARION DAVIES

The beautiful Cosmopolitan-Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star is seen here in the skiing costume which she wears in "Beverly of Graustark," a Cosmopolitan production, now being filmed at the M.-G.-M. studios.

SEVEN DAYS. Star, Lillian Rich. Very nifty show, plenty of comedy, but gets silly at times; anyhow, if that's what they like, why should we kick? Sunday, no. Special, no. Very good appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Raymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

SIMON THE JESTER. Star, Lillian Rich. Fellows, here's a good one. Will please any audience. Producers Distributing Corporation is delivering the goods. Who said they wasn't? Don't misunderstand us and think this is a big picture, it isn't, but it's good and will please. Sunday and special, no. Very good appeal. Student and mixed class town of 4,500. Admission 10-25. Haymond Cleveland, Lyric Theatre (500 seats), Lebanon, Tennessee.

SOFT SHOES. Star, Harry Carey. Stromberg could have made a fairly decent picture here if only he would have put more force behind the parts that supplied the action—the action parts too weak, which makes picture very poor. Tone, fair. Special, no. 70 per cent. appeal. Draw factory class. Admission 15-25. D. W. Straver, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

TEXAS TRAIL. (5 reels). Good—short and interesting. Comedy situations very good. Favorable comments. H. K. Allen, Queen Theatre, Fort Stockton, Texas.

TIGER-THOMPSON. (5,700). Star, Harry Carey. Good western. Ran this on Wednesday and had a good crowd. Edward Casey, Casey's Theatre, Sterling, Oklahoma.

United Artists

GOLD RUSH. Star, Charlie Chaplin. This made a lot of money for the United Atrists people. We bought it with both eyes wide open, and are not going to holler, but we lacked a lot of making a dime. First day, good; second day, rotten; third day, please close the door, the wind blows in and that's all. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

THIEF OF BAGDAD. Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Played two days to poor business here, due to our patronage not liking this type of show. It was a wonderful show and was liked by our small elite patronage. Tone, good. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Draw better class, town about 4,500. Admission 20-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

TUMBLEWEEDS. Star, William S. Hart. In our opinion is by far the best picture of the year. Not only is it bigger than any of the other so-called "big" pictures, but it has a story really worth while. This picture seems to have been made special for Oklahoma. I am holding it over. It is a wow of a success. The first picture that is, is the opinion of all who see it. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

Universal

BUTTERFLY. (7,472 ft.). Star cast. Nothing to it, little comedy in it that is fair, but if Universal makes many of these kind of features they won't sell many new ones. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

DARING CHANCES. (5 reels). Star, Jack Hoxie. Like the rest pleased about 75 per cent. Business poor. A. Cataland, Victory Theatre, Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

DON DAREDEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. Mix a Mexican territory with Hoxie and sprinkle in a senorita and add the Universal ranch riders and you'll have boarding house hash. At least that's what our crowd thinks about it. A very conventional film with no big scenes. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman. Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtowr. Pennsylvania.

FAST WORKER. (6,500). Star, R. Denny. This is the third one of this star. Rental too high to realize profit. Good picture but not worth what they charged for it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

GAYETY GIRL. (7,417). Star, Mary Philbin. Very good entertainment. Rather long. Some few walked out but others said good. Tone, good, Sunday and special, yes. Fair appeal. Draw small town and farmers, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30, 25-50. H. D. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MAN IN BLUE. (5,624 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson Good program picture. Seventy per cent. appeal. Thrilling scrap in the climax. Print good. L. L. Like, Dreamland Theatre, Drummond, Montana.

MEASURE OF A MAN. Star, William Desmond. A very good program western picture that you do not need to be afraid of. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odolphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

SUNSET TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. Just a fair program picture. Tone, okay. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Farmers and small town class town of 600. Admission 10-25. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre (200 seats), Natoma, Kansas.

TEASER. (6,300). Star, Laura LaPlante. Say, boys, take off your coat and throw your hat away; go out and holler your head off about this one; acting exceptionally good by entire cast; story gets right next to one's heart; full of comedy of the kind that tickles your last rib; leading lady is a humdinger, full of pep and can chew gum to beat the band; nevertheless she is cute, attractive, and since Webster hasn't any word to properly describe her, we will just say she is a peach; will "tease" the fellows from the front row to the last seat. Grab it, advertise it, and then watch them enjoy an evening in your house. Has appeal for any audience. Draw town of 1,000. C. S. Musser, Opera House, Shepherdstown, West Virginia.

WESTERN WALLOP. Star, Jack Hoxie. Another of those good program western pictures. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Town and country class town of 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

Vitagraph

BELOVED BRUTE. (6,710 feet). Star, Victor McLaglen. One of the best program pictures we have played this year. Good comments were heard, and one fellow pronounced it the best he'd ever seen. Fine story, excellent acting, good photography, plenty of action, perfect direction makes this a small town exhibitor's picture from start to finish. No walkouts. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Strong appeal. General class town of 1,000. Admission 10-25, 15-35. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

RANGER OF THE BIG PINES. (7,032 feet). Star, Kenneth Harlan. A good attraction for a small town. Played this on a Saturday and packed them in. Miss Jensen certainly plays her part well. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday and special, no. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Warner Bros.

ON THIN ICE. Star, Tom Moore. One of the best Warners we have shown. Pleased everyone. Tom Moore very good. Very few Warners have been good of this group. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

TIGER ROSE. (8,000 feet). Star, Lenore Ulric. A very good picture based on the sometime popular "northwest" mounted hokum. Ulric certainly should keep to the stage, according to the people who disliked her peculiar characterization here. Not too discriminating people. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethown, Pennslyvania.

TRACKED IN THE SNOW COUNTRY. (Rin Tin Tin). It had everything a good picture should have, and pleased as well as any high priced picture ever shown in this theatre. A real audience picture, and after all it is the people we are to please, ain't it? Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WHERE THE NORTH BEGINS. Star Cast. A very fine program picture. Made good money. The dog played a fine part in the picture. Film excellent. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Oil field class and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

Independents

BROKEN HEARTS OF BROADWAY. (State 139). Star, Rin Tin Tin. The very best dog picture to date. It took us several months to get a booking on this, but it was well worth waiting for. We consider this one of the most interesting pictures we have ever shown and it keeps the audience on the edge of their seats from start to finish. The acting of Rin Tin Tin is wonderful. P. R. Matson, Crystal Theatre (436 seats) Flandreau, South Dakota.

BROKEN HEARTS OF BROADWAY. (State Right). Star cast. This is a good picture. Good enough for any house. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, 90 per cent. Oil field class and farmers, town of 700. Admission 10-25. George M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (300 seats), Wyoming, Oklahoma.

EDNA MARIAN

The beautiful star of Century Comedies, for Universal release, will be one of the outstanding personalities of "Laugh Month."

CAPTAIN JANUARY. (Principal). Star, Baby Peggy. This is a very fine picture which not only brings them in but makes good after you get them in. This kind of a picture helps business where others tear down. No mistake in booking this one. Tone, A-1. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal 100 per cent. All classes town of 1,000. Admission 10-30. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

DANGER SIGNAL. It was fast, furious, racy and rare, and nearly the whole darn town was there and they all said it sure is a wow. If you haven't booked it, go do it now. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

EASY MONEY. Just what the name implies. A dandy snappy picture. Pleases nearly all of 'em. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

FOOL AND HIS MONEY. (Columbia). Star, William Haines. A lot better picture than the title sounds. Will do for you if you want something that is a little different. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission

10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

GOLD THOUGHT. (State Right). Star, Tom Mix. A dandy picture. Made good money. Film in fine condition. Oil field class and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

HARD HITTING HAMILTON. (State Right). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. Picture was in good shape and a good western. Played to a good house. All pleased. Tone, good. Sunday and special, no. Oil field class and farmers town of 500. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

LOST IN A BIG CITY. (Progress Pictures). Star, John Lowell. (7 reels). A very good program picture and pleased the few who came out to seet it. For some reason we didn't get them out to see this one, so lost some money. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, 80 per cent. General class town of 600. Admission 10-25, 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

MAD DANCER. (State Right). Star, Ann Pennington. As poor a title as could be suggested from box-office angle. Most of the picture deals with American life, and even the Parisian atmosphere is not that of the Apache type. It is a bit different, and that is the only way you can sell it. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. All classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

QUICKER THAN LIGHTNING. (Weiss Brothers). Star, Buffalo Bill, Jr. A sure-fire western. Great for the kids. Paper is money-getting, and we stood them up on this one. This is his best so far. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Working class town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. A. M. Rosenbloom, Home Theatre (350 seats), Rochester, Pennsylvania.

RIDIN' ROMANCE. (State Right). Star, Al Hoxie. This boy is a comer, if they keep him at it and give him stories with action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SILENT STRANGER. (State Right). Star, Fred Thomson. Fine picture, but made no money. One or other cause. Film in good shape, as I find all F. B. O.'s are fine. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Oil field class town of 500. Admission 10-15. W. H. Clower, Liberty Theatre (400 seats), Wirt, Oklahoma.

SILENT PAL. (State Right). Star, Thunder (dog). This is another real dog picture. If all of the Thunder pictures are as good as this one they will be okay. Oil field class and farmers town of 700. Admission 10-25. Geo. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (300 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

SILENT PAL. (Independent). Star, Thunder (dog). This we showed on Saturday. Made a good offering. Dog pictures go over good. This is a new one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Town and country class town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (250 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

SPEED MAD. (Columbia). Star, William Fairbanks. All of his pictures are good and have plenty of action. Anybody that likes action, his is the stuff. Tone and appeal, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Working class city of 14,000. Admission 10-15. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (167 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

GAMBLIN' FOOL. (State Right). Star, Franklyn Farnum. This is a good western of the old kind. Tone, fair. Sunday and special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Oil field class and farmers town of 700. Admission 10-25. Geo. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (200 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

THE WRONG DOER. (State Right). Star, Lionel Barrymore. This is a good one founded on a real story. Tone, good. Sunday and special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Oil field class and farmers town of 700. Admission 10-25. Geo. M. Tockey, Dixie Theatre (300 seats), Wynona, Oklahoma.

A Dollar for Your Time

In an effort to make this Quick Reference Picture Chart just as accurate as human carefulness can make it, we offer to the reader who finds MAJOR ERRORS, such as a wide discrepancy between printed footage on a feature or features and that which is a fact, One Dollar for your trouble in writing us a letter stating the correct facts.

Please do not consider errors that do not actually work a hardship on the user of this Chart—such as a misplaced parenthesis, or a minor typographical error.

What we want you to point out is the often unavoidable discrepancy between the footage that comes to us at time of reviewing a picture and the time you play it, caused by cutting down of a picture and failure of producer to give us correct facts regarding the changed footage.

We cannot secure exact footage on all Short Subjects and so the general term "1,000" or "2,000" feet is applied, broadly, one or two-reel subjects. We've tried to get exact Short Subject footage, and as soon as we can get it will print it exactly. Till then, consider the broader designation as the best we can do.

When you write us about a major error, realize, please, that it will take a little time to check up, and be patient—we will not delay sending you the dollar for your trouble any longer than is absolutely compulsory.

EXTRA War Declared! EXTRA

Army Mobilizing In Devastated Print Area—Slaughter to Be Stopped—Late News

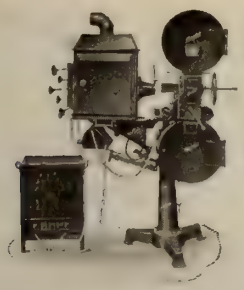
WAR has been declared on Poor Cement, Careless Patching, Bum Equipment and Fake Projector Parts by the League of Protect-the-Print exhibitors, exchangemen and projectionists.

Ruthless ravaging of the domain of the Poor, Hard-Working Print, as recently exposed through the intrepid work of YOUR EQUIPMENT has caused these powers to combine their forces and to declare a war on the senseless, terrible destruction of property and loss of patronage caused by the enemies against whom the war has been decreed.

Latest reports from the front, where the forces for Print Protection are massing, indicate that it will be only a short time before the wanton destruction will be stopped, the enemy vanquished and peace restored.

Features of Projected Campaign

With their corps of Genuine Parts, the Projector forces are preparing to eliminate the ravaging of the perforation areas, the rending of film.



These able generals have sent out a call, promptly responded to by projectionists, exhibitors and others all over the areas endangered, and it is expected that with the efficient campaign to be waged against Fake Genuine Parts, the situation on that front will be rendered most satisfactory in a very short time.

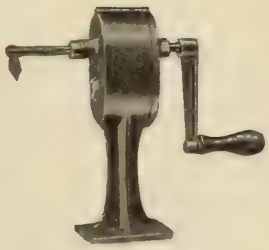
Prompt Measures Being Taken

Hardly had YOUR EQUIPMENT begun its exclusive and intimate disclosures of the damaging onslaughts of the enemy, when the forces undertaking this campaign sent out a call for volunteers to defeat the foe of the Print. Under the careful marshaling and counting of the old campaigner, Major Footage Exact the feet of the army of protection have been turned toward the great concentration points.

It is not expected that the campaign will be over-long in this sector, nor will the casualties to film forces be severe.

Expect Quick Wind-Up

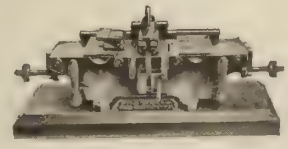
It is understood that the Rewinder Group is saving many of the refugee Prints from slaughter and that through their care and vigilance there will be a very brief campaign necessary in the Inspection areas which have not already succumbed to their efforts at protection.

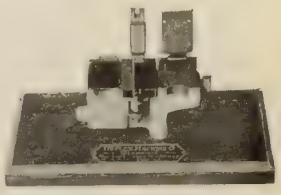


Snatching up the banner of the Army of Protection, with its slogan, "Heaven Will Protect the Working Print" they have added zest with their own battle-cry—"SO DO WE!"

Peace Soon to Be Patched Up

The torn and devastated area which has suffered the most, the Bad-Patch and Careless-Splice provinces are now occupied by General Lee Used Cement, Major Patches-Well and Colonel I. Splice-Right.





It is expected that under these able adjusters damage will quickly be repaired and peace enjoined.

Latest Extra From Exchange Front

An organized attack on the enemy in the Overhead-Worry and Improperly-Related-Splice-and-Frame-Line sectors has been made under the generalship of G. M. Spidell, who has placed in all Famous Players (Paramount) Exchanges film protection in the shape of B. & H. Film splicing machines. This is one of the most spectacularly progressive attacks yet reported on the behalf of the Poor, Hard-Working Print.

More About Educational Studio Equipment That Helps Comedies

Mr. E. H. Allen, General Manager of Educational, Completes an Interesting Chat About Studio Equipment of Merit

WITHOUT a doubt a comedy studio has more special equipment than a studio devoted to dramatic productions. A case in point is the trolleys erected to make possible some of the startling shots seen only in comedies. Automobiles, airplanes and all kinds of accessories are suspended from these trolleys and through their use some amazing comedy scenes are secured. Two of these are erected on the Education Studio grounds, one of them in the open and one against a white skybacking. This one is used when double printing is wanted.

The white sky-backing is really the back of a four-story block of dressing rooms adjoining stage No. 4. The dressing rooms themselves are completely equipped with every device for the comfort of the players.

A motor-driven panorama, distinctively a comedy necessity, is installed permanently under a roofing. Shots from moving trains, autos, etc., are made before this "pan."

A "gin-pole" or portable derrick is another equipment investment which has paid for itself repeatedly. Its value both in production and erection can not be overestimated.

Time-saving devices are always good economy. A motor driven pressure painting unit cuts down time and labor enormously.

While it can not be properly classed as "equipment," we have found that one thing contributes wonderfully to the efficiency of the organization. This is cleanliness, broken granite with which we have covered the entire lot to a depth of three inches. Rolled and packed, this provides a hard, smooth surface, easily kept clean and which does not get muddy during the rains.

Safety is another item of efficiency which has established itself as being worth the price. Every dangerous machine, saws, planers, etc., is equipped with the latest approved safety guards, protecting the workmen in every possible way against accident. Life nets are always provided when making scenes which imperil the safety of the actors. These nets are made on the lot.

Signs are erected at every corner of the grounds cautioning truck and auto drivers to be careful. While it is hard to estimate their actual worth, still we feel that if one accident is avoided through heeding these warning signs, we have made a profit on the investment.

Fire Prevention is Important Item

Of more apparent worth are the systems for fire protection throughout the studio. Every set in operation is equipped with a "fire dolly," which carries three patent extinguishers, together with a fire axe and other tools useful in emergencies. Hand extinguishers are hung at close intervals throughout all buildings, and fire plugs have just been installed in all quarters of the grounds These plugs serve a double purpose, as they are useful as "props" in many comedies.

Steel and concrete camera vaults protect the valuable photographic equipment against theft and weather. Each cameraman has a locker where he stores his motion picture and still cameras. Another compartment of the vault is used as a temporary storehouse for completed positives and unexposed raw stock.

The cutting rooms are as near fireproof as they can be made. Each director has a separate room, isolated from the others, where his production is cut and assembled. An ingenious system of racks and lights makes rapid assembly possible.

We try to provide each company on location with as many of the studio comforts and conveniences as possible. Huge busses transport actors and staff to the locations. Accompanying each unit is a property truck equipped with tools and accessories of every description, found useful in supplying the demands of comedy production. These truck bodies are divided into drawers and compartments.

The benefit derived from a well equipped plant, while in many cases intangible, is apparent in the spirit of the employees. A well equipped plant gives every one connected with it a feeling of confidence, not only in the plant itself but in themselves. This feeling is invaluable. It contributes to the quality of product more strongly than any singe factor in motion picture production. Satisfied workmen are efficient workmen, and we have always believed that good workmen deserve good tools. We know we have been enabled to make a better product through this feeling than would have been possible through the expenditure of double our production costs.

EDUCATIONAL'S DIRECTORS cut and assemble film up yonder in top left corner after using the motor-driven panorama and the props from that well-stocked prop room. Signs placed at points of slightest danger guard the personnel, as the plentiful fire extinguishers safeguard property, and don't overlook the main current generator that guarantees plenty of light when it's needed.

Advance to Come in Mechanics More Than Creative Production

Particularly in Color Photography Great Strides Can Be Expected, Is the Opinion of Director of Douglas Fairbanks' Latest

A NEW frontier is being crossed in motion picture work in color photography, according to Albert Parker who is directing Douglas Fairbanks' new all-color production, "The Black Pirate," which is now about half completed.

"Many things are being discovered which are bound to have great bearing on picture production in the future, assuming, of course, that color photography is to encroach more and more on black and white," said Mr. Parker. "Present indications are that big strides in the immediate development of picture production are to come in the mechanical end of the business, rather than in the creative departments. In 'The Black Pirate' Mr. Fairbanks has accomplished a marked stereoscopic effect in several instances, which no doubt will be but a forerunner of great development along this line."

Color Photography Coming Along

According to Mr. Parker the men who are doing the pioneering work in color and stereoscopic photography are in much the same situation as those who took part in the earlier development of black and white motion pictures. Naturally they are in for a big adventure, Parker says, as these improvements advance and become more generally in demand and more generally adopted.

"We have learned astonishing things about make-up, lighting and color values," said Mr. Parker. "These absolutely revolutionize the methods that apply to black and white camera work. We know now how to keep players with certain complexions from going green in color; what shades a foreground must carry in order to give value to the background; what kinds of color which should never be used; these and many other more baffling problems have been solved, all to the general advancement of film production."

Mr. Parker spent almost a year in research work before undertaking the direction of "The Black Pirate."

New Coolidge Theatre In Watertown, Mass. Fine 1200 Seater

THE NEW COOLIDGE Theatre at Watertown, Mass., formally was opened Monday night, December 7, with "The Freshman" as the leading attraction. The Coolidge's site is of historical significance for it is located in a Coolidge section of the city, near the Coolidge school and the old Coolidge cemetery, where President and Mrs. Coolidge visited last summer. The theatre was named for the family related to that of the President, which first settled on the site of the picture house. The Coolidge is a new link in the chain of the Atlantic Theatres' Corporation. Benjamin H. Green, president, is managing director, assisted by Edwin M. Dangel, general counsel for Atlantic Theatres and the Coolidge Operating Company.

The theatre is a large brick building. The large foyer is of panelled walnut and the floors are covered with Oriental rugs. The auditorium seats 1200 on one floor. There is no balcony.

The stage is large and has purple velvet curtains with purple satin inside curtains. A large Robert-Morton organ is played by Miss Adelaide Yahraus.

Long Island Will Have a "Best Equipped" For Sure

WHILE THEY are talking about the big things they're doing in the "key cities" our little old Long Island wants to stand up and shout that although Jamaica isn't called a "key" among the Big Leaguers, it's a pretty big proposition on a mighty big island.

And to let the world know this, Jamaica has pulled itself together and said to Eugene De Rosa, of New York—"Design us a theatre that will be the biggest and best equipped on Long Island."

Of course De Rosa knows how to do that. Then the Glen Cove Construction Co. started work—and when it's ready Jamaica can be proud of its theatre.

China Supplies Motif of New St. Louis "Bandbox"

SAINT LOUIS is going to have a little peek at Chinese architectural motifs when Henri Chouteau completes his Band Box Theatre, which will be erected just east of the Liberty Music Hall on Delmar Boulevard.

Mr. Chouteau owns the Liberty, Odeon Theatre building and the International Life building; he is a member of the Legislature. And—besides, he is a booster for his city. He proposes to give it, in the and Box, a novel architectural motif as well as a theatre equipped for real patronage building.

The "Forbidden Palace" near Pekin, China, furnishes the basis for the style in which architect H. W. Kirchner is planning. A Chinese restaurant on the second floor will add a touch of the Orient in its investiture and menu.

F. B. O. Prints "Safetied"

Out in the Kansas City neighborhood the exhibitors who get F. B. O. Service can be glad when an F. B. O. shipment comes in—because Tom McKean, manager of the exchange in question has installed a new renovating machine that is already showing wonderful results in providing clear, clean film. That's Protect-the-Print stuff. Good boy, Mack.
